Both Solley and we admit that this picture is a little old for even subsequent runs, but it hadn't played Bastrop and there may be other towns where it has yet to make its appearance. In this case, the accompanying illustration may prove an inspiraiton to some other member who is casting about for an idea for an attractive front.

Morrow Promotes A Good Single Page For "Smart Money"

The "Smart Money" ads, predicted on account of the very adaptable title for the present buyers' market, are beginning to come in. One of the first to be brought to our attention is a full page put over by Floyd Morrow, manager of Warner's La Roy Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, and we are reproducing a copy of it on this page so you can see how he worked it out.

It is another good example of this costless advertising you've been hearing so much about these days, costless with the exception of a handful of guest tickets. You will note that about a dozen different merchants are represented and that they are all offering three pair of tickets for the three best slogans presented to them concerning their store, also using the two words, "Smart Money." The rules permit the contestant to submit slogans to as many merchants as desired, originality and neatness being stressed. The merchant acted as judge and the winner's name was displayed in the store window. Note also that the theatre received a fine display of its part of the ad in a large two line streamer head, and at the top centre portion.

It's been some little time since we've received information concerning Morrow's activities, but we can see that he hasn't lost the knack of promotiong a co-op. As mentioned before, we'll expect to see a lot of these ads on this picture because of the fact that the title appears to be a natural to get attention from the merchants. And we thoroughly believe that the average merchant will see the advantage of falling in line.

Stribling Builds His Mailing List With Calendar Gag

A calendar gag has proven a very effective means of securing new names for the mailing list of J. E. Stribling, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. We are sorry that a sample of it cannot be reproduced along with this story but the make-up is such that the very points we'd like to bring out would not show to good advantage. However, we'll do our best to give a description of it.

The card measures 14 x 11 and is headed with name of theatre, telephone number, admission prices, etc. The blank squares carry ads of five merchants, stating that this ticket and one paid admission will admit one other adult to the theatre any Tuesday or Friday during the month. The balance of the days are devoted to picture titles and playdates, each carrying a catch line. They are printed on manila tag in two colors and the price to Stribling is $5.50 per M, the ads paying all cost.

Each month the calendars are house-to-house delivered by boys who explain to the prospective patron how the scheme works. He also tells the lady that the Rialto Theatre will 'phone her some time during the month and ask if she knows what picture is playing that day. A correct answer will rate a free pass. Naturally it behooves the lady of the house to keep the card in a prominent place which, of course, means that it will be closely observed from time to time.

The constant building of a mailing list is something which concerns every manager and while J. E. admits that there's nothing new about this method, except for a little twist given it here and there, we're passing it along for others to try as per his wishes. It will cost nothing to put into effect except a small amount of time spent in lining up a few advertisers to cover cost of card and printing.

BATHING REVUE AND FASHION SHOW!

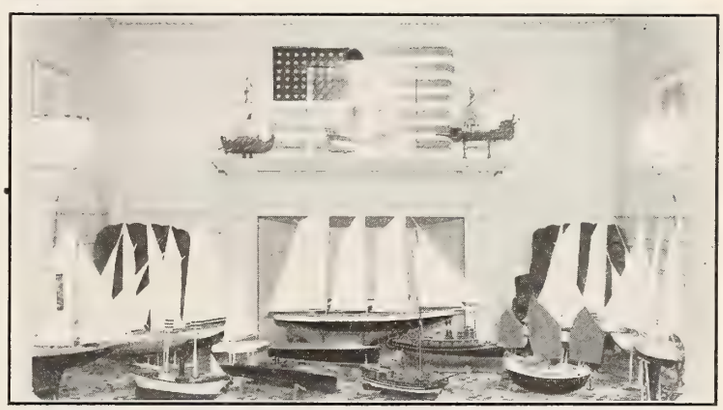
It is not too late in the summer to promote an interesting and profitable bathing show for your theatre. In fact, several of the members here in the East, located close to bathing beaches, are just getting set for a big bathing event the latter part of August.

There are so many slants to the bathing beauty revue and fashion show that it should hardly be necessary to go into details at this time. But we suggest that you frame yours to suit local conditions, and if you have never pulled one before you may get the surprise of your life to see the box office reaction.

Watch the Club pages for information about this great business booster, but don't wait for the season to end before you give it real serious consideration.

Russell Terhune's Lobby Display Of Boat Wins Praise

Learning that the local Y. M. C. A. was sponsoring a miniature boat regatta, Russell Terhune, manager of the Strand Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., arranged for the winning models, as well as the runner-ups, to be displayed in the lobby for a period of one week. This novel display not only attracted a lot of attention from the public but was also instrumental in getting him some nice publicity breaks in the local newspaper. A wealthy resident of the town added to the effectiveness of the display by donating a collection of rare specimens of craft from all over the world.



We fully realize that such a wide range of boat models cannot be obtained in all communities but there's generally some kind of an assortment available in every man's territory. Terhune is one of "Bunny" Bryan's boys down in south Jersey territory, and as both Nat Mintz and F. W. Kislingbury, respectively, with the Oxford and Paramount theatres in Plainfield, are right on his toes he has to keep stepping to turn out something different.

Binnard Enhances His Ads With Use of Monotype Border

What can be done on newspaper ads in the smaller cities where certain facilities in the engraving art are lacking is strikingly shown in a treatment given "Front Page" when this picture was played by A. B. Binnard, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho. The same would be reproduced along with this story only for the fact that its dimensions are such that limitations of our make-up stand in the way.

But what we want to bring out more than any other point is the fact that the appearance of this ad is greatly enhanced through he use of some fancy and plain rule borders which this manager had cast in his local newspaper composing room on monotype. These and the skillful placing of stock mats serve to make up what we think to be a very attractive display and due credit is bestowed.

This is a good tip to every manager who hasn't every facility in the printing line at his disposal and a little conference with the composing room foreman will be the means of bringing about a better understanding with him and at the same time may produce more striking displays for your copy. We're glad to hear that Binnard's old "front man," Ed Schmadeka, is opening a house of his own in Lapwai and wish him all the success in the world. Give him our best regards next time you see him.

COURTESIES COME HOME TO ROOST!

The Editor of the North Sacramento Journal in the next to the lead editorial in a recent issue comments under the head, "Thanks To An Unknown Friend," as follows:

"The Editor desires to take this means of thanking his Unknown Friend for a favor shown last Wednesday night.

"While seated in the Del Paso Theatre, enjoying the picture, a young man came over and asked if he was aware he had left his lights burning in his car, parked outside. The information was very welcome, but the courtesy was still more so.

"That young gentleman—and we use the word advisedly—had seen the headlights burning, taken the trouble to find out whose car it was, and then continued his search until he found The Editor.

"In the dim light, he got away before he could be recognized and given the proper appreciation, so he is here given recognition.

"This event reminds us that in North Sacramento are a surprising number of people who have that true regard for the needs of their fellows that makes a city prosperous and elevates themselves in character and inevitably in other successes, for one can not be thoughtful for others without it coming back again, 'full measure, pressed down and running over.'

"We congratulate this city on having so many of what might be termed 'Unknown Friends.'"

What a break in one of the most coveted sections of a newspaper!

The manager of the Del Paso is Charles J. Holtz, a well known member of this Club. The usher's name is unknown but we take this occasion to pass along the deserved credits—to Holtz, whose capable training prompted the usher to do his bit—to the usher, whose sense of duty to the house and manager led him to follow rules which will undoubtedly some day result in the management of a house of his own.

Laurence Revives Local Movie Stunt For Capacity Trade

It's been such a long time since that old racket of promoting local movies has been pulled that a revival of the scheme would appear to be practical for certain localities, according to a letter on this same subject from H. L. Laurence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn. It is, at any rate, worthy of serious consideration from anyone who is thoroughly conversant with the conditions peculiar to his community, particularly when we state that the stunt, in addition to widely publicizing the house, netted a three-days S. R. O. business.

For the above campaign cooperation was sought from the daily newspaper, civic clubs, city and county officials and the heads of industrial plants. Eight days before the cameraman and director came to town the paper carried front page stories of the event and on their arrival it was arranged for the Mayor and many prominent citizens to meet them at a reception held in the public square. Pictures were taken of the Mayor handing over the City Key and the local band of 40 pieces was promoted to lend color to the occasion. As a highlight of this advance publicity, the band headed a parade of bannered cars through all main thoroughfares of the city.

A cast was made up of city officials, society members and other well known people about town and included a Minister of a local church, the City Attorney, Mayor, Sheriff, a railroad official, an executive from each industrial plant and prominent members of fraternal organizations. Incorporated in the picture were scenes taken in and around industrial plants, all points of interest in the county and city; in fact, everything worthwhile in the community was included in about 2,000 feet of film. Naturally, there was "love interest," etc., and this was supplied by the society members of the cast.

Advertising was confined to newspaper publicity, country billing and as an extra inducement it was announced that certain scenes would be taken on the stage.

You can see for yourselves that this campaign was handled far more delicately than the old stunt of several years ago. Then, it was more or less customary for a regular operating company to enter a town with no other thought than putting the scheme on a strictly commercial basis. Prominent people were approached with the idea of having their sons or daughters appear in the stellar roles for the consideration of a certain sum of money and more often than not the whole affair climaxed with a lot of ill feeling and jealousy on the part of all concerned. But the boys went out of town with a bag-full of good local money. In these days, it is not at all difficult to secure the services of a cameraman and a director who know enough to get by with a stunt of this sort. A world of local good will can also be accomplished by taking certain scenes in front of certain stores, etc., thus bringing a broad smile to these merchants when they view the film, particularly when the theatres is back of the movement. Of course, it will not be practical for every theatre to indulge in the promotion of a movie, but where it is permissible we believe Laurence's experience will prove most helpful to any who may wish to try it out.

Duel Takes Active Advantage of Local Interest In Player

The name of the heroine in "Trader Horn," Edwina Booth, was a natural for a play up of local interest because of the fact that she was a local girl. When this picture was shown by S. A. Duel, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Provo, Utah.

The newspapers printed advance stories tying in with a semi-serial story that had been run covering Edwina Booth's life and indorsement from the Mayor, the director of dramatics at the university and the Stake President at the Mormon Church were run in the theatre ad on Wednesday, previous to the picture's Sunday opening. These indorsements were secured after these men had seen the picture at a special preview.

Deuel had a boy on the street with a placard and also at the stadium where there were hundreds of out-of-town people attending a track meet. 3,000 heralds were also used to cover the town as well as being placed in cars parked near the stadium. Announcements were also made by an orchestra leader at a prominent dance at which many of the socially prominent people were present. These announcements alluded to the picture, cast, theatre and playdates.

When playing "Skippy" he promoted a tie-up with a local merchant that reacted in lots of publicity. The merchant gave away a washsuit to the boy who came closest to the measurements of "Skippy." In addition, the store played up the stunt in their regular ads and had one of their windows dressed with ready-to-wear suits and avertising matter on the picture.

Duell also addressed a school principals' meeting at which the Superintendent of Schools personally recommended the picture for the kiddies to see. Announcements about the picture were made at all schools and mimeograph copies of the story were given to every child in the schools.

We'll have to admit that it's a great break for a manager to have his town claim any heroine for its own and it's good news to know that Duell took full advantage of public interest in this fact, even though it's not a tip that we can pass along for general use. However, his activities on "Skippy" are such that can be used by any member looking for ideas for this picture.

Mahon On The Job At Strand Theatre In Prince Albert

The Club is in receipt of a letter from P. W. Mahon, manager of the Strand Theatre, Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, Canada, in which he encloses snap-shots of an exterior and interior view of his house and a sample of the way he handles newspaper advertising in his town. We are reproducing the photo of the Strand's front, but the interior show is too faint to be clearly shown. From what we can see, however, the theatre foyer is most attractive and we are sorry that it cannot be reproduced. The ad on "Kiki" will be used along with a collection we are making of ads from several sections of the States and Canada and will be published in an early issue. These are always interesting and we hope that Mahon will continue to forward samples of his work.

Bair's Newspaper Advertising Has Many Novel Twists

The advertising created by E. E. Bair, manager of the State and American Theatres, East Liverpool, Ohio, is always interesting to us and we are led to conclude that other samples of his work published from time to time have won the approval of many other members of this Club; hence, any time we have the opportunity of helping ourself to further evidence of his work we're very likely to do so for the reason of the novel twists presented.

In the assortment of ads in the accompanying cut note the varied appeal of theatre to public. In one of the large displays note the well arranged copy and cut layout and the space devoted to short subjects, etc.; also, that both of the larger displays have captions at top and that the style of type is varied from bold face to italics. We would also call attention to the fact that fraternal organization conventions are not overlooked and, likewise, the box devoted to a Legion Rally, with the names of theatres appearing in a mild but effective way at bottom of ad. Then there is the box captioned, "Says Louis Stone" which carries no message other than the star's personal endorsement.

The foregoing will serve, we believe, to point out the diversified effort being made by this manager to keep the names of his theatres before his public and to our way of thinking the real value of this method lies in the fact that these changes break up a monotony caused by the constant feeding of the same sort of material.

A manila paper umbrella cover that Bair is using these days is also going over in great style. It's an ordinary, long cone shaped cover that is dispensed to patrons who come into the lobby on rainy days with wet umbrellas and it has gone a long way to overcome the discomfort and annoyance of trying to dispose of one alongside a theatre seat, or searching for a receptacle.

John Goodno Ties With Telegraph Co. As Plug For Film

The campaign put over on "Chances" by John Goodno, manager of the Palace Theatre in Huntington, Va., consisted of several tie-ups and stunts which, netted the house the biggest business on opening day it had ever known.

His first tie-up was with the Postal Telegraph Company, which made a 15 foot enlargement of a wire of congratulations sent the theatre by Fairbanks Jr., from Hollywood. Attention was called to the fact that the picture was his first starring vehicle, that he hoped his local friends would like it and concluded by wishing the theatre luck. One sheet enlargements of the telegram were also made and posted throughout the city.

Other effort included a tie-up with local merchants for a double truck in the two newspapers, announcing the showing; the building of an armored motor car, appropriately bannered for a tour through the country surrounding Huntington and a publicity break by reason that the recent Ford Reliability Tour was scheduled to pass through the city at the time. Many visitors crowded the town and Goodno with his big staff caused them to feel that the picture, on account of its title, was a part of the celebration.

Goodno was personally sold on this picture and after screening seized upon the above angles to sell it. So if it can be possible these days that there is a manager who still runs them blindly this is just a tip off from this manager that many a good selling slant can be gained by spending the necessary time for a preview.

Burt Coughlan Can Dress A Marquee So It Brings Them In

Believing that his theatre front and marquee are one of the best advertisers a theatre has, Burt Coughlan, manager of the Peoples' Theatre, Maynard, Mass., is a strong advocate of this means of attracting public interest. He does all the dressing himself and as the photo on this page will show has become quite adept in the art of placing cut-outs so that they will catch the eye in a compelling manner. This was used in connection with the showing of "Women of All Nations."

Other evidence of Coughlan's stunts brought to our attention include a street bally on "Skippy," whereby he gathered a bunch of kids, one dressed ala Skippy, for a parade with banners announcing that the picture was in town; and a lobby display of "Secret Six," with a big cut-out of Beery directly in front of the box office, a portion being cut out for the cashier's window.

At the top we are presenting a reproduced snapshot of Burt himself, with a hope that the winter setting will lend optimism to the fact that cool weather will come again. It is to be further hoped that his coonskin coat will not produce the reverse effect these hot August days. Other samples of his marquee dressing will appear in future issues.

Coughlan's Effective Use of Cutouts

Kiddie Safety Gag Of Walter Murphy's Creates Good Will

We can see that our old friend and fellow Club member, Walt Murphy, manager of the Roky Theatre, is still on the job of looking after the safety of his neighborhood kids.

Three days in advance of the last Fourth of July he stated through an ad in local newspapers: "Parents, Have Your Children Spend a Safe and Sane 4th of July—Send Your Kiddies to The Roky—Free Kiddie Show (Morning)." The little snapshot we are reproducing doesn't half do credit to the number of boys that took advantage of this offer but Walt did manage to get a focus on a few of them. Police and firemen, with whom this manager stands in very high estimation, cooperated freely in an effort to make the party a success.

The above is another example of community goodwill constantly being sought by this manager. You will recall that not very long ago he secured a lot of free publicity through staging a benefit performance for the widow of a local fireman who lost his life fighting a blaze. Continue the good work Murphy.

When W. E. Banford, manager of the Cecil Theatre, Mason City, Iowa, played "Trader Horn," he devised an atmospheric front that greatly helped put this picture over in a big way. Note the jungle scenes on the compo board and the huge letters of title on either side of entrance to lobby.

Cutouts Of Rogers' Costumes Effective For A. S. Goldsmith

Concluding that the unusual costumes worn by Will Rogers in the "Connecticut Yankee" would attract considerable attention if presented by the use of cut-outs, A. S. Goldsmith, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., made up several effective ones for display in two vacant stores on the principal streets of his town.

Additional tie-ups included the placing of a three-sheet of Rogers in a local furniture store, with a display of radios around the cut-out; use of the public library for distribution of heralds and one-sheet cards, with an assortment of Mark Twain books, and tie-ups with three book stores for display of one-sheet cards, with stills and copy.

In connection with "Last Parade" he arranged for the house-to-house distribution of 3,000 newspaper tab heralds and also effected a tie-up with a local laundry to insert the tab in all packages. The two vacant stores referred to above were also used to sell this picture and in addition, 15 other merchants gave him window space. Another plug was given this picture through publicity obtained from issuing an invitation to the Superintendent and staff of the local reformatory.

It appears that this Club member is very much on the job with his local merchants and we hope that he will keep up the good work. We also note that he is running Amateur Performances each Saturday night with a satisfactory response and we are passing this along with his other suggestions. Keep us informed, A. S., on all future activities.

Landers Using Many Worthwhile Stunts To Sell The Aztec

It's been some little time since we've had a line on the activities of Jim Landers, manager of the well known Aztec Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, and those of his able director of publicity, V. D. Welher, but that doesn't mean that this pair of live wires haven't been on the job. Quite the contrary, we'll say, after discovering some detail connected with a number of corking selling ideas they've been working out in their city. There are so many fine stunts among the collection that we don't know where to begin so we'll just take them in order.

An old idea revamped to 1931 lines was the organizing of the Aztec Big Brother Club. There's an "Uncle Bob" on the local radio station staff, the radio station was sold on the idea and installed mikes in the theatre, and the result was the inauguration of once-a-week try-outs for the youngsters who entertain the following Saturday. "Uncle Bob" and Vernon Guyer, the organist, serve as M. C.'s, radio announcer and accompanist for the club matinees, which provide about thirty minutes devoted to kid talent. It is handled on a competitive basis for cash and pass prizes and an award for attendance. Two prizes, promoted from local merchants, are awarded the boys, and a like number to the girls. They are displayed for a week in advance in the lobby and the dealer is given a card credit. Numbered tickets are given the youngsters for the attendance awards.

When the kids enter the theatre they are handed an all-day sucker, paper wrapper removed to prevent littering up the floor, and each Saturday they are permitted to choose an extra feature from list of available prints that have already had a local showing. It is interesting to note that "Return of Dr. Fu Manchu" was one of the first pictures chosen, as it was about a year ago when a similar privilege was extended during the running of a charity affair.

Guest's Comment on this Week's Program!

It is the desire of the Aztec management not only to give you the best in motion pictures, but also the kind of pictures YOU like best!

We appreciate your comments on our programs, and for that reason we will pick 10 of these cards at random every Friday night and will mail a guest ticket for next week's program to the person signing the card! The guest tickets will be mailed without regard as to whether you did or did not enjoy this week's program.

The Aztec also has a tie-up with a nearby garage whereby free parking privileges are extended to patrons. This arrangement secures a 35 cent parking at a cost of 10 cents to the theatre. At present the house is paying for the parking of 200 cars per week and by actual count the house averages 3 paid admissions for each car parked. The parking situation in San Antone is a problem and this stunt undoubtedly sways many customers to the Aztec, over other first run houses within a couple blocks of each other.

Another stunt, in operation since the beginning of last summer, is the operation of a mezzanine tea room where coffee, iced tea, cakes and sandwiches are served free of charge by the theatre matron from 2 to 5 each afternoon. Everything except the ice is promoted from local merchants. Reservations may also be made for bridge parties, all accessories being furnished by the theatre, and at present the average is four parties a week.

Two other stunts employed by the Aztec management include a tie-up with local merchants to extend matinee prices until 6:30 in order that employees may get a break, and the holding of screen-

Local Popularity Gag Garners Free Space For Munroe

A popularity contest to decide what local girl would be "Miss Gettysburg" brought a lot of publicity and a sell-out on the clasing day for R. C. Munroe, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Gettysburg, Pa.

The contest was started in June and had the endorsement of the local Chamber of Commerce and the newspaper. The boost to the theatre was obtained through the sale of tickets, each one good for a certain number of votes and the reward was a trip to Miami, Fla., with all expenses paid. A transportation company was successfully contacted to supply the free ticket and a Miami hotel agreed to donate the necessary accommodations. These were secured through the promise of a regular screen ad. As the contest progressed the standings of the contestants were posted in the lobby.

A special program was arranged on dedication night, for which a local orchestra was promoted, and the opening number consisted of a parade by the Boys' Band around the theatre and up and down the aisles. The Mayor officiated in the bestowal of the title. When the winner left the city she was escorted to the depot by several state policemen on motorcycles.

Considerable color was lent to the above stunt through Gettysburg being a historical town and Munroe is passing the idea along to other members who are located in cities of like classifications. The whole publicity scheme did not cost the house anything, as you will note from the promotional ideas outlined in the preceding paragraphs, and it resulted in a world of valuable publicity and box office returns.

Protection Cards Sold "Secret Six" For William Winch

Excellent advance publicity for "Secret Six" was secured by William Winch, manager of the Fair Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, through posting burglar protection cards on store doors and windows as part of an advance campaign on this picture.

These placards carried copy reading, "Burglars Beware! This Store Is Protected By The Secret Six—Six Fearless Men, Sworn To Blot Out Gangsters, Racketeers and Crooks."

Inasmuch as these signs were posted well in advance of opening, title publicity was gotten over very nicely and it neatly tied-in with newspaper copy that appeared a bit later.

The above is the first contribution we've had from this new member of the Club and we will hope to receive further accounts about how shows are sold in his town. Shoot them in, Bill, so your fellow members will know what you are doing down in Texas.

LANDERS ACTIVE AT AZTEC

In the former tie, permission is granted by the merchants to place a 14 x 14 changeable card over time clocks in over 25 stores and identification cards are issued to all employees.

A good gag in connection with the special screenings is the stopping of the picture, when blanks are passed out to the audience requesting opinions as to the outcome of the picture. Guest tickets are offered for best solutions. Invitations to these screenings are also often handed out to clerks, barbers, elevator operators and persons similarly employed, for the reason that they are generally great talkers and consequently become a regular walking 24 sheet.

Still another gag that makes patrons feel that they have a part in shaping the booking policy of the theatre is the distribution of a "Guest's Comment Card," inviting them to state whether or not they liked last week's program. Ten of these cards are picked at random each week and the writers receive a guest ticket for the following week's program. Naturally, booking cannot be adjusted to suit all tastes to any great degree but the gag gives an insight to patrons' likes and dislikes and makes them feel as though the management had their interests at heart. We're reproducing a copy of the questionnaire for any member who may wish to put this plan into effect.

They are also going in quite heavy these days for give-aways of electric refrigerators, cedar chests, radios, phonographs, bicycles, etc., and cooperative advertising space is insistently asked for the placing of heralds and displays in the merchants' stores. Good response is also received from blotters bearing shorthand copy distributed to office girls, guest tickets being offered for the best transcriptions. Numbered heralds are also being distributed by street car men, with guest tickets as awards.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY!

To succeed in business you must learn how to deal with human beings. It is not only that which is within you that gives success, but that which is in others—and you must learn to understand it and, so far as you need it, you must learn to get it.

Business success is the art of persuasion, the art of making friends, the art of producing a good impression.

These arts you must learn.

Three-In-One Foyer Display by Stowell Attracts Attention

A novel and attractive foyer display, featuring three different subjects, was recently constructed by Harry C. Stowell, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Middletown, N. Y., for the advance plugging on "Trader," "Strangers May Kiss" and an "Our Gang" comedy.

At the left of the accompanying photo, note the large cutout of the lion atop the "Trader" display. A large, green glass eye (painted green) back of which was placed a light with blinker attachment, was placed in the lion's head and greatly added to the effectiveness of this section. During the run of the picture this cutout was placed atop the marquee and the light attached to the regular flasher. At the extreme right, between the pianoplayer and her instrument, is the cutout on the Norma Shearer picture. Miniature "Our Gang" stars, placed all around the outskirts of the entire setting, produced the plug for the comedy.

The above is certainly getting over an advance plug for a whole program, in our estimation, and we believe that it can be heartily recommended for use in a foyer where it isn't necessary to flash a direct and brief message. Once inside the theatre, the patron has time enough to be attracted by an artistically arranged display and is in a position to digest all which the set is intended to convey.

Scholer Ties With Several Merchants For A Beauty Revue

A bathing beauty contest was staged during the four-day run of "Lover Come Back' by J. J. Scholer, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., with the cooperation of a local merchant which greatly added to the successful showings of this picture at very small outlay to the house.

Scholer tied in with a local haberdasher, who sponsored the revuee with a dancing instructor and proprietor of dancing school staging it. The haberdasher furnished 15 bathing suits and presented each one in cast with one of these suits gratis. He also furnished 5,000 co-operative heralds; dressed a full window with display and co-operative copy as well as making special displays inside store. He gave a special display with special cut-outs for the foyer, it being a miniature bathing beach scene with wax models dressed in Catalina bathing suits. He also placed co-operative newspaper ads in the local papers.

The revue was staged with special gags and original songs and had a special beach drop. The entire cost of the revue to the theatre was just $2.50, which paid the cost of a 60-foot banner on the side wall of theatre.

This is the season of the year to put over stunts of this kind and we like Scholer's idea of rounding out the bathing beauty show with a revue, special gags and local merchant tie-ups.

WILLIAM A. WARD, JR., manages the Clinton Theatre in Clinton, Conn., and here's another New Englander to become a member of the Round Table Club. How's business up in Clinton and what's doing, Bill? There's many a member of this Club up in your territory regularly contributing to these columns and we are going to look forward to your version of what it takes to put shows over.

WM. G. SERRAD is the manager of the Kittanning Theatre Company, Kittanning, Pa., and with receipt of his application for membership we add his name to the big army of Round Tablers already listed in Pennsylvania. What was that last live-wire stunt you put over, W. G.? Your brother showmen want to know all about it so let's hear from you the first opportunity you have to jot down the details.

Here's the Blank

CHARLES W. GRISWOLD is at the helm of the big 6,200 seat Roxy Theatre, New York City, the house known all over the world as "The Cathedral of the Motion Picture." We are aware that operation of this great theatre plant requires unceasing attention and a large part of Griswold's time but it is a sincere hope on our part that he will be able to contribute some articles on how shows are exploited at the big house. Many managers outside are under the impression that those in charge of the de luxe Broadway theatres pay scant heed to exploiting a picture. You tell 'em, Charley, how it's done. And by the way, we can use one of your photos to dress up that story.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE MACKENNA is the manager of the Lafayette Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. Meet the rest of the gang, George, and remember that all of your brother showmen will expect to be informed about what you are doing in your neck of the woods. Many a good show tip has originated from your town and we'll be looking forward to your first contribution to these pages. Shoot along a story and we'll do the rest. And a photo of yourself, if you can spare one.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

THEODORE R. MACE is at the helm of the Princess Theatre in Morganville, Ky., and now he's listed among the Blue Grass contingent of this Club. There's a lot of showmen in his state, who can step as fast as some of those famous horses and we'll look forward with interest to publishing accounts of this new member's efforts along show-selling lines. Send along a photo, T. R., and we'll use it to introduce you to the rest of the gang.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD ALDINGER is the manager of the Columbus Theatre, Columbus, Neb., and this Publix manager is hereby elected a member of this organization. The Club is indebted to your organization, Harold, for a wealth of good show tips and we're glad to include your name on a list that continues to grow each week. Shoot along some examples of your work out in Columbus and we'll do the rest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. G. McGEE has the job of managing the Boulevard Theatre in Brookline, Pa., and we take this opportunity to extend the Club welcome to this new member from a state in which Round Tablers are strongly represented. Keep up the standards set by your fellow members in Pennsylvania, J. G., and let us hear from you regularly about what kind of showmanship you are using in Brookline. And send along a photo of your self if you have one to spare.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD J. MURPHY has charge of Fox Theatres in Olympia, Wash., and his name is a familiar one to all showmen in the Northwest. It is a pleasure to introduce this new Club member to his host of brother managers and it goes without saying that his contributions to these pages will be beneficial to all. You've been in Olympia long enough, Harold, to have a lot of good stunts up your sleeves. So shoot them along and we'll let the rest of the boys know what you are doing.

WALTER KOFELDT is at the helm of the Fox-Arlington Theatre in Santa Barbara, Calif., and is well known among showmen on the West Coast. They do things in a big way out in Santa Barbara when they open a new house and if you don't think so you just ought to have a look at the section the morning paper devoted to the dedication of the Arlington when it opened last May. We'll tell you more about Walter's activities in future issues and in the meantime his fellow members wish him all kinds of success.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EARL OTTO KNOBLAUCH is the house manager of the Boone Theatre, Kansas City, and it seems to us that K. C. must be just about one hundred per cent Round Table with receipt of Earl's application for membership. Earl is now a full fledged member of this Club and we'll soon hope to present some samples of what he's doing to promote shows at the Boone. And next time you write, Earl, why not send the Club your photo?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAY McLAIN manages the Regent and Strand Theatres, in Newton, Kansas, and a cordial welcome is extended this new member from the West. Although he has to look after the management of two houses we feel sure that he'll find the time to acquaint his brother Club members with what he's doing to put shows over the top in his town. You shoot in the ideas, Ray, and we'll do the rest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. L. STEPHENSON has the job of assisting L. Miller in the management of the Ashland Theatre in Kansas City, Mo. He's been in the game for about three years, having been promoted to his present position from the service staff. Ever since the Round Table was inaugurated Stephenson has been reading articles that have appeared in these pages and now he wants to become an active member of this Club. He has helped Miller at various theatres in K. C. and the first thing you know you'll run across an announcement that he's managing a house of his own.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY CLIFFORD hails from the Bronx, New York City, where he manages the Arcadia Theatre and we are taking this opportunity to introduce this new member to his brother Club members. What's doing up in his neck of the woods along showselling lines we'll expect him to outline in his next communication. Then we'll let you all know what it takes to coax these Bronx patrons inside a theatre. So do not forget, Harry, and also shoot along a photo so we can show the others what kind of a fellow you are.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ED J. HAAS is located out in Hutchinson, Kansas, where he is kept on the jump managing the New Fox, the Midland, Strand and Royal theatres, all links in the Fox circuit. His name is a familiar one in theatre circles and it is a pleasure to extend the Club welcome to this new member. In his spare time he promises to contribute show-selling yarns for the benefit of his fellow members and we'll be looking forward to his next letter. And why not a photo, Ed, when you write?

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

A PREDICTION

IN 1914 Eastman announced the first panchromatic motion picture negative film. It swept the country... In March, 1931, Eastman announced the first stable ultra-speed panchromatic—Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative, Type 2...It is predicted that just as color-sensitive film has practically replaced color-blind material, so the new Eastman Super-sensitive will make slower emulsions virtually obsolete...Naturally the producers and camera men who are adopting this remarkable film now will reap the greatest advantage... MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 104, No. 8 August 22, 1931

It Is the Bunk!

THE astute Dr. Walter Boughton Pitkin of Columbia University and Dover, New Jersey, who sometimes writes about the motion picture, is looping the loop again in his orbis scientiarum. This time the eruption is what passes for an article but is really a publicity gesture of that erudite periodical known, to a few, as the Outlook and Independent. The outgiving is entitled "Screen Crime vs. Press Crime," and purports to show that "an underworld picture of a given event exerts perhaps 150,000,000 times as strong an influence upon those who see it as the printed account of the very same event exerts upon those who read it. And it may be that, when we can measure psychic intensities and their effects more precisely, we shall find that the picture version is even 1,000,000,000 times more effective than the printed, taking into account all the millions who see each form. . . ."

Dr. Pitkin does not, however, advocate censorship and he thinks also that parents who might well guard their children "are a flabby pack of muddleheaded, somewhat cowardly folk who cannot and will not run their homes any better than they run their cities." So he feels "the Silver Screen will go on breeding Yellow Dogs."

This facile writer opens his semi-scientific diatribe with a text on Two-Gun Crowley as a victim of the gang film's power of suggestion, ignoring quite that investigations have proved that the famous Crowley letter cited was garbled and the reference to pictures inserted by some reporter or rewrite man somewhere between the police station and page one of the New York Times, America's greatest newspaper and incidentally the world's champion at the journalistic game of "picking on the pictures." The Times made a somewhat lukewarm and evasive intimation of a correction when presented with a photostat of the original Crowley document, which certainly contained no motion picture reference, but that correction, as always with corrections, did not overtake the poison spread to the world by the original fake. The editorial page of MOTION PICTURE HERALD of May 16 presents photographic reproductions of the documents in point.

Dr. Pitkin is of considerable fame in widely divergent fields. He has sojourned in Europe as an investigator of the authenticity of works of literature and art for the greatest American collector. He has made a mark in the world of science as an experimental psychologist, working here and at the great German universities. He has taught the writing of short stories and is a professor in the School of Journalism at Columbia University. He is the author of some highly successful fiction, several books of fact, and a shelf of text books. But he is a merry pessimist, as evidenced by his "Twilight of the American Mind." He just will write, whether he ought to or not, and ever with the most supreme statistical data. He makes his own statistics, and, since his experience as a story editor for Universal, he has a new deftness with motion picture figures and billions.

One publication, however, The Chicago Journal of Commerce, appears to see quite a distance into the matter, as evidenced by an editorial in which it comments: "He (Dr. Pitkin) has written an article from which newspapers will happily quote. He has insured newspaper publicity for the magazine which sends copies of his article to the newspapers. If the article had blamed the newspapers for encouraging crime, the magazine would not have received the publicity which it needs in its business."

The motion picture is being used as a scapegoat for criminals, as a text for the careers of reformers who are tired of the prohibition issue, as a reason for the existence of a whole flock of censors, self and state appointed, as something to write about by people who are looking for a message, but the great American public is interested in it solely as an amusement. The rest do not matter.

Mr. Sherwood and The Code

AN extraordinary appreciation of the Production Code and the labors of Colonel Jason S. Joy of the Hollywood office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America is expressed by the vigorous Mr. Robert E. Sherwood in a Bell Syndicate article appearing in the New York Evening Post, and elsewhere. It seems that Mr. Sherwood, who has been none too friendly to the Code idea, has been doing some first hand observing. This has resulted in a warm appraisal of Colonel Joy and his work, including these lines:

"Nevertheless, he has managed to retain a grip on his sanity—and, what is more miraculous, he has gained the esteem of the movie people whose works he must inspect and with whom he must incessantly argue. Having talked with him, and been given a faint idea of the incredible nature of his duties, I feel sorry for the mean things I have said concerning the Hays Moral Code, though not for anything that I may ever have said about censorship."

It Looks Better Now

RECENTLY Quigley Publications used their own advertising space to solemnly announce that "the world is not coming to an end," in connection with a discussion of the outlook of the "Gloom Committee." Interesting evidences in support of that optimism are offered this week in the pages of two important MOTION PICTURE HERALD departments, MANAGERS ROUND TABLE CLUB and THEATRE RECEIPTS. The Round Table reflects the aggressive assurance of the capable showmen out on the firing line of the industry, where the whole creative effort of the industry goes into the box office crucible to be transmuted into gold. These managers are obviously not members of the Gloom Committee. Meanwhile the box office figures from the key cities are proving with a merry upturn that the American public still can and will buy entertainment. The public has been that way several thousand years—long enough to make the habit a safe asset.

VATICAN PAPER FOR CODE

The motion picture industry of America in its endeavors toward a product calculated to be of value as a social and moral force comes in for extraordinary attention and appreciation in a special article appearing in a recent issue of L'Osservatore Romano, the newspaper of the Vatican State.

This recognition of the American motion picture is the more significant because of the unique status and world importance of the publication in which the article appears. L'Osservatore Romano is known as the semi-official organ of the Vatican. It is the property of the Holy See, in substance owned and operated by the Pope. Its utterances, however, are specifically not to be held official, unless they are so designated. The paper is a daily, issued every day but Monday, which would entail Sunday labor. Its circulation, while not numerically large, as measured by the figures of lay publications, is exceedingly important and world wide among churchmen and the leaders and students of social and religious thought.

The special aspect of the motion picture which brings the attention of L'Osservatore Romano is the production code adopted by the members of The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., which is discussed as a social and moral document. During its first year of application, "even though the record has not been perfect, there has taken place in America a noticeable improvement in conditions affecting the production of new films."

An attitude of decided friendliness to the purposes, works and intent of the Code will be found expressed in the conclusion of the article, where it is observed: "It is necessary that those influencing public opinion, as well as the press, both the daily newspapers and the magazines, should make known this Code and should contribute, by means of their criticisms, toward having it supported and observed."

The motion picture can be well pleased with so important an expression of cooperative appreciation. All too rarely does it find in the high places of either church or state a realization that the screen is in truth a real part of the mechanism of society to be regarded as an element and instrument of progress. A translation of the article which appeared in the issue of July 27-28 follows.

TERRY RAMSAYE

There have been many attempts to reform and improve the motion picture, that very powerful, modern means of divulging information. Public officials, with laws and censors, private associations, moralists, sociologists and educators, with all sorts of publications, meetings, and proposals, have been involved in these attempts, but the results have been unsatisfactory.

Government censorship, practically in the hands of politicians, has proved unquestionably inefficient. Some progress has been made through the initiative of interested individuals not allied with politics, either by insistently calling the attention of the authorities to a stricter observance of the laws, or by dedicating themselves to the widespread use and support of good motion pictures. Out of all this, however, the conclusion is that very few really effective results have been obtained by the methods of censorship employed up to the present time.

Nevertheless, everyone is in accord in recognizing the need for efficient control of motion pictures. This need has been recognized by the motion picture producers in America. But what is the most efficient method of control?

Self-Censorship

The solution of this grave problem has come direct from the American motion picture producers themselves. These gentlemen have come to an agreement to establish an internal regulation of their industry, which agreement has been voluntarily accepted by the producers, without intervention or pressure on the part of outsiders. This is in the form of self-censorship which is not only more efficient, but more readily acceptable to all concerned.

And so, on the 31st of March, 1930, a "moral code for guidance in the production of motion pictures" was accepted and subscribed to by American producers. This formal recognition of a moral code by a large industry is definitely established, and, it may be said, is unique and fraught with good. The subscribers who engaged to observe the "Code" are members of the organization known as "The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.," whose main office is at 28 West 44th street, New York, and whose president is the Hon. Will H. Hays, former postmaster general of the United States.

The members of this organization are said to produce more than 95 per cent of the American motion pictures, and about 85 per cent of the entire world production.

Thus the importance and the great influence tending to the moral reform of motion pictures throughout the world is indicated. This code of self-censorship, formulated by the American producers, has in view two essential conditions: that the code be such as it should be with regard to morals, and that the producers observe it faithfully.

Moral Code

As concerns the first conditions, the code is actually in accord with the precepts of Christian morals. It is, therefore, also, in consonance with the natural law, confirmed and advanced, by Catholic doctrines. It has promptly found favor among Catholics. What is more important, it has met with the approval of two of the principal representatives of the hierarchy of the Catholic Church in the United States.

Cardinal Hayes, Archbishop of New York, in a letter dated July 25, 1930, directed to the editor of the weekly review "America," wrote: "I have heard nothing in a long while more encouraging and hopeful for the future moral wellbeing of the country than this action of self-censorship by those who control the motion picture world. The courage of those responsible for the Code, inspired as they are by an exalted love for the country's welfare, will translate this document into positive action and the realization of the noble idea behind it."

Cardinal Mundelein, Archbishop of Chicago, speaking with regard to the just criterion of the provisions of the Code said: "I am intimately acquainted with the Code and feel that it is liberal, fair, and yet morally sound. There is nothing in it which bars what any sane or decent man would want shown to his wife, his mother, or his children. Pictures made under the Code can be fine art, but they will be an art for the many, an art for the neighborhood, an art that is wholesome and sound. If pictures are made according to its rulings, a young person will be safe in seeing them."

In fact, the motion picture is ordinarily a form of diversion and entertainment, and not a pulpit, nor a seat of learning (although in its proper time, and place, it might even be that); therefore, the essential condition which it must meet is, at least, that of not prejudicing sound principles and good habits. The Code provides, among its main principles, that "no film shall lower the moral standards of the spectators. Consequently, crime, wrong-doing, and sin must be presented in a manner that shall not arouse the sympathy of the public"; and furthermore, not "in a manner to inspire the desire, or to suggest a practical means, of imitation."

The Code is not limited merely to dealing with general principles. Though these may be accepted generally by all, and are elaborately set down in the rules issued by several government censorship bodies, these provisions are frequently violated, and evaded, in their particular application to the pictures. It is in connection with definite application of its provisions that the practical efficiency of the Code lies. By means of 12 articles sub-divided into about 50 paragraphs, the Code stipulates the principles that are to govern in any number of plots, scenes, dialogue, etc.

Efficient Review

Concerning the second condition, that is, the faithful observance of the Code by the producers, the Code provides an extensive and detailed arrangement for the interpretations to be given to the articles and paragraphs of the Code. Under the title, "Rules for Uniform Interpretation," which rules have likewise been accepted and subscribed to by a committee of directors of motion picture producers, a plan has been formulated by means of which uniform and strict interpretation is assured. This resolution provides:

1. An examining committee to which there is submitted everything that concerns the preparation of a film, such as the selection of the subject, and the manuscript that describes the story. This is examined in

DISTRIBUTORS ACCEPT CONTRACT FORMULATED BY 5-5-5 CONFERENCE

No Decentralizing Of Publix Houses

Publix circuit with several hundred houses covering the country will not be decentralized, according to Sam Katz, the circuit's president and operating chief.

Fox last week announced its decentralization plans, by which houses in that circuit will be divorced from home office operation, divided into territories and operated directly from respective key points by a territorial manager.

It was pointed out that efforts at the home office are being directed against decentralizing, rather than toward it—for the time being, at least. What local buying has been done by Publix division men will in future be centered at the home office, it is understood.

MPTOA Get Set for Copyright Battle

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America anticipates the Copyright bill will be rushed to passage at the next Congressional session, and, therefore, urges concerted effort on the part of exhibitors to block enactment.

If this measure embraces the Berne Convention arrangement, theatre owners may be forced to pay six or more sets of music license tax instead of one. MPTOA officials, who fought the bill at the last session, contend that for talkers there should be no license tax required inasmuch as producers pay for the use of copyrighted music on the film. Thus producers pay the performing fee in fact and it is naturally charged off in costs to theatres.

The national association urges exhibitors to enlist the aid of their individual attorneys so that widespread effort against the measure can be concentrated at Washington when advocates of the measure resurrect it for passage.

Bow, Borzage and Walsh May Head Units in Selznick Firm

Actual plans of the new "unit" production company headed by Lewis Milestone and David Selznick are nearing completion, with negotiations now under way for directors and stars on the Coast. Clara Bow's name has been mentioned in connection with the Milestone-Selznick company, and it is understood that Raoul Walsh and Frank Borzage are considering a contract.

B&K Holds Up Ban On Twin Features

Balaban & Katz, Chicago Publix unit, is still holding up the banning of double featuring in that territory which the independent houses want to adopt if B & K will quit the practice also.

It is understood there that John Balaban is against double featuring, having told exchange managers that he thought single features would be best for the industry. Max Balaban, however, is reported to be still in favor of twin bills. As a result, double featuring is likely to be general in Chicago until B & K announce their next season's policy.

Agree "in Principle" to Adopt Instrument

Renewal of Lively Functioning of All 31 Film Boards Is Considered As Probable Result

[Complete text of the Allied statement contrasting provisions of the distributing companies' individual sales contracts, with the clauses agreed upon at the 5-5-5 conference in July, 1930, appears on pages 28 to 31, inclusive.]

The 5-5-5 uniform contract on Thursday became a definite part of distribution-exhibition machinery when all distributors, in conference at headquarters of the MPPDA, agreed to adopt the instrument "in principle," thereby completing the triumvirate of Allied-distributor-MPTOA interests, which is necessary for its use in deals between the buyer and the seller of motion pictures.

Sidney R. Kent, vice-president and general sales manager of Paramount Publix, elected as official spokesman for the distributors, announced acceptance of the contract, stating:

> "The adoption of the 5-5-5 contract as an alternative contract was approved in principle today. Further consideration is being given to the method by which, and the time when it can be used."

Progress already made in the 1931-32 selling season is expected to prevent wide action this year, but with the 1932-33 sales season, beginning in May, exhibitors will have an option to use the uniform agreement or individual sales contracts of the respective distributors.

Allied and MPTOA having already adopted the agreement, decision of the distributing companies makes its acceptance in the industry unanimous, although it is unknown at the moment just what method will be devised for application of the contract. Nor has a definite date for its official use been determined.

The modus operandi, it is expected, will cause much trouble before all details have been clarified. The distributors at their Thursday conference laid the foundation for the formation of a committee to straighten out these details.

An important aspect of the adoption of the uniform contract is its inevitable influence toward the reinstatement of arbitration. The contract form calls for voluntary arbitration of differences arising under the contract. This will presume and require the establishment, or re-establishment, of machinery of arbitration for the industry, which fact is laden with importance for the somnolent institution of the Film Boards of Trade organizations, which have been quiescent since the Thacher decision. It would appear a probability that the entire chain of thirty-one Film Boards of Trade, of which only nine offices in fact have been

U.S. MARKET FOR ALIEN TALKERS 50 REGULAR, 600 OCCASIONAL HOUSES

Survey Shows Booking of Pictures in Foreign Languages Too Little and Too Widely Dispersed to Exert an Influence; German Product of Some Importance

A survey of the American field for foreign language pictures completed this week finds a market of importance only for the German product.

Because of the considerable attention given to discussions of foreign picture activities among American critics and commentators in the public prints, and the conspicuousness of the exploitation of some foreign product in metropolitan centers, MOTION PICTURE HERALD set about an inquiry into the actual extent of the importation and exploitation of pictures from overseas.

In substance it may be said that aside from the Germans, the foreign linguistic groups are too small numerically and too widely dispersed geographically to exert a buying power for amusement in their native tongues. In consequence no appreciable business in French, Spanish, Russian, Swedish, or lesser linguistic group pictures is found and no machinery of distribution for such pictures, should they be offered, exists.

It thus appears that while the motion picture industry of America has its problems of the foreign versions in the struggle to hold the world market enjoyed in the days of the silent picture, there is no parallel or coincident problem about holding an important sector of the home market.

50 Show Foreign Films

Less than 50 theatres throughout the entire country now show foreign language talkers regularly and exclusively, the majority being small "art" theatres in downtown districts, although between 300 and 600 houses in the United States occasionally screen pictures in foreign dialogue.

Canada has 30 theatres showing French pictures almost exclusively.

Periodical bookings at neighborhood theatres are not sufficiently important to warrant wholesale invasion of the field by foreign companies, or by their representatives in America, again with the exception of German. Ufa and Tobis now are setting up machinery for marketing their German product, but nowhere does there exist a nationwide system, independent or otherwise, to handle product from other countries. Until this is accomplished, the foreign talker field must remain dormant here; a single system for handling films of all languages appears to be the only solution.

Lacking exchange and exhibitor merchandising effort, the foreign language factor cannot possibly prosper in this country. The exhibitor fears to take a chance. The independent exchange man will not.

The Ufa and Tobis moves are the first serious attempts to break open the market, and this despite the complaints voiced by foreign interests at being unable to secure bookings here. "They just haven't tried," according to foreign film authorities in this country.

If foreign language publications, which are printed and distributed in the United States, can be used as a barometer of the extent of the market, further verification of German possibilities, and lack of possibilities for other types, is available.

One hundred and eighty publications are printed in German. They have a total subscription list of 1,633,000, as compared with 199 French papers which have 1,507,635 subscribers, three fourths of which are in Canada.

Nine hundred thousand Italians comprise the total subscription list of 129 publications printed in that tongue, but these are too widely scattered to aid Italian talkers.

The Spanish publication field, embracing 280 periodicals and newspapers with 1,250,000 subscribers, cannot, however, be used as a criterion because of the many different Spanish dialects which divide the Spanish into several groups, including Mexican, Cuban, Spanish, Porto Rican and South American.

Swedish papers total 46, having 378,000 subscribers, and Yiddish, 39, boasting of 1,599,000.

Fourteen hundred publications are printed in foreign languages in this country. They show the limitations of the foreign talker field in the United States, and are divided as follows:

The above figures, although not representing the total number of foreign-born in the United States, do act as a more accurate gauge than United States census figures, inasmuch as the latest United States statistics available are as of 1920, the census bureau not having completed compilation of the 1930 census. The new figures will not be ready until fall.

Taking these figures as an indication of the composition of foreign-born population and its territorial concentration and interest in the mother tongue, it is found that out of 450,000 subscribers to Czecho-slovakian publications 389,000 are in Illinois, the remaining 60,000 being so widely scattered as to make impractical the showing of Czech talkers—if any—in other but Illinois territory, which is not sufficient to be profitable.

Possibilities in States

With Canada's exception, Rhode Island, New York and Massachusetts offer the only appreciable possibilities for showing French films, according to the publication figures.

There are numerous heavy German centers, including Minnesota, New York, Ohio, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Missouri and parts of California.

New York has 90,000 Greek subscribers out of a total of 125,000 in the country.

One quarter of a million Hungarian readers live in New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Nearly half of the 937,000 Italians are at New York, with the remainder widely scattered throughout every state in the Union.

The Japanese are on the West Coast, principally California.

Thirteen territories claim 255,000 Norwegian and Danish, with Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, South Dakota and Washington leading.

Films in Polish should offer a fair-sized market, but so far as is known there are no films of that language in the hands of U. S. independent distributors. Over 1,000,000 Polish subscribers are listed by 91 publications, of which 340,000 are in Illinois, 121,000 in New York, 172,000 in Wisconsin, 111,000 in Ohio.

One and one-quarter million Spanish are divided into several language groups and are widely scattered.

Illinois boasts of close to two-thirds of the 378,000 Swedes. Other important Swedish centers are Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska and Washington.

MARKET LARGEST FOR GERMAN FILMS

New York has 1,670,000 out of 1,600,000 Yiddish.

All of which gives a fair idea of the lack of concentration of foreign peoples who have an inborn appreciation of motion pictures produced in the mother country and in their native tongue.

Not even Germans have nationwide representation, but this race is prominent in so many localities as to make the appeal of German talkers a success—if properly and consistently sold.

Elsewhere there appears a state-by-state analysis of publication-subscription figures, which are presented in addition to a state summary of the Government's 1920 statistics of foreign-born living in the United States, and show in detail where the respective foreign countries have strongest representation.

The field as it now stands revolves almost solely around the "art" and "little" theatre movements in key cities, principally in the East. Italian, French and Spanish talkers are sporadically screened in addition to the many German, but further than that practically no effort is made to book these pictures into the neighborhoods where in some places a fair-sized foreign population exists.

Motion Picture Herald learns that, with the exception of Ufa and Tobis, no serious thought is given to neighborhood business, nor has it ever been considered seriously. And, as yet, not even Ufa and Tobis have invaded this field. Their plans still are in the formulative stages. Both now are building up their own downtown first run representation throughout the country.

The Situation at Keys

In Denver, there is a limited call for Spanish versions, but there is none for others.

New York, the largest metropolitan center in the world, offers many possibilities, but aside from downtown "art" theatres, there has been little effort to develop all-foreign policies in the many thickly populated sections. German, Italian and Yiddish have the greatest possibilities.

Chicago has in the past season played 75 foreign first runs, mostly German. These, too, play "downtown," with but few exceptions.

Spanish and Japanese films are shown at three foreign houses in Los Angeles-Hollywood territory. English importations fail on the Coast.

Cincinnati is strong for German, but others do not draw.

At Baltimore, occasional Jewish, German, French and Spanish appear at two or three houses.

Canada offers a fairly large market for French subjects. Also English-made.

At Albany, an insurmountable barrier faces foreign language films.

Only German films have a chance in St. Louis territory, due to the large German population.

Likewise at Milwaukee.

Distributors, independent or national, have made no attempt to sell foreign films at New Orleans or nearby towns.

San Francisco offers a possibility for Spanish and French, although no theatres now use foreign films exclusively.

The Twin (St. Paul-Minneapolis) Cities have a large Swedish clientele, but there are not sufficient Swede films to permit of a continuous foreign policy at any house in these towns.

Practically no effort has been made to open the possibly lucrative foreign field at Pittsburgh, center of Eastern mining operations and employing thousands of Polaks, Czecho-Slovakians and Italians.

Foreign talkers have not been exploited at all in New England.

Boston has two "art" theatres, but further than these two, activities are at a standstill.

Spanish versions are used extensively in San Antonio and neighboring localities.

Foreign dialogue films remain on the shelves of a few Kansas City exchanges which a few months ago attempted to open the field.

A more detailed analysis of present foreign language conditions in key cities appears elsewhere.

English Imports Another Matter

On the American market, quality product made in England and given proper distribution stands as much of a chance as United States films of an equal production value, provided that the English film has a story and name value in its cast which can be heavily exploited, according to Arthur Lee, president of Artlee Pictures and one of the largest importers of pictures from England.

Lee stated that "possibilities of good British product playing American houses looks better than ever, and if English producers continue their present quality improvement, talkers from England will make greater inroads on the American market than ever before."

English imports are not placed in the same classification by Americans as are talkers emanating from other foreign studios. The similarity in language, naturally, helping talkers from the British Isles.

Edward L. Klein, pioneer importer of foreign product, agrees with Lee in that quality English product stands a better chance in the States than at any time previous.

"The principal method of handling English talkers at present is through major companies," states Klein, "with few achieving any great success when distributed by independent exchanges. Naturally, the independent gives preference to the American product and does not push the English film to market."

Klein states that "the average English film now reaching this country grosses little; not enough to make it worthwhile. The film must be above average to make a dent at the box-office. It lacks a known star, a trade-mark or director's name all of which help so much to put over American pictures.

England Eyeing American Mart

"England has its eye on the American market more than ever before," Klein continues. He believes that "the market for Italian, French and Spanish fields are so limited as to make it impractical to handle pictures from these countries. Germany's possibilities are far greater than any other. Spanish and French have practically no market, with Italian films standing a fair chance in certain sections.

"American companies are not yet ready to handle foreign versions in their own country, and the independent exchanges lack the spirit to give them serious sales effort. The exhibitor, therefore, fears to take a chance on his investment and the result is the continuance of a state of dormancy, which has existed for years.

"There must be plenty of fighting; plenty of gambling to expand in America with foreign films.

"However," says Klein, "our American companies may be the first to break open the foreign talker field here, because of the many versions which they will have available through foreign production to meet quota requirements abroad. They must produce in England, France and Germany to meet government regulations before they are permitted to market their pictures in those countries. American distributors have in operation a complete United States sales system, lack of which has hampered and will continue to prevent progress of foreign films here," Klein concluded.

Since sound's inception, approximately 100 pictures are imported on an average each year, with English predominating and German leading the foreign-language division, followed by French and Italian.

The majority of Spanish talkers are made in Hollywood.

Executives of the M. P. P. D. A., who are close to the field of foreign talkers, are of the opinion that "no attempt has ever been made until recently to develop the market; results with effort cannot be expected." They, too, believe that German films have the only important future.

Ufa this week concluded a deal for a Cincinnati theatre, putting Ufa in that city, at New York, at Chicago, with negotiations under way for immediate representation in the downtown districts of St. Louis, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Detroit, Pasadena and Rochester. "Others will follow," according to Herbert Grau, who is associated with F. Wynne-Jones in marketing Ufa German dialogue films in the U. S.

"Ufa does not intend to give immediate attention to the invasion of neighborhoods," states Grau. "Not until later will we look toward neighborhood business," he said.

Too Much Dialogue Hurts

"The most feasible plan for marketing foreign films here," Grau stated, "is to sell second and subsequent runs on two and three day showings, and not depend too largely on the downtown presentations. We are concentrating on the downtown runs at present in order to gain a foothold. After that is accomplished, effort will be directed at the suburban and neighborhood stands, hundreds of which are in districts having thick foreign populations.

"Interest is rapidly growing in foreign films, particularly German, in American exhibition circles," Grau believes.

"It is important that all foreign films directed at native audiences contain as little dialogue as possible," Grau said. "The Continental atmosphere and music is appreciated with plenty of action. Too much dialogue will hurt development, even among foreigners to whom the picture's appeal is directed. A lot, too, depends on quality of production.

RESULTS OF CHECKUP IN KEY CITIES

"The market for other foreign versions," in the opinion of Grau, "is too limited to bother with. Aside from German films, serious consideration should not be given to foreign versions of French, Spanish or Italian make, because their appeal is confined to very narrow channels."

In addition to foreign-born residents in the United States, the foreign film has an appeal for language students, the "sophisticated" class, and to Americans who have been abroad, to lovers of opera, foreign sympathizers, those of foreign ancestry and others.

Pierre Arnaud, a pioneer importer of French-Italian-Spanish pictures, and now an independent producer, stated that "Foreign companies expect too much in revenue and, accordingly demand unreasonable percentages from the American independent handling his product. Without a national exchange system, that independent is forced to dispose of rights to state right exchanges, too few of which are interested, or he must attempt to sell theatres directly from New York. The returns on individual bookings make this prohibitive and impractical.

"The market for these pictures is entirely too narrow to take seriously," Arnaud said.

Practically all agreed that the effort placed behind the foreign talker movement is too inefficient, and has only been spasmodic since sound started.

E. J. Rosenberg and M. H. Chamberlain, who are associated with Leo Breecher in Protex Trading Corp., distributor of foreign language films in the U. S., concur with others in admitting a lack of distribution machinery to allow foreign pictures to make important inroads on the market here.

In the same class with Protex are Transcontinental Pictures, handling Cines-Pittaluga, Italian product; Joseph Seiden, who makes and distributes talkers in Yiddish; Affiliated European Prod.; ArtLee Pictures, handling English exclusively; Amkino, Russia's official representative; British International, English; Ufa, German; Tobis, German; Film Arts Guild, miscellaneous product; Talking Picture Epics, German; Harry Thomas, German and English; Edward Klein, Spanish; Capitol, German; World Wide, English, and a few others.

The majority of national distributors handle some imports, pictures made abroad by their own units or affiliates to cover quota requirements. Foreign versions get limited distribution, but a few English imports of quality are placed in regular distribution by RKO, Columbia and others.

Paramount produces foreign films at England and France; Warners and First National make pictures in Germany and beginning Sept. 1 will launch an English unit; Universal has a Paris affiliation and will make a serial in England; United Artists, it is expected, will soon start at Paris and Berlin; RKO has its own unit at London.

The Situation in Key Cities

A checkup was made at principal key towns, from coast to coast, to determine the present status of foreign talkers. Detailed results of the survey are as follows:

New York Market, Largest In Country, Unscratched

New York City—Because of its immense Metropolitan complex, New York has been the center of foreign language talkers in the United States. Although in recent years many "art" and "little cinema" movements have sprung up and just as quickly withered, this is attributed to lack of merchandising effort on the part of operators.

The 55th Street Cinema, Little Carnegie Playhouse, Fifth Avenue Playhouse, Eighth Street Playhouse, Ufa's Cosmopolitan, the Little Picture House and Plaza all have straight foreign version policies, concentrating on German talkers with French following next in order.

However, in certain congested tenement districts, where foreign population is unusually heavy, the predominating language in that locality is sufficiently large to support films made in the mother tongue. On the lower East Side, at least three houses show Jewish talkers when available, while Italians of that territory and elsewhere throughout town have attended in large numbers Italian talkers whenever screened at neighborhoods.

The "downtown" art theatres, all with limited seating capacity, draw when they have quality product. Their clientele comes chiefly from the "sophisticated" crowd of New Yorkers and language students, with few foreigners in comparison.

No widespread attempt ever has been made to break heavily into the subsequent runs, and this despite the fact that New York offers the largest concentrated market for foreign language films in this country, particularly films of German make, French, Italian, Spanish and Yiddish.

Limited Call for Spanish in Denver, Others Taboo

Denver—Spanish version films are used in small numbers in the southern part of Denver territory. Pastime theatre in Alburquerque shows these most of the time. Some of the exchanges carry a few Spanish versions with very little call. However, there is one independent distributor who served about 20 theatres.

No call has been reported for other foreign-made films. A few Russian films have been shown here in the past year by labor organizations, but no attempt has been made to show them elsewhere or regularly. Nine exchanges will not bother with foreign made or foreign versions, while three have a few Spanish versions and only one reported regular business on these.

Chicago Goes in for Everything, But Not Much of Anything

Chicago—There are no exact figures available on the use of foreign pictures here. A theatre canvass shows approximately 75 foreign first-runs per year. The Cinema Artguild used 44 in the past 18 months, or about 30 per year. The Punch and Judy theatre used about the same number, though this house uses only German pictures.

The Belmont has second runs on these two, and has occasional first run Swedish pictures using, probably, six first runs annually.

The Loop houses use only three or four annually and these are distributed either by Paramount or MGM. The Loop legitimate houses in off season take French, German, Italian or Russian first runs, but only about six annually were used in all at the Studebaker, Apollo and Garrick theatres.

Castle takes one or two English made pictures annually.

The Cinema theatre has used Japanese and Indian pictures in addition to these, however, mostly silents, up to a year ago and now largely sound. Neighborhood theatres occasionally use an Italian, Spanish or Bohemian first run.

Japanese and Spanish Draw on West Coast; English Imports Fail

Hollywood—Foreign pictures enjoy an important place in the Southern Californian sun, but not all of them are imports. There are three distinct foreign policy houses: the Fuji, which runs all Japanese productions, the Filmarte, which plays Europeans and the California on South Main Street, which runs all Spanish features made in Hollywood or the Paramount's Joinville studio.

The Filmarte, which has had a novelty policy for the last four years, mixing foreign productions with oddities and American revivals, has been on a straight foreign plane during the last six months. In that time, it has played five French, ten German, eight Russian, two Swedish and three British Internationals.

Fred Budrow, manager of the Filmarte, says the Russians, booked through Amkino, top all other foreigns, while the Britishers failed to click because of inferior quality and slow tempo. Filmarte, which is a Fox West Coast house, fills its book in the open market, buying from British All-Star, Protex Trading, Amkino, Milton Diamond and others. P. A. Swope is now in New York buying product for the house.

The California, the "big" first-run Spanish house, uses a few shorts made in Spain and Mexico, but they are a negligible part of the program, and their features are made in Hollywood or Joinville near Paris and are mostly Spanish originals, not merely foreign versions. There are several ten and fifteen-cent small houses which play the same subjects long after the California.

The Fuji at First and San Pedro Streets, is the only Japanese house there, it has been operating to good business for five years, playing all Japan product, with a weekly change policy.

At the beginning of the current year, the Biltmore, in downtown Los Angeles, booked 18 German pictures and ran eight. What will be done with the other ten is not known. The house is now straight legitimate, playing road show attractions.

Cincinnati Strong for German Talkers Only

Cincinnati—The Erlanger Opera House formerly played German pictures exclusively, but following a run of "Two Hearts in Waltz Time," the policy was discontinued because of the supposed influence of hot weather. The same film then took a turn at the Forest, a subsequent run in the suburbs.

RKO's Strand played "Comrades of 1918," a German production, for one week and these are the only foreign language films which have played Cincinnati territory this season. The pictures clicked satisfactorily due to the heavy German population at Cincinnati.

Dr. Fritz Witte, editor of the Freie Presse, local German daily, secured a franchise from Tobis and Ufa to play both products in his newly acquired Continental theatre, formerly the Royal. This theatre is now closed for sound installation, enlargement and expects to reopen September 15th.

Both companies withheld granting a franchise until assurance was received from Witte that he would display trade names and other insignia on the house front. Witte agreed to display names. This is called the first

Baltimore Pays to See Few Talkers in Foreign Languages

Baltimore—The Little theatre, now called the Europa, uses all foreign pictures almost a full year. There are some foreign pictures shown, however, at a few residential houses and at the Embassy.

"Die Forsterchristl" is now at Loew's Valencia. Some Jewish pictures have been shown at intervals at the Auditorium Place.

The Canadian Situation; Market for French, English

Toronto—Slightly over 1,000,000 feet of British films were imported into Canada during the past 12 months, but this was not sufficient to meet the present quota law on the Ontario statute books. This law cannot be enforced until there are British films available in Canada to the extent of 5% of the total supply from all sources. It is intimated, that Regal Films, chief British importer, has 24 features lined up for the next 12 months, while Gaumont is providing 12 features.

British Columbia's provincial government has talked of a quota law requiring 25% of British films, but Attorney General Pooley was laughed out of the idea.

Manitoba also talks about a quota law, but nothing has been done about it.

French films are imported into Canada and are sufficient to keep first run Cinema De Paris operating in Montreal, but some features have to be held over to fill in. This Montreal house seats 550 and charges 50 cents top.

It is claimed that 30 theatres in Quebec province show French pictures practically exclusively, but all are very small houses and some open only one or two nights weekly. There are practically no German pictures in Canada except "The Blue Angel," starring Dietrich, and it was only recently that Ontario censors would pass a German production because of the war "hangover."

Insurmountable Barrier for Foreign Films Throughout Albany

Albany—With a single possible exception, no foreign pictures have been or are being used by exhibitors in this territory. Local exhibitors declared that entertainment features of American made films are so far superior to foreign product, that they are giving no consideration to the latter.

Only German Stands a Chance At Houses in and Around St. Louis

St. Louis—Comparatively few foreign pictures are being exhibited in this territory. The public reaction is too unfavorable to even the best directed and cast European productions, especially outside of St. Louis in the first run houses.

The audiences apparently don't like English accent and European mannerisms, although there is marked preference for German films as compared with those made in other European countries.

Distributors Not Trying to Sell Foreigns to New Orleans

New Orleans—Foreign made pictures which have played this territory recently include: "The Blue Angel," Ufa-Para; "The Escape," "The Perfect Alibi," Basil Dean-RKO, "The Clan," Elstree-RKO, "Symphony in Two Flats", "Jaws of Hell" and "Just for a Song," all Gainsborough, distributed by World-Wide.

Reports indicate that no foreign made pictures are pulling heavily, and that distributors are not trying to sell them.

San Francisco Region Offers Possibilities to Latins

San Francisco—There are no theatres in this territory now using foreign pictures exclusively. However, the following theatres show foreign pictures when available with more or less regularity: Verdi, Columbia, Tivoli, all in San Francisco; Lyric, San Jose; New Menlo, Menlo Park, Mexico, Sacramento, Mountainview, Mountainview; and the Delano in Delano.

An all foreign policy was started here last fall by the St. Francis. It opened December 23rd, lasted eight weeks and showed new foreign pictures every week, mostly French, Italian and Spanish. The start of business was encouraging, but it slipped badly in the last three weeks.

The German opera pictures at the Columbia in San Francisco were highly successful, grossing nearly $20,000 in two weeks. Theoretically, foreign talkies should be highly profitable in San Francisco, because of the large highly diversified foreign population.

DIVIDEND IN STOCK CALLED SOUND MOVE

Paramount Action Does Not Lower Asset Value of Owners' Shares—Approximates Cash Value

By THE ANALYST

Declaration of a stock dividend as the disbursement for the third quarter to the stockholders of Paramount Publix Corporation has on analysis been accepted in financial circles as among the soundest movements ever made by a large company. The Paramount stock dividend does not lower the asset value of the stock already held by the owners of the company, as is the case in most stock disbursements, and it also approximates in value the cash disbursement that would have been made under ordinary circumstances.

Adolph Zukor, in his statement giving the cause for a stock dividend at a time when the earnings of the company made more than enough money available for a cash disbursement, said:

"Sometime ago the company purchased certain theatres and other assets which it then believed, and still believes, to be valuable acquisitions obtained at a fair and reasonable figure. At the time these purchases were effected, payment was made in Paramount Publix stock, with the right, however, to the vendors, within a certain time, to exchange such stock for cash at a price which would realize an amount which was not in excess of what the company did, and still does, consider a fair price for these theatres and other assets."

$4,875,000 Due This Year

Mr. Zukor said that the balance of the obligations under these stock guarantee transactions aggregated approximately $11,500,000. As far as financial records show, of this $11,500,000 only $4,875,000 is due this year and that on September 10. The remainder of it falls due in two separate amounts in the first quarter of next year, $2,550,000 on January 1 and $4,100,000 on March 1, both 1932.

The amount which is expected to be returned to the company on September 10 consists of 65,000 shares of Paramount Publix stock which was guaranteed at a price of $75 a share. The redemption of this stock would put this number of shares in the treasury available for corporation uses and would reduce by that amount the number of outstanding on which dividends would have to be paid. The stock dividend which has been declared will require approximately 78,222 shares to be paid. This will increase the number of outstanding shares of the company for this year only 13,222 shares, the difference between the 65,000 that will be withdrawn from circulation by the redemption of this number of shares at the guaranteed price and the number of shares it will take to pay the recently declared dividend.

However, there are 30,000 shares involved in the guaranteed stock upon which payment is due January 1. The redemption of this stock will decrease the present number of outstanding shares, after making a provision for the slight increase caused by the payment of the stock dividend, of 16,778 shares. An additional 48,246 shares is to be redeemed on March 1, the whole amount of which would further increase the diminution in the aggregate number of oustanding shares. This would return to the treasury of the company nearly a sufficient number of shares to compensate for a second stock dividend for the fourth quarter of this year, if it were deemed advisable by the directors to take such action, without materially increasing the number of outstanding shares.

Observers of corporate practices in the financial district do not recall a precedent for a stock dividend which contains less dilution of the issued stock than does the current Paramount dividend. It is pointed out that the directors chose to value the stock at $25 a share in making the stock dividend equivalent to the prevailing cash return of disbursement. Even with the depressed prices under which all stocks, and motion picture stocks particularly, have been laboring during the present year, the average of Paramount Publix stock has been well above this share valuation.

Investors Can Profit

It is deemed probable that stockholders who regard the third quarter dividend as being but one of four installments on an annual payment will have plenty of opportunity between now and January 1 to dispose of the stock which they will receive under the dividend declaration, at a figure which will make their cash income appreciably higher than the 62½ cents a share which would have been disbursed if the declaration had been a cash one. Analytical departments of brokerage firms who make a business of figuring out the probable financial progress of a company have announced conclusions that the declaration of a second stock dividend for the fourth quarter of the year would enable the company to retire all of the guaranteed stock out of income. They point out that, according to Mr. Zukor's statement issued in connection with the announcement of the stock dividend, the company had a favorable cash balance of $3,400,000 above bank loans on June 30. The stock dividend which has already been declared conserves the cash assets of the company by an additional $1,955,546. A second stock dividend would add an equal amount before the first of the year, without figuring any income above the dividend rate available for the retirement of the stock. This would provide $7,311,092 as against $7,425,000 which is the guaranteed value of the stock which must be redeemed by January 1 including the amount due on September 10.

The slight difference in these two figures is regarded as negligible. It is hardly expected that the earnings of the company will be less, in the last six months of this year, than they were in the first half of the year. The company is credited by all analysts as being able to go into the new year with a healthy earnings balance after the redemption of the first two blocks of the guaranteed stock. This balance, combined with minimum anticipated earnings in the first quarter of 1932, is expected to offset the amount due on March 1 or so nearly offset it that the difference could be easily made up by bank loans to be retired in the second quarter of next year. This calculation is based upon no increase in income above the low level which has persisted thus far this year.

If these Wall Street analysts are correct, then Paramount will have accomplished an unparalleled feat in corporate practices, by meeting obligations caused by extraordinary conditions in the stock market, with its assets unimpaired and without any material increase in its outstanding securities.

Nonpartisian Meet On Contract Opens In New York Sept. 1

The exhibitors' meeting called for the purpose of protesting against the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract and sales policy will be thoroughly nonpartisan in character, it is announced. Representatives of 21 exhibitor organizations are preparing to meet at the Hotel Astor, New York, September 1.

Both Allied and MPTOA members will participate in the protest meeting, with Abram Myers, president of Allied, slated to take a leading part, and assurances from M. A. Lightman, president of MPTOA, that his organization will cooperate. Lightman said he planned to attend and that if he is unable to be present his organization will be fittingly represented.

Comerford Urges MPTOA Meet in Washington Month

M. E. Comerford, national director of the MPTOA, suggests dedicating the screen to civic and patriotic uses during the Washington anniversary month, with the association's convention of a nature to be commemorative of the event. The 200th anniversary of the birth of Washington will be observed in February.

"I believe that we should dedicate the service work of the American theatres and screens to Washington's ideals inasmuch as we have one of the most powerful mediums of expression known. No better commemorative service could be performed during the Washington anniversary month by any other American industry," Comerford said.

Fox to Enforce Ban On Poster Reselling

Fox has launched a fight on the reselling of accessories by exhibitors to poster renters, with a test suit threatened to determine the practice as a violation of contract. The company declares that it prohibits such reselling in a clause in its product contracts.

THE PATENT TANGLE AFTER TWO YEARS

Recent decisions give happier prospect of being cleared up rapidly than it was half year ago

Of vital interest to thousands of exhibitors who have invested money in the installation of talking picture equipment is the matter of patent protection on these equipments. Failing to have this protection, their equipments are subject to seizure and the exhibitors themselves are liable to financial damages which may well exceed the amount guaranteed them in their contract with the equipment company, assuming that there is such a clause in their contract.

When the first suit was filed more than two years ago to try to clarify the muddled waters of patent rights in the talking picture equipment field, it was generally admitted that the situation was an involved one. Dozens of claims were advanced. Hundreds of opinions were offered as to the merits of these claims.

But Courts Hadn't Acted

The trouble was that these opinions all represented individual judgment. The courts of the country—the only authority able to give legal force to any of these patent claims—had not yet passed upon them.

Several things contributed to make progress slow in the months that have passed since the filing of the first patent infringement complaint. The courts had considered the validity and scope of but few of the patents involved. Technical questions as to the extent of alleged licenses were unsettled. And while precedent existed for the courts to act upon, it had not yet been applied to this specific situation.

Progress might have been simplified and time saved if all of the conflicting patent claims from every source could have been served up to the courts like a roast turkey with the request: "Please look this over and tell us to whom each joint belongs."

Fortunately for the general safeguarding of legal rights court procedure functions differently. Every case has had to be pressed separately. Technical motions and appeals from lower courts have involved time.

Some patents that will undoubtedly come in for legal dispute later have not yet been included in any complaints filed. Others are named in complaints filed some time ago and are either still pending before the court in which they were filed or hovering in the twilight stage between a lower court decision and a higher court appeal.

Several Recent Decisions

During the last year—and especially during the last few months, however—several decisions have been rendered that promise to have an important bearing on the ultimate legal evaluation of patent rights in this field.

It is worthy of note that practically all patent litigation has centered around Western Electric interests. Western Electric Company, its associate companies and their customers, have been either plaintiffs or defendants in every patent case.

It has been decisively established that the Western Electric reproducing equipment does not infringe upon three DeForest patents held by General Talking Pictures relating to means for guiding and positioning a sound film during reproduction from and to a circuit for the photoelectric cell. That was determined in a suit brought by General Talking Pictures against the Stanley Company of America for the use of Western Electric equipment in a Stanley Company theatre. The defense was assumed by the Western Electric Company and Judge Morris, then sitting in the federal court, district of Delaware at Wilmington, ruled that there was no infringement of these three patents. His ruling in this respect was subsequently upheld by the court of appeals.

OUTSTANDING DECISIONS

General Talking Pictures vs Stanley Company of America.

Decision: Western Electric reproducing equipment does not infringe upon three DeForest patents on means for guiding and positioning a sound film from and to a circuit for the photoelectric cell.

General Talking Pictures vs Western Electric.

Decision: First ruling was that Western Electric infringed Ries patent involving limiting by a mechanical slit the area of the record exposed to the light beam. This decision overruled by court of appeals, request for rehearing denied, and writ of certiorari denied by U. S. supreme court.

Western Electric vs Sol Wallerstein

Decision: Pacent infringed three patents, the Colpitts patent on push-pull arrangement of vacuum tubes for amplification, the Arnold patent on improvements in details, and the Mathes patent embodying circuit for maintaining a uniform supply of power to the amplifier.

Also: Pacent did not infringe Plattner patent on a circuit arrangement for the use of alternating current supply to the amplifier.

Also: Western Electric's Lowenstein patent covering the "grid-bias" declared invalid.

Aleograph Company vs Western Electric.

Decision: Western Electric does not infringe an Aleograph patent on synchronization of pictures and sound on disc.

Western Electric vs Maiden Toledo Company and Silverphone Company, also of Toledo.

Decision: Permanent injunctions granted against both companies. Maiden concern a maker of loudspeakers and Silverphone of complete theatre talker equipment.

Western Electric vs Kersten Radio Equipment Company.

Decision: Two patents on loudspeaker and loudspeaker diaphragm infringed by Kersten.

OTHER SUITS PENDING

Orlando E. and Mary G. Kellum vs. Erpi and a number of producers.

Charge: Infringement of Kellum patent relating to a method of assembling phonograph and picture records.

Western Electric vs Pacent Company, Stanley Company of America, Biophone Company, Amplion Company, General Talking Pictures (separate actions).

The Ries Patent Decisions

In the matter of the Ries patent, also owned by General Talking Pictures, involving in the reproduction from a photographic sound record, the idea of limiting by a mechanical slit the area of the record exposed at any one time to the light beam, Judge Morris ruled that there was an infringement by the Western Electric equipment.

His decision subsequently was overruled by the court of appeals, which declared that no infringement existed and stated "we refer to this (i. e., the art of sound pictures) in order to now dispel any impression that the patent here involved (the Ries patent) is the foundation stone, so to speak, of the 'talkie-movie' art."

General Talking Pictures' request for a rehearing was denied by the court of appeals. The case finally was disposed of when the United States supreme court denied General Talking Pictures a writ of certiorari.

The Pacent Ruling

In another court decision it was definitely decided that three patents, vital in the manufacture of the Western Electric equipment, were valid and were infringed by the Pacent equipment.

These three patents are the Colpitts patent (No. 1,128,292) covering, broadly, the push-pull arrangement of vacuum tubes for the amplification of sound; the Arnold patent (No. 1,504,537) covering improvements in details of this arrangement; and the Mathes patent (No. 1,426,754) embodying the most modern circuit for maintaining a uniform supply of power to the amplifier regardless of fluctuations at the source.

This decision was rendered by Judge C. G. Galston of the federal court, sitting in the northern district of New York, who said, in his ruling, "the patents involved are of extreme importance, some of them, perhaps, going to the very heart of the sound motion picture industry."

The decision was the result of an action by Western Electric Company against Sol Wallerstein, manager of the Broadway theatre, Buffalo, for infringement by the use of Pacent equipment in that house.

Blattner Patent Not Infringed

In the same decision, however, Judge Galston ruled that the Pacent equipment did not infringe the Blattner patent (No. 1,483,273) covering a circuit arrangement for the use of alternating current supply to

CLIMAX NEAR IN FIGHT OVER CHICAGO UNION

120 Union Operators Rushed by Plane From New York and Philadelphia—Theatres to Reopen

A climax in the fight of Chicago independent theatre owners for a reduction of one man in the booth appeared to be imminent with 100 independent theatres prepared to reopen Friday and Saturday after having been closed for the past two weeks in protest against the union's two-operator ruling.

Representatives of the Chicago exhibitors recruited 120 union operators in New York and Philadelphia and these were taken to Chicago by plane late this week in preparation for the theatre reopenings. Arrangements were made in Chicago for quartering these men in Loop hotels under armed guard, and guards for the theatres to be reopened were also requisitioned by Aaron Saperstein, president of Illinois Allied, and leader of the Chicago exhibitor opposition to the projectionists' local as ruled by Tom Maloy, indicted business agent.

The exhibitors' original plans, formulated early in the week, were to bring the outside operators into Chicago quietly by train, but when these plans became known the "foreign" operators were transported by plane to forestall possible efforts of the Chicago local to prevent the arrival of the outsiders.

As a result of this move, the Operators' union called a meeting late this week to reconsider acceptance of the exhibitors' proposal permitting the projectionists to return to work on the basis of one man per shift per theatre. This proposal has been twice before rejected by the operators.

Preliminary arrangements to make possible the utilization of the "foreign" operators in Chicago brought about the removal from office of Joe Maloy, city examiner of motion picture operators and a brother of Tom Maloy. Joe Maloy is also under indictment.

With what the exhibitors believe to be an unbiased official in Joe Maloy's post, no difficulty in licensing the outside operators, as required by a Chicago municipal ordinance, was contemplated.

Tom Maloy, with a record of violence laid to him in matters pertaining to opposition of his policies as dictator of the Chicago Operators' Union, and with five separate indictments hanging over him, stated that he again would oppose the bringing of outside operators into Chicago.

Reopening of the theatres with imported operators was made by the exhibitors only after all attempts to reach an agreement with Maloy on an equitable basis of one man in the booth had failed. Late last week the Operators' Union met and for the second time rejected the exhibitors' demand for the one-man reduction.

Prior to last week's meeting, Maloy gave out the statement that he was "tired of being called 'czar' of the union," and that the meeting would be an open one. For the first time in the history of the union representatives of the press were admitted to a meeting.

Business Boosting

A "Go to the Theatre" campaign is suggested by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as an added revenue builder at the box-office. "There is no doubt," according to the association, "but that a great number of people could be literally dragged off the streets and brought into theatres if the right kind of propaganda could be put behind the effort."

Early in the week several additional Chicago theatres, which were included in the original group of closings, reopened their doors with owners manning the projection machines and with heavy police guards. Fifty additional houses were scheduled to be reopened Monday and Tuesday, prior to the decision to bring in operators from other cities.

Most of the imported operators are members of the Brotherhood of Motion Picture Employees of North America, Inc., Local No. 2. The group was organized only recently and is operating in Brooklyn and plans expansion to other New York boroughs. Officers of the organization are: C. E. Talley, president; R. W. Warner, secretary; H. P. Carter, business manager.

Probability of closing 50 additional theatres, mostly affiliated, had been discussed in Chicago.

Allied Defends Ten-Cent Shows

"A ten-cent grind policy in normal times may tend to cheapen the business in some localities; but motion pictures attained their present greatness as 'the peoples' ' entertainment, and to take the pictures out of the reach of the people in times of industrial depression and unemployment is economic folly."

This is the stand taken at national headquarters of Allied States Association in answer to the present controversy in the Northwest which started when Al Steffes, Allied chief in that territory, launched a ten-cents admission policy at his neighborhood houses. Distributors are said to be opposed to this.

Zundt Succeeds Clark At Automatic Register

Colonel Charles T. Clark, who has been in charge of Automatic Simplex Register Corporation, Chicago, subsidiary of General Register Corporation, has resigned. John W. Zundt, assistant to J. C. Enslen, general sales manager of General Register at the home offices in New York, will take charge of the Chicago office. There is also an office at 420 S. San Pedro Street in Los Angeles.

Spotlight Again Thrown on Union Heads at Chicago

A union operator now employed at a Chicago theatre this week anonymously sent to all union projectionists in that town a lengthy communication in which sensational reiterated charges of graft, illegalities and irregularities are made against Tom Maloy and other union officials.

Fear of being murdered, the author stated, prevented him from signing the seven-page document which contains the names of the many who, it is alleged, are being kept at work on a temporary permit while full-card members are unemployed. The employing theatres and salaries paid to these permit men are listed, as are the names of 200 operators who have been granted cards since 1928, many of them under alleged questionable circumstances.

Many operators, it is claimed, are allowed to hold down two jobs simultaneously, hiring cheap nondescript substitutes for one place, but collecting for both. "Maloy is fighting solely to keep permit men on the payroll," it is charged.

Charge of Faulty Prints Fails to Alarm Industry

The American Society of Cinematographers in Hollywood this week issued a solemn warning to the industry that a great menace had arisen in the distribution of inferior prints. This was made the text of a long bulletin. No explicit specification of pictures concerned, dates and places of exhibition, or like material of proof, was offered.

In quest of a verification of this new cry of vast alarm, a number of inquiries were made among New York distributing offices, and among theatre operating executives likely to hear of any widespread difficulty with release prints. No such verification could be had.

"Just so much blah," was the comment of William Kelly, M-G-M's supervisor of print work. "The obvious idea is that some one is offering alibis for camera work."

Nat Saland, president of Craft Film Laboratory, agreed that there could be some merit in the camera organization's charges. "When sloppy work is turned out, it is because producers batter down the prices of small plants to such a low level there is no margin of profit for quality work. Also laboratories who finance producers sometimes find themselves working in too close a margin, where quality must suffer."

Pa. Exhibitors Meet on Oct. 4

The 11th annual convention of the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, will be held in Pittsburgh October 4, 5 and 6. Meeting place not yet selected. David J. Selznick is president of the organization and Fred J. Herrington is secretary.

accordance with the requirements of the Code.

2. Compulsory revision of each film before the negative is printed in order that corrections and modifications, in accordance with the Code, may be made.

3. In case of appeal, a further revision is made by another committee, whose decision is final and binding.

There is no need for stipulating a penalty on the part of any producer who might violate the terms of the Code, since the penalty would likely consist in that the offending film would not be accepted for exhibition by a large number of theatres in the country, whose owners are members of the very organization subscribing to the Code and of which the distributors form a part. Thus, self-censorship has an assured effect, also removing, almost automatically, any commercial competition which might induce the producers to violate the Code in order to render their films more risque.

A similar self-censorship is also established as regards all titles, advertisements, and printed announcements of films.

Therefore, the Code, as well as this adoption of self-censorship, are excellent ideas and do honor, not only to an appreciation of moral values but to the organizing ability of American producers of films.

Public Opinion

But, in order that all this may have the final desired effect in full, which is, the reforming of films throughout the world, another condition is essential, i.e., the collaboration and support of public opinion.

It must be borne in mind that the production of pictures is an industry, in which America takes the lead, and in which there has been invested almost twice the amount which all the other countries together have invested. Three billions of dollars (in our money, approximately 60,000,000,000 lire) are said to represent this investment, on which it is reasonable to expect a return of profits. It is customary to place on the producers the blame for immoral films; the producers, on the other hand, blame the public. Thus comes about the vicious circle, since the producers are urged on by the lure of monetary gain to give the public that which they feel the public desires, and the public, in turn, seems to demand such films as accede to the public desires!

Now, American producers (who are the most interested in the world film market) have courageously broken this vicious circle by means of this self-imposed self-censorship. To the public they say: In the future, we pledge ourselves to give you films which are both attractive and varied as to subject, and, at the same time, clean. Now, we expect you of the public, if you are upright, to patronize these films, and we invite your criticism if you are in accord with our Code of self-censorship.

Application

In fact, during this first year of application of the Code, even though the record has not been perfect, there has taken place in America a noticeable improvement in conditions affecting the production of new films, together with a more active cooperation as concerns helpful criticism on the part of the public and the press which guides public opinion. True there has not been lacking extreme criticism on the part of some. "Puritanism," for instance, finds the Code "too liberal" and not "prohibitive" enough.

Truth and rectitude, as concerns public performances, lie in the happy medium, in which the Code lies also, as recognized by His Eminence, Cardinal Mundelein, as above-quoted, and as can be judged by every man of common sense who reads the Code, which was published in full in the June, 1931, number of Rivista del Cinematographo.

In conclusion, we find:

1. That the Code is a very important undertaking as concerns the improvement of films in the entire world (it has been calculated that close on to 300,000,000 persons view, every week, films produced in America). Because of this, it is imperative that we encourage these American producers to observe the Code in question, and

2. It is necessary that those influencing public opinion, as well as the press, both the daily newspapers and the magazines, should make known this Code and should contribute by means of their criticisms, toward having it supported and observed.

It would be a grave mistake if we should neglect such a propitious occasion to cooperate towards the improvement of such a powerful and universal means of propagating ideas and principles bearing so importantly on the life and habits of humanity throughout the entire world.

the amplifier; and he declared invalid Western Electric's Lowenstein patent (No. 1,231,764) covering the "grid-bias."

All the points in Judge Galston's ruling are subject to further court hearings. Wallerstein is appealing to the court of appeals against the decision declaring infringements upon three patents and Western Electric is appealing to the same courts for a reversal of the decision declaring the Lowenstein patent invalid and against the decision that the Pacent equipment does not infringe the Blattner patent.

It may be expected that the case will be carried to the court of last resort.

The Aleograph Case

The federal court, western division of Texas, has ruled that the Western Electric reproducing equipment does not infringe upon a patent (No. 1,494,514) held by the Aleograph Company relating to the synchronization of pictures and sound on disc. Again the decision is being appealed. The Aleograph Company wishes the "No Infringement" decision reversed and the Western Electric Company is pressing its claim that the patent of the Aleograph Company is invalid. The appeal probably will be heard this fall.

The Western Electric Company has established its claims of patent infringement against the Maiden Toledo Company of Toledo, manufacturers of loudspeakers, and the Silverphone Company of Toledo, makers of complete theatre talking picture equipment. The cases were brought in the federal court, northern district of Ohio. In neither case was a defense offered and in both cases a decree was entered holding the patents ruled upon valid and infringed and a permanent injunction was granted.

Kersten Infringement Is Ruling

In the case of the Western Electric Company versus the Kersten Radio Equipment Company, the federal court of the western district of the southern division of Michigan has upheld the validity of two Western Electric patents covering the loudspeaker and the loudspeaker diaphragm respectively, and has ruled that they were infringed by the Kersten product.

These, to date, are the complaints that have progressed to a decision or to some degree of finality in the courts.

Suit has been begun in the southern district of California by Orlando E. and Mary G. Kellum charging infringement of Kellum patent (No. 1,294,672), relating to a method of assembling phonograph and picture records, by a number of defendants including Erpi and a number of producers. The suit is not being actively pushed.

Other Cases Pending

In addition the Western Electric has brought action against the Pacent Company, the Stanley Company of America (for the use of Pacent equipment in a Stanley Company theatre), the Biophone Company, the Amplion Company and General Talking Pictures.

Some of these cases have been pending in the courts a considerable time. They have been delayed, in many instances, by mutual consent pending the outcome of the Sol Wallerstein case because similar questions are involved.

With the mainly favorable decision of the district courts in the Wallerstein case, Western Electric considers itself apparently in a favorable position to proceed immediately with the other cases.

The result is that the patent field, while still far from clear, gives a much happier prospect of being cleared up rapidly than it did six months ago. Allowing for the time needed for the appeals and technical motions, it would be too optimistic to hope that the adjudication of patent rights in the talking picture field will be fully completed for at least another year.

The question of patent rights on recording equipment and processes—it is to be noted that all cases mentioned in the foregoing have dealt with reproducing equipment—is a field that has been relatively untouched by the filing of complaints. One of the reasons for this is that the number of companies doing recording is very small. Another is that recording, to a large extent, involves the same patents under litigation in the reproducing controversy. It may be that any action in the recording field will wait until the reproducing patent rights have been fully established.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

FOR the past six months we have witnessed that optimistic cross section of the business world assuming a determined cheerfulness, like the boy who whistles to keep up his courage. We find crisp slogans sandwiched in between editorial paragraphs, posters in subways, a presidential committee on relief circularizing the nation with a human interest appeal to paint now, overhaul the plumbing, shingle the roof, transplant the garden—in other words, put money into circulation and give men work to do.

If this psychology becomes an influencing factor on the nation, the theatres will catch the first symptoms of prosperity on the rebound. In September 1,000 motion picture houses that have been darkened for many months will open their doors again. Their owners and managers, believing that better times are around the corner, are going to take their chance. But a thousand more theatres also means a division of the patronage that has been lower than average during the past year. It means that the theatre man who is a good business man will study the psychology of his public more thoughtfully than he has ever done.

The "Daddy Long Legs" Lesson

The public relations department of the Will Hays office has been making a careful study of those factors and conditions that are influencing audience reaction. They have compiled statistics, tabulated a comparative record of the season's successes, and against these items they have placed the editorial comments of the newspapers of the country.

The most interesting single result obtained from this analysis showed the box office and press reception accorded to "Daddy Long Legs." A large, square page of reprints on the picture has been mailed out by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and because Fox publicity men had no professional finger in its making, the page becomes an arresting lesson to all companies. Titled "This Is What They're Saying," it lists headline comments and editorials from the leading newspapers of the country. In New York City the picture at the Roxy, competing with the heat, Coney Island and the other summer influences, brought into the box office the sensational total of $100,883! On its second week in the same theatre it won a larger return than most features in their first week, totaling for the 14-day period $178,383. The headlines on the reprint sheet run as follows:

"Long Legs" Walks into Second Toronto Week.

"Long Legs" Is Lead-off in Montreal.

"Long Legs" Leader in Off-Week in Oklahoma City.

Gaynor Film Best of Year at Indiana House.

"Legs" Leads the Race in Second Baltimore Week.

"Daddy" Beats Average Minneapolis Take $12,000.

"Legs" Lifts Omaha House Gross $5,000.

"Long Legs" Ahead in Philadelphia.

"Long Legs" Denver's Bright Ray; Gets $14,000.

"Long Legs" Phenomenal in Albany Run.

"Long Legs" Scores High in Providence.

"Daddy Long Legs" panics Buffalo Runs.

Gaynor Film Scores $19,500 in Cleveland.

"Daddy Long Legs" Complete Triumph—Detroit News.

"Long Legs" Ahead in Third Week in Portland.

"Legs" Hikes Omaha House Gross $8,000.

"Long Legs" High in Cincinnati.

The spontaneous public reaction to a simple and clean picture brought about the important press comment. The Detroit Free Press said: "Flooded with sweetness, purity and sunshine, the picture stands alone like a lily in the morass of indecent underworld and sex pictures with which the silver screen has been darkened." The Chattanooga News in a leading editorial asks: "What Does the Public Really Want?" and answers its own question this way: "The answer may be found in the reception being given to "Daddy Long Legs," a refreshing talkie to which we hereby give free publicity. The film brings romance, happiness and laughter to all who see it, and crowds stretching away along the sidewalks are proof enough that the public wants to be happy. This is the type of picture that will revive the faltering cinema."

In heat-baked Topeka, Kan., "Daddy Long Legs" played in a theatre that was not in the luxurious refrigerated class. The week—one of the hottest in 1931—brought to Topeka "White Shoulders," in a theatre with an elaborate cooling system. But the crowds passed up the "hot" picture for the hot theatre with the filmed story of young love, of laughter, and the stuff day dreams are made of.

This is a lot of space to give to "Daddy Long Legs," but the story presents an important fact for our consideration. The coming season's prosperity in the picture business needs more than the brave help of posters, slogans, and company announcements. The public evidently will buy if it is tempted with the right kind of wares. And by long odds, at the present writing, it looks as if "Daddy Long Legs" were one of the right kinds.

Watch for These!

There are several outstanding family audience pictures in the new fall schedules that should bring a new big business to the box office. This department will be glad to provide full pre-release information on any of the following:

"Danger Island," "East of Borneo," "The Spirit of Notre Dame," "Salomy Jane," "Young America," "Riders of the Purple Sage," "The Rainbow Trail," "Penrod and Sam," "Snakes Alive," "Alice in Wonderland," "Huckleberry Finn," "Merely Mary Ann" and a dozen more.

Late September Suggestions

Saturday, September 26, is an excellent Junior Matinee date on which to do honor to the American Indian. The official date set aside by the Government is September 24.

If possible, invite as guests of honor members of an Indian family. It is an occasion for the revival of stories of tribal life, of Indian folk lore and poetry, and for most interesting lobby decorations with Indian relics, art work, blankets and baskets on display. It is a day on which the alert theatre man will invite officers of women's clubs, community representatives, school principals and teachers of history and English to be his guests at a distinguished program. School children might be invited to present a tableau in Indian costume, or songs suitable for the day. It has been suggested that a splendid competition could be arranged through a display of Indian dolls, the theatre to offer a prize.

There are some particularly fine features and short pictures available for Indian Day, some of which are:

FEATURES:

"Silent Enemy" (Indian Life of today), Paramount, 7,551 feet, a picture reaching epic proportions. It features a tremendous animal hunt over the frozen wastes of the North, to which the Indians have been driven by encroaching civilization. There they make their last stand against hunger, which is their "silent enemy." This picture is well worth bringing to your community for so significant an occasion.

"Savages" (Indian Life), Talking Picture Epics, 5 reels, silent.

SHORTS:

"Little Indian Weaver," RKO-Pathe, 1 reel.

"Moon Bride's Wedding" (U. S. Indian Band), Paramount, 1 reel.

"Paleface Pup" (Fable), RKO Pathe, 1 reel.

Saturday, September 26, is one day after the birthday of Balboa, the Spanish explorer, who discovered the Pacific Ocean in 1513. Children's programs on this date should bear some reference to the historic importance of the Balboa's great adventure. It is a day for the display of the Spanish flag as well as the Stars and Stripes and a tempting opportunity for the use of gay local color in your theatre decorating and advertising. Dress the doorman in the swashbuckling splendor of the Spanish explorer. Announce a Spanish costume contest. Offer small Spanish flags as attendance prizes. The program may be enlivened by the following shorts:

"Sunset Hunter" (Bruce Scenic), Paramount, 1 reel.

"Bird Islands of Peru," Talking Picture Epics, 2 reels.

"Bull Thrower" (Cartoon—bull fighter), RKO-Pathe.

"Busy Barcelona" (Around the World Series), M-G-M.

"By the Sea" (Terrytoon), Educational, 1 reel.

"The Castaway" (Mickey Mouse Shipwrecked), Columbia, 1 reel.

"Glorious Spain" (Vagabond Series), RKO-Pathe.

"Pirates" (Novelty), M-G-M, 2 reels.

"Ship Ahoy" (Fable), RKO-Pathe, 1 reel.

"Spain's Maddest Fiesta," M-G-M, 1 reel.

"Well of Fortleza" (Vagabond Series), RKO-Pathe.

Detailed information on any of these "days" or pictures is available to you through this department. Tell us how we may help you.

Distributors Sue Boehringer at New Orleans on Holdovers

Fox, M-G-M, Warners and Vitagraph, Inc., have filed damage suits in federal court at New Orleans against Ernest Boehringer, operator of the Temple and People's theatres at Baton Rouge, La., Plaintiffs charge that the theater man violated the copyright provisions of pictures which he contracted to run at his shows. Instead of showing pictures only on dates stipulated, he screened the films on additional dates, the suits claim. The plaintiffs ask that they be awarded damages of not less than $250 for each day that any of the pictures were shown on dates other than provided for in contracts.

Joel Cohen Passes on Coast

Joel C. Cohen, 69-year-old showman, died at San Francisco after a heart attack. Cohen was prominent in the theatrical business in San Francisco and the Hawaiian islands.

Circuit of Studio Houses Planned on Coast by Franklin

The new "Studio" theatre, 300 seater at Los Angeles, is the forerunner of a circuit of modernistic automatic houses in miniature which Hughes-Franklin plan to build along the West Coast. Three sites in principal Coast keys are in line as the immediate nucleus of the group.

Plans of future structures will be identical with the Studio house in L. A., including automatic "doormen," automatic drinking fountain and other devices.

Finney Nominated To Head A.M.P.A.

Nomination of Ed Finney of United Artists for the presidency of the A. M. P. A. was announced by the nominating committee following a meeting late this week. Elections will be held September 1.

The following nominations also were made:

George Bilson of First National, vice president.

Marvin Kirsch of The Film Daily, treasurer.

Al Sherman of The Morning Telegraph, secretary.

Bruce Gallup, a three year trustee.

Kelcey Allen of Women's Wear, a two year trustee.

Mike Simmons, vincent Trotta, Paul Benjamin, Al Selig and Charles W. Barrell, the board of directors.

George Harvey, Rutgers Nielson and Tom Hamlin, auditing committee.

Paramount Limits Validity Of Scrip for New Stock

Scrip certificates for issue to stockholders on the basis of the 2½ percent stock dividend voted by Paramount in lieu of the usual 62½ cents cash quarterly disbursement on the common stock outstanding, will be good only until September 30, 1936, according to a supplementary letter to stockholders from Adolph Zukor, head of the company.

It is announced that the additional common stock will be capitalized on the books at $25 a share, and earned surplus of this amount will be transferred to capital account for each share issued.

Based on paid-in capital, Paramount stock will be valued at $39.87 per share following the new issue. The present value on this basis is $40.24.

Canadian Unit and General in Ad Reel Hookup Involving 1,200

General Business Films, through which Publix handles sponsored reels, and Canadian M. P. Advertising Co., Toronto, have tied up in a deal which makes available 1,200 theatres in the U. S. and Canada for showing of ad reels handled by each company. Canadian M. P. Advertising claims 500 theatres, showing to 800,000 daily.

DISTRIBUTORS ADOPT CONTRACT OF 5-5-5

shut down, will again be called into lively functioning.

"The result will be," observed the motion picture authority on litigations and controversy, "that now the exhibitors with honest differences will go to arbitration, and that arbitration can and will take care of not less than 90 per cent of such differences. Meanwhile the malcontent who wants a court fight can still enjoy it and take the consequences."

Action of the distributors in accepting adoption was individual, each company deciding in advance what action was to be taken. A vote proved to be unanimous in favor of adoption.

Myers Sees Approval

Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, when told of the distributors' action, said: "In my judgment, any step in the direction of standardized fairness will meet with the approval of the theatre owner and prove beneficial to the distributor as well, by restoring greater certainty in the trade and by simplifying and expediting sales.

"I hope, however, the understanding reached at the 5-5-5 conferences in Atlantic City (early in 1930) will be carried out as then developed, as a measure to revive confidence between buyer and seller."

Kent, likewise, believes "the adoption of the 5-5-5 contract will be advantageous to both sides.

"It seems to me," he said, "that the contract must prove to be more acceptable in that it emphasizes uniformity in practice, and uniformity in this or any other business is to be desired.

"Use of the contract should result in averting confusion in future deliberations between the exhibitor and the exchange."

However, if Allied or MPTOA interests should request a further joint meeting, it is understood that such request will be granted, with the thought in mind that a final huddle on the contract's details will once and for all dispose of all problems.

All Sales Managers Attend

Where theatre owners insist upon switching over from individual distributor contracts to the new uniform agreement, this will be done, although the machinery necessary to handle the uniform contract could not be placed in working order before January 1.

Sales managers of all companies attended the conference, a three-hour affair, each accompanied by legal representatives from home offices. Kent was chairman. Others attending included Felix F. Feist, MGM; Phil Reisman, Universal; Ned Depinet, RKO-Pathe; Lou Metzger, Columbia. General managers who were unable to attend sent representatives.

Just what influence the distributors' decision will have on the proposed National Protest Day, planned for September 1 at the Hotel Astor by exhibitors, is a matter for speculation.

The proposed Standard Exhibition Contract, which embodied the agreements reached by exhibitors and distributors at the so-called 5-5-5 conferences, was drafted as a result of the Thacher decree outlawing the arbitration system which had been the basis of settlement of contractual differences in the industry.

The Thacher decree of 1929 resulted in chaos in the handling of distributor-exhibitor problems because the distributors thereby could not enforce contracts. A solution was presented at the meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio at Columbus in September, 1929. This convention was attended by Sidney R. Kent, Paramount distribution executive, Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States, and C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays office.

How 5-5-5 Started

Kent suggested that the distributors and exhibitors get together and cooperate in settling the problem. Each group chose five representatives to a conference to be held later. There were five representing the distributors, five from the MPTOA, five from Allied States, and five representing affiliated exhibitors, though the last-named five were not to have voting power.

Each group submitted proposals. The 5-5-5 conference met on these in New York and reached a tentative agreement on clarifying of the main issues. Then each group picked two representatives and these undertook the remainder of the work. The 2-2-2 reported back to the 5-5-5 at Atlantic City in July, 1930. Here agreement was effected on practically all the points of difference. Only a few details remained to be ironed out.

It is individual company practice clashing with the decisions of the 5-5-5 conference that prompted the Allied States charges just made.

Leading Trades to Discuss Trust Law Modernization

Leading industries, including oil, textile, radio and aviation, and also labor interests, have indicated their intention of participating in the discussions to be sponsored by New York University in an effort to "reconcile divergent views" with respect to revision of the anti-trust laws to meet new economic conditions.

It is also expected that William J. Donovan, former assistant attorney general, who handled various investigations of the film industry for the government, will also join in the hearings.

U's "Waterloo Bridge" Is Set in 98 First-Runs

Day and date showing of Universal's "Waterloo Bridge" in 98 first-run theatres has been signed for Labor Day Week. The picture was shown to bookers of RKO, which has contracted for all Universal product of the new season, and to bookers of the Warner and Publix circuits, shortly after the print reached the New York office of Universal.

$2,613,600 WARNER LOSS FOR QUARTER

Net Off $4,334,738 for Nine Months Period

Includes Write-Down of $3,073,368 on Inventories and Accounts Receivable of Non-Film End

[Warner balance sheet appears on the next page.]

Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. reported for the quarter ended May 30, 1931, a consolidated net loss of $2,613,600.47, after deducting all charges including interest and depreciation.

For the nine months ended May 30, 1931, the company reports a net loss of $4,334,738,13. which net loss includes the write-down of $3,073,368.53 in respect of inventories and accounts receivable of the radio and record division shown in the February 28, 1931, statement.

For the nine months, net earnings available for all interest, including the interest requirements on the optional 6 per cent convertible debentures, series due 1939, after deducting all charges including the write-down of $3,073,368.53, but before amortization and depreciation of fixed properties, was $8,215,099.42—equivalent to over 1.62 times the consolidated interest charges.

Detailed income account for the quarter appears in the adjoining columns.

During the quarter ended May 30, 1931, a special charge-off amounting to $2,073,230.21 was made to surplus account to write down the plant and equipment of the radio and record divisions.

The consolidated balance sheet herewith, as of May 30, 1931, shows a current ratio of over 1.94 to 1. Total current assets were $30,997,521.79 as compared with total current liabilities of $15,960,639.63. Cash on hand amounted to $4,013,841.71, while notes payable were $2,051,680.84.

"The company today has no bank loans and cash on hand is more than sufficient to meet the requirements for the interest on the Debentures and the dividend on the Preferred Stock payable Sept. 1, 1931," President Harry M. Warner stated. On July 16, 1931, the company deposited with the trustee $1,300,500, principal amount of optional 6 per cent convertible debentures, series due 1939, in satisfaction of the annual purchase fund requirements due August 1, 1931.

"While the operations for the quarter ending August 29, 1931, will result in a loss, there has been a notable pickup in business during the past few weeks, and the outlook for the coming year is encouraging. The reception by the public of recent pictures such as "Night Nurse," "Smart Money," "Star Witness" and "Bought" has been most gratifying and is reflected in increased box-office receipts of our theatres.

"We have sixteen pictures of our new season's product completed and ready for release, including "Alexander Hamilton," with George Arliss; "Five Star Final," with Edward G. Robinson; "Mad Genius," with John Barrymore, and "Road to Singapore." with William Powell.

"Our Brooklyn studio is operating at capacity in the production of Vitaphone short subjects, while our Hollywood studio will resume the first week in September."

Yates' American Record Branching Out Under Goetz

American Record Corporation, one of the largest popular priced record manufacturers, and owned by H. J. Yates and Setay Corporation, will invade six new fields in the amusement industry.

Under supervision of Charles S. Goetz, American will begin immediately to manufacture and market, through local dealers, a home talker projector, complete shows for which will be supplied by the company.

Making of electrical transcriptions for radio advertisers, using popular personalities, has already commenced and will be followed by the production of motion picture discs and the making of Philharmonic orchestrations especially for theatres.

A new department will handle plating and pressing of records, while arrangements now are in work for establishing a talent bureau for record and radio performances. American plans to book talent through radio stations on a national scale and also electrical transcriptions for national advertisers.

Frank Hennigs will assist Goetz, continuing in complete charge of production.

Active Management of Loew's Ohio Circuit to Parent Unit

Loew's Ohio Theatres, headquarters at Cleveland, becomes a division of Loew's Inc., on September 1. The circuit will be operated as a separate unit, with Fred Desberg remaining in charge. Desberg will also have charge of certain national interests for Loew's.

W. A. Finney, district manager, will move headquarters from Cleveland to Columbus, while H. M. Addison becomes supervisor of theatres out of Cleveland, having been transferred from Pittsburgh. H. M. Maloney, supervisor of the local chain of Loew houses, will become manager of one of the large eastern Loew houses.

Zeppelin Material in Fox Reel To Aid in Recharting North

The recent Graf Zeppelin exploration to the Arctic and Franzjosephland revealed inaccuracies in existing maps covering this territory and geographical experts will immediately start work re-vamping territorial lines covering the north.

Fox Newsreel films taken on board in sound by Bob Hartman, of the Fox Berlin staff, will aid immeasurably, it is said, in the rechartering. Material used by Fox in the reel, released in three newsreel issues, was arranged for by Ben Higgins, European newsreel chief for the company.

Publix Buys All United Product of 1931-32 for Circuit

The entire United Artists product for 1931-32 will be shown in 800 Publix theatres throughout the country, as the result of negotiations just completed by Al Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of United Artists. Thus Fox and Publix have taken the U. A. output in the same week.

In order to discourage anybody contemplating criminal acts District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan of Brooklyn invited Fox Movietone News to make pictures of a confession by a holdup man, captured 13 years after the commission of the crime. The man is Elton Wing, companion of Gordon F. Hamby in the looting of the East Brooklyn Savings Bank during which two men were killed. Hamby was arrested, tried and electrocuted shortly after the crime. The faces of Cameraman Carl Larsen and Sound Engineer Charles Tice reflect the seriousness of the story being related.

Mining Sector Does Without Because Market is Unopened

Pittsburgh—There are no foreign pictures or foreign versions of American films being shown in this territory.

The mining sector here has a tremendous Italian, Polish and Czechoslovakian population and many Dutch farmers, but films in these tongues do not appear to be available. At least no attempt has been made to show them.

Foreign Talkers Have Failed To Crack New England Market

Boston—Foreign films are making little headway in this town. The Fine Arts theatre occasionally spots in a foreign dialoguer. Likewise at the Cape Cinema, on Cape Cod, where business usually is spotty, although Manager Praska reports business very good at the Fine Arts. The Repertory here formerly showed foreign films, but lack of business forced the house to close. There are no others in New England showing foreign language reels. New England has a large number of French.

Spanish Versions Used Aplenty In San Antonio and Nearby

San Antonio—Only Spanish versions are used here. Paramount offers 20, Universal ten and Independent Sack Amusements offers two native made talkers and one silent. All handle shorts. There are three Mexican wired houses, but they are frequently forced to use English talkers. The general reaction to the Hollywood Spanish versions is bad.

Foreign Dialogue Films Remain On Shelves at Kansas City

Kansas City, Mo.—Foreign version pictures have practically no market in the Kansas City territory. Some exchanges have a few prints of foreign dialogue films available, but they have not left the shelves for many months.

Warner Reports Week's Heaviest Sales on Features

The sales department of Warner-First National reports that during last week it handled the biggest volume of business it has ever known. Negotiations that had been pending for several months were brought to a head and signatures affixed in the office of Sam E. Morris closed deals that mean millions in revenue to the Warners, it is said.

Contracts include 100% showing of Warner-First National product in all Loew theatres in New York, Brooklyn, Long Island and Westchester.

Another calls for showing in all R-K-O theatres.

Initial Allied-Kinograms Reel Makes Its Bow August 28

The Allied-Kinograms newsreel-ad film will be ready for release on August 28th and although Allied States Association has not officially announced the name of the distributor, because it has not been "agreed upon," Educational has been mentioned in connection with physical handling.

A knockout. Don't miss it ... One of best of year. It has the cleverest dialog, the most inspired direction, great acting, and a most compelling, human little yarn ... James Dunn gives a remarkable performance ... In little Sally Eilers, Borzage found a thrilling, emotional little actress ... Great entertainment. Grade A film.

—New York Daily Mirror

One of the tenderest and most human of motion pictures ... So heart-warming in quality, so humanly directed by Frank Borzage, so wisely written and so perfectly played that it becomes intensely poignant. A grand motion picture.

"Another Daddy Long Legs in popular appeal. It is very rare for a star to have such good luck in two consecutive roles as has befallen Janet Gaynor, and her popularity rating should take a big jump... In fact Merely Mary Ann is just about all right in every particular. It should be even more popular than Daddy Long Legs. It is the kind of picture which keeps the great majority of the public faithful movie fans." —Chicago Evening Post

Larceny Lane

(Warner Brothers)

Racketeering

This Warner Brothers picture received an exceedingly warm reception at its preview showing at the Forum theatre in Hollywood.

The story revolves about the rackets and schemes of the "smart boys" who frequent the best hotels in the larger cities.

James Cagney, who makes his inauspicious beginning as a bellhop, is graduated to a full-fledged confidence man, relying on his clever wit and brilliantly hatched schemes to take advantage of the less wary customers who have ready dough to feed the racket's grist mill. The girl, Joan Blondell, is drawn into the easy money game by Cagney, for whom she has affection, but little respect because of his profession. She decides to stick with him, however, and aids him in pulling several tricks.

Cagney falls in with some of the real confidence men and is taken for his roll. Joan, in the meantime, learns to love another man who is on the up-and-up and marries him. Cagney comes to the rescue when her husband is involved in a theft of bonds from his brokerage firm, and when arrested, due to the trickery of her husband, takes the rap rather than involve the girl whose love he has won back. And she promises to wait.

The audience was enthusiastic in its praise of both Cagney's and Blondell's performance, and, in fact, of the whole show, according to opinions. The work of Louis Calhern, Guy Kibbee and Polly Walters pleased the audience, as did the direction of Roy Del Ruth.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Story by Kubec Glasmon and John Bright. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Photographed by Sid Hickox. Art director, Esdras Hartley. Film editor, Ralph Dawson. Release date, October 17, 1931.

The Miracle Woman

(Columbia)

Drama

Frank Capra's directorial efforts in transferring Riskin-Meehan stage play to camera and recorder won favorable comment for the humanness of the piece, in portraying love and life under the tabernacle roof of the widely-publicized present day professional evangelist.

The settings are those in which one would expect to find characters of the Billy Sunday trail as they work among the so-called "hicks." It is religion a la Barnum; dished out in circus sawdust style.

The story is interspersed with comedy snatches and it is given a touch of the spectacular when a huge tabernacle burns while hundreds attending a prayer meeting fight wildly for the exits.

Barbara Stanwyck, the daughter of a minister, blames the death of her father on inhuman treatment by the church elders who forced his resignation because of old age. A scathing pit by Barbara is noticed by Sam Hardy, a "big-city" adventurer who sells Barbara the idea of capitalizing on her oratorical powers and knowledge of biblical passages. The temple is packed nightly and Barbara is clicking tremendously when she meets David Manners, a blind aviator, whose profession of faith in the religious sham stirs Barbara to shame.

Simultaneously with strained relations with Hardy, the heartless business manager of the revival meeting, Barbara and Manners find themselves on the road to romance, all of which aggravates Hardy to the point where he threatens to expose the racket unless Barbara leaves with him for Europe.

The farewell prayer meeting is planned in grand style but Barbara's decision publicly to reveal herself as a cheat and liar is the accidental cause of the tabernacle's destruction by fire when Hardy, attempting to darken the temple, causes a short circuit in the switch control box.

And Florence and John live happily ever after.

From the play by John Meehan and Robert Riskin. Produced by Harry Cohn. Directed by Frank Capra. Continuity by Dorothy Howell. Screen play and dialogue by Jo Swerling. Photographed by Joseph Walker. Edited by Maurice Wright. Running time, 87 minutes. Release date, July 20.

13 Men and a Girl (The Last Company)

(Talking Picture Epics)

War Drama

Tragedy stalks through the Ufa production, "The Last Company," released in New York under the title "13 Men and a Girl." The somber note is reflected in the shadow effects of the opening scene when Conrad Veidt as Captain Burk receives the orders that mean inevitable death to himself and the twelve men left in his company. And the same spell of death is in the final scene, with all 13 men and the girl lifeless from the enemy bullets.

Sound, too, was used to accentuate the solemn theme. Frequent repetitions in the dialogue, the measured tramp of the captain's boots as he paced the wooden walk encircling the walls of the mill, the sentry listening to the howling wind—all served the purpose. So did the soldiers' singing, happy in its first mood but changing to the theme of inexorable fate.

Always the shadows. And throughout the deliberate movement of the action, up to the moment of actual combat.

The dialogue was English, and the English of England. The audience found some difficulty in catching parts of the reproduction.

It is the period of the Franco-Prussian war. Captain Burk, reassembling his company after the battle of Jena, finds only twelve surviving. Then comes the order that they must defend the mill on the edge of the Wiegendorf Pass to cover the retreat of two Prussian army corps. The miller, his wife, son and foster-daughter must leave. But the girl Dora (Karin Edwards) slips away and returns to the mill. She has learned to love the stern captain.

Word comes that there can be no reinforcements. The French throw down ladders and planks to bridge the gap cut in the road, and the end comes fast. One by one the defenders are killed, and with them Dora.

One point of direction that stood out was that at no time was there a hint of violation of womanhood, despite the situation.

Veidt in this production leaves the field of villainy portrayal to characterize the loyal, stern but kindly soldier and officer.

Produced by Ufa with English dialogue and distributed by Talking Picture Epics. Directed by K. Bernhardt. Release date, August 14. Running time, 63 minutes.

The Hard Hombre

(Allied Pictures)

Western

A change of pace for Hoot Gibson. He is not the hard-riding, fast-shooting hero of the usual Western, but rather "Peaceful" Patton, who has never had a fight in his life. In attempting to obtain range rights for a pretty Spanish senorita, he is mistaken for a bad man known as "The Hard Hombre." He carries on the masquerade until his mother unwittingly gives him away.

Encountering the real "Hard Hombre," Hoot is intimidated by him until the bad man lays hands on his mother. Then Hoot stages a rough and tumble that gives him the distinction of having licked "The Hard Hombre."

Hoot does some hard riding and his comedy moments drew hearty laughter from the preview audience at the Wilshire-Santa Monica theatre in California, where it was seen. Lina Basquette, sporting a pleasing Spanish accent, was considered to be excellent. Bill Robins likewise contributed some comedy that was liked as well as the camera work of Harry Neumann.

Produced by M. H. Hoffman, Jr., for Allied Pictures Corporation, Ltd. Screen play by Sidney Algier. Directed by Otto Brower. Photographed by Harry Neumann. Edited by Mildred Johnston.

Skyline

(Fox)

Drama

"Skyline," Fox's newest vehicle for Thomas Meighan, received a favorable reception at its preview showing at the Fox Huntington Park theatre in California. Although the old master, Meighan, was accorded top billing, Hardie Albright, playing a modern Horatio Alger role, ran away with first honors, according to the comments of the spectators.

"Skyline" is the story of mucky river fronts, coal barges, giant skyscrapers, enterprising New York and the rise of a young man from the drudging labor of the river to a promising career as a construction engineer.

Albright, as the young river lad, quits his

Text of Allied States' Contract Analysis

The Contract

Exhibitor Warranties

When the 5-5-5 contract was being drafted, it was considered fair, in order that pictures get a proper showing, for the exhibitor to warrant that his equipment will operate reliably and efficiently to reproduce the recorded picture, and this provision was written into the contract. The warranty that previously appeared, that the exhibitor had a license from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, was changed to read that he had an effective license from the copyright owners in order to remove from this society the whip that it had.

All contracts now in use have retained this warranty that the exhibitor equipment will operate reliably and efficiently and have gone back to the old warranty that the exhibitor has a license from the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

In addition to these provisions, Metro has a special provision whereby the exhibitor agrees to run the photoplays on the same size reel as that furnished by Metro, which means that an exhibitor cannot double up on his reels.

Warner and First National also have a special provision whereby the exhibitor agrees to have a trial run off before the first public exhibition. This is not optional, but compulsory, and at the same time is impossible for the exhibitor to carry out, since Warner and First National agree to deliver the print to the exhibitor only one hour before the first public exhibition.

Delivery, Return of Prints

Inasmuch as the exhibitor agrees to provide equipment that will operate reliably and efficiently, it was considered fair that the 5-5-5 contract include a warranty by the distributor that he would furnish a print "in physical condition for exhibition and, if a sound picture, which will clearly reproduce the recorded sound," this print to arrive in time for inspection and projection before the usual time of opening the theatre. The latter provision was inserted so that every exhibitor could have a trial run off if he desired so that he could determine at which volume he was to project the picture. Every distributor has abandoned this provision and has gone back to the old provision which required shipment to arrive one hour before the opening of the theatre, which obviously does not give time for a trial run off.

Every distributor, with the exception of Paramount and Warner-First National, warrants that the print delivered is suitable for exhibition, which would probably be interpreted to cover not only the physical condition of the print, but the sound recording, and therefore differs from the 5-5-5 contract only in that the language is not so clear. Paramount and Warner-First National say absolutely nothing about the condition of the print they are to deliver to the exhibitor—hence the exhibitor can have no complaint and no redress when he gets a bad print not suitable for public exhibition.

When the run was completed the exhibitor under the 5-5-5 contract was obligated to return the print to the distributor or ship it to another exhibitor if requested by the distributor, all charges prepaid, but if the shipment was to another exhibitor, the cost of shipment was not to exceed what it would have cost to return the print to the exchange.

All distributors, with the exception of RKO-Pathe, provide that the shipment to the exchange shall be prepaid, but to another exhibitor shall go forward charges collect. Pathe provides that the exhibitor shall prepay all charges, whether shipment is made back to the exchange or to another exhibitor, with no maximum charges as is provided in the 5-5-5 contract for the protection of the exhibitor.

Terms

Pictures Not Generally Released

The 5-5-5 contract definitely fixed the term of the contract at one year after the availability of the first picture, so that the exhibitor was contracting for one year's supply of photoplays on all of his contracts. Columbia, Fox, Metro, Paramount and Universal have all incorporated this provision into their contracts. RKO-Pathe and Warner-First National's period is 18 months after the availability of the first photoplay. RKO's period is set from September 1, 1931, to August 31, 1932, which has considerable merit because of its definiteness. United Artists' period is "One year from August 31st, following the acceptance." Exhibitors should watch this provision very carefully, for if the contract is signed immediately after August 31, it actually becomes a two-year contract, and the exhibitor must accept any of the photoplays contracted for if delivered to him within that two-year period.

If some of the photoplays contracted for were not generally released within the term of the contract, the 5-5-5 contract provided that, if the exhibitor desired the undelivered picture, it was compulsory for him to notify the distributor in writing within thirty days after the expiration of the contract, that he wanted the photoplays not then generally released, and if so notified the distributor would have to deliver these photoplays, if they were released within a period of two years. This provision was inserted for the benefit of the exhibitor, so that the distributor could not hold a "hit picture" over until after the term had expired in order to sell it on next year's contract.

Pathe, RKO and Universal have included this provision in their contracts, but Pathe and Universal provide that the notice must be sent before

Challenges Ignoring 5-5-5 Conference

September 30, 1932, een though the term in Pathe's contract is 18 months. As RKO's contract is from September 30, 1932, even though the term in Pathe's must be sent by the exhibitor before September 30, 1932, in both Pathe, Universal and RKO contracts. Fox requires that the notice be sent by September 13, 1932, and the distributor is obligated to deliver only the photoplays released within one year. Metro provides that pictures released before August 31, 1933, must be delivered and accepted by the exhibitor. This actually makes it a two-year contract in so far as delivery of photoplays contracted for is concerned, but as Metro reserves to itself the right to make "extra" pictures and other rights to be discussed later, the exhibitor may and may not get the pictures contracted for—he must perform if the distributor elects to perform.

Paramount and United Artists make no provision for pictures not generally released, and therefore the exhibitor has no claim to any photoplays that may be generally released immediately after the term of this contract has expired. Columbia provides that pictures not generally released by August 31, 1932, are automatically cancelled, and Warner-First National has a similar provision, but the date is September 15, 1932.

Protection and Runs

The 5-5-5 contract provided that, where a contract gave a theatre a period of protection, it was to start from the last day of the exhibition of the photoplay, and all distributor contracts include this provision. The 5-5-5 contract also provided that if a contract gave a theatre protection over other theatres, and a new theatre was built in that zone, and the obvious intent was that protection was to include this new theatre, even if it was not mentioned, then protection would prevail against the new theatre. Every distributor, with the exception of Warner-First National, has incorporated this provision into their contracts.

The 5-5-5 contract provided that the exhibitor could stipulate in his schedule that the playing of a photoplay by a prior run was a condition of the exhibition of the photoplay, in order that the subsequent run exhibitor would get the benefit of the publicity given the picture on the prior run. This was a new provision under the 5-5-5 contract, which had not previously appeared in any other contract. All the distributors with the exception of Universal expressly stipulate that the distributor has the option to deliver a run prior to the run contracted for. In other words, the exhibitor buys a second run, depending on the exploitation given the photoplay on the first run, and if the distributor is unable to secure a first run, or if the first run refuses to play the picture for any reason, the second run exhibitor must either pay for or play that photoplay if desired by the distributor. Metro has a provision which does not appear in any other distributor's contract, which limits the distributor's liability for violating protection to the rental of the photoplay. Universal also has a provision not appearing in any other contract, to the effect that if a photoplay is not dated, protection is forfeited after forty-five days. Fox also has a unique provision, which is entirely new in the industry, to the effect that "there is no protection on any photoplay exhibited on any double feature program."

The 5-5-5 contract also had a new provision to the effect that if protection was granted to several theatres of a class and protection was waived as to one of the theatres, protection was waived as to all in that class. This provision was inserted to prevent chain organizations having first and subsequent runs, from waiving the protection for the benefit of their own subsequent runs, and making other theatres of the same class wait until the period of protection had actually expired. This provision was dropped by all distributors from their contracts.

Payments

During the 5-5-5 conference the distributors insisted on an increase in the number of days between payment and the date of shipping from three to four days, in order to give time for the exhibitors' checks to clear, and at their request this change was incorporated into the contract. Columbia, Fox, Metro, Paramount, RKO and Universal have all gone back to the three-day basis. Warner-First National requires payment five days in advance of shipment and Pathe and United Artists seven days. Universal has also incorporated a special provision giving the distributor the right to hold up shipment of a picture although paid for, for any claim under the contract in question. Metro also incorporated this special clause, giving them the right to ship a picture C. O. D., and to include any prior claim under this or any other contract. Under this provision Metro has the right to ship a feature C. O. D. even though all pictures have previously been played according to release and paid for, and can include in the C. O. D. any claim they may have because the exhibitor failed to perform another contract Metro may have for shorts, etc.

Payment of Percentage Engagements

The 5-5-5 contract provided, when a picture was playing on a percentage basis, payment of the distributor's share, which was due daily, was to be made daily only on demand of the distributor, so that the exhibitor, unless a demand was made on him for daily payments, could send a check to the distributor at the end of the engagement. Only Warners, of all the distributors, retain this feature, and in all other cases payment must be made daily, otherwise the exhibitor is in default.

If the exhibitor fails to play a picture that he had agreed to exhibit on a percentage basis, it was provided under the 5-5-5 contract that the measure of damages was based on the business at that theatre for a period of thirty days before the picture should have been played. All distributors have incorporated this clause into their contracts.

In the event the exhibitor pulls a percentage picture before the end of the agreed run, it was provided in the 5-5-5 contract that the distributor's share would be on the basis of 65 per cent of the receipts the last day the picture was exhibited, instead of 75 per cent, which was the provision in all contracts prior to the 5-5-5 contract. All the distributors have gone back to the 75 per cent basis instead of the 65 per cent provided by the 5-5-5 contract.

The 5-5-5 contract provided that any person employed as a checker in the theatres must not be a local resident, unless he was a regular employee of the distributor. Columbia, Fox, RKO, United Artists and Universal follow the 5-5-5 contract in this regard. The 5-5-5 contract sought to protect the private business of the exhibitor by restricting the examination to be made by the checker or accountant to the actual entries relating to the receipts of that photoplay, and the period of examination was limited to four months. Columbia, Fox, RKO, and Universal permit the examination of all books without restriction for a period of sixty days. Paramount permits the examination of all books for a period of four months, Pathe and United Artists for twelve months, and Metro and Warner-First National permit the examination of all books at any time. In addition to these provisions some distributors have special provisions which did not appear at all under the 5-5-5 contract. Columbia requires the exhibitor to keep the distributor's share separate, so if he banks the receipts, as he must do in order to send a check to the distributor, it becomes necessary for him to open a special account for the benefit of Columbia. Metro, in addition to a daily statement, requires a recapitulated statement at the end of the run, so that an exhibitor is compelled to maintain a bookkeeping department to total for Metro's benefit the various number of admissions during the entire run at the various admission prices. This is also required by Warner-First National. Metro also has a clause requiring the exhibitor to account to the distributor and pay for all passes, except those issued to newspapers and for advertising, so that when an exhibitor issues a pass to any city official and this pass is used during a percentage engagement, the exhibitor must pay the distributor, as if the city official had actually paid admission to the theatre.

Acceptance of Application

The 5-5-5 contract included the usual provisions, previously appearing in all prior contracts with reference to the matter of acceptance of applications, providing first, the application must be accepted by a duly authorized agent of the distributor; second, no money paid at the time of the signing of the application will be considered as an acceptance; third, the application be considered null and void if not accepted within a specific number of days, depending upon the distance of the exhibitor from New York; and fourth, and most important of all then existing provisions, all applications similarly dated had to be accepted or rejected as a unit. Columbia, Metro, RKO, Universal and Warner have all followed the 5-5-5 contract in this regard. Fox has included only the first two provisions, and as it probably would be held that it is customary in the industry for distributors to accept within the universally known time limit for acceptances, the only difference from the 5-5-5 contract is the clause restricting the treatment of similiarly dated applications as a unit so that Fox may accept one application and reject another, even though the exhibitor may have intended them all to go as a unit. Paramopunt and Pathe also have no provision requiring them to treat similarly dated applications as a unit, and United Artists specifically provides that they may accept any one or more of similarly dated applications. United Artists has in addition a special provision to the effect that a breach of one contract is a breach of all, and this appears rather strange in view of the fact that United Artists claims its contracts are with different producers which require the use of an individual contract system.

Admission Prices

The 5-5-5 contract carried the usual minimum price of admission of 10 cents for children or adults. All distributors, with the exception of Fox, carry the 10 cent minimum admission. Fox requires a minimum admission of 15 cents, and inasmuch as an exhibitor cannot change his admission prices from day to day, it follows that any exhibitor using Fox pictures must maintain a minimum admission price of 15 cents, and therefore Fox will receive the credit (?) for increasing the cost of entertainment to all children in the entire United States. In addition many distributors have a schedule of admission prices which the exhibitor must maintain during the life of the contract. This appears on all contracts with the exception of United Artists, so that, if an exhibitor permits the distributor salesman to fill in the admission prices on this schedule, the exhibitor is left in a position where he cannot alter his admission prices, regardless of the change in conditions. The exhibitor, therefore, should be extremely careful not to permit the salesman to fill out this schedule, or, if he does permit it to be filled out, he should state an admission price that he is positive he will be able to maintain throughout the year.

Selection of Play Dates

The 5-5-5 contract provided the distributor should give the exhibitor at least fifteen days' notice when the picture would be available to him. The exhibitor was obligated, within fourteen days after the mailing of the notice, to select play dates to be within thirty days' from the availability date. This notice was not to be sent by the distributor before the print was in the Exchange and available for booking. Up to this point the provision was exactly as in the 1928 Standard contract. In order that subsequent runs would not be held up due to the first run's failure to select dates, the distributor was not compelled to assign dates, but it was provided that the first run exhibitor lost protection 120 days after the general release date. All distributors have included in their contracts the provision re mailing availability notices, as in the 5-5-5 contract. Only Metro, Pathe, and Universal provide that this notice is to be sent after the print is in the exchange. In the event the exhibitor fails to select play dates it is provided in the contracts of Columbia, Fox, Pathe and United Artists that the distributor may designate play dates. Metro and Paramount contracts provide that if the exhibitor fails to designate play dates the distributor may designate them in the case of first runs and shall designate them in the case of subsequent runs. RKO provides that if the exhibitor fails to select play dates the money becomes due and protection is lost.

There is an entirely new provision appearing in the contracts of Columbia, Fox and Warner-First National to the effect that, if a prior run changes its dates after the subsequent runs have selected dates, the subsequent runs will have to change their dates to conform to the protection period granted the first run.

Dating in Order of Release

The 5-5-5 contract provides that an exhibitor must play photoplays in order of their general release, but in order to give the exhibitor a little leeway it was provided he could play a picture out of order, provided he dated and played the prior releases within a period of thirty days. This provision was something new, and was inserted in the 5-5-5 contract. All distributors provide in their contracts that the exhibitor must play in the order of release, with absolutely no leeway.

Midnight Shows

No mention was made of midnight shows in the 5-5-5 contract because at that time this practice had not appeared in the industry. Fox has followed the 5-5-5 contract, and therefore there is no restriction about playing their photoplays at midnight performances. Columbia, Paramount, Pathe, RKO, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National provide that there must be no exhibition before 6 a.m. on the first day of showing, and Metro provides there must be no exhibition between midnight and 6 a.m. during the run. Therefore, under Metro's contract, midnight shows are impossible at any time, and under all other contracts they are prohibited only on the first day.

Option to Exclude Pictures

The 5-5-5 contract gave the exhibitor the right to exclude without payment 5 per cent. of the pictures purchased under a contract of twenty or more, provided the average price of the photoplays purchased did not exceed $250 either flat rental or percentage. Under Columbia and Fox contracts the exhibitor has the right to exclude 10 per cent. of the pictures by paying 50 per cent. rental, provided the exhibitor purchased all pictures offered him. This was a provision from the previous standard contract in use before the 5-5-5 was drafted. All other distributors give the exhibitor absolutely no right to exclude any photoplay. The exhibitor should be careful in seeing that the schedule referring to the number of pictures offered and the number purchased is filled out in order that he may not lose his right to exclude. Warner-First National contract has a schedule indicating the number of pictures offered and contracted for, but this is merely a surplusage, as the only reason for the inclusion of this schedule was to take care of cases where the exhibitor is given the right of exclusion by paying one-half, and Warner-First National give no right of exclusion.

Racial and Religious Exclusion

Under the 5-5-5 contract the distributor had the right to exclude a picture if in his opinion to show it in the exhibitor's city would be objectionable on racial and religious grounds, and this picture so excluded could not be shown in any other theatre in that city. If the exhibitor thought that the exhibition of a photoplay would be objectionable on racial or religious grounds, he had the right to have the matter referred to arbitration for a decision, and if they decided it was objectionable, the exhibitor need not show this picture. Columbia and Metro follow the 5-5-5 contract, Pathe and RKO give the distributor the right to exclude pictures on racial and religious grounds and Fox only gives the exhibitor the right to exclude after the matter has been passed upon by arbitrators. Neither party has the right to exclude under the contracts of Paramount, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National.

Road Shows

The 5-5-5 contract provided that the distributor could road show and exclude from the contract in the territory where road showed, not over two photoplays, but required that the road show would be at an admission price of $1.00 at least for the majority of the orchestra seats at an evening performance. In the event that the distributor did road show and exclude from the contract this photoplay, the exhibitor had the right to cancel from the contract one photoplay for each photoplay so excluded. Columbia, Metro and RKO have followed the provisions of the 5-5-5 contract. Fox included the provision of the 5-5-5 contract and further provided that the distributor may elect to road show a photoplay and not exclude it from the contract, in which event the exhibitor must exhibit this picture when it becomes available to him after it has completed road showing anywhere in the United States. Under the Paramount contract, the distributor has the right to road show any and all pictures provided $1.00 admission is charged, and Paramount cannot exclude these pictures which are road showed, but the exhibitor must exhibit them when they become available to him after the completion of the road showing anywhere in the United States. Pathe may road show and exclude four pictures, and requires the road showing to be merely an advance in prices at one week, but the exhibitor has the right to cancel one picture for each picture so road showed and excluded. United Artists contract also has a road show clause, and as photoplays on their contract are bought on an individual basis, it follows that United Artists may road show and exclude any and all pictures providing they are shown at an advance in prices for one week. The distributor further reserves the right not to exclude these pictures, and the exhibitor must run these pictures when they become available to him, and under United Artists contract a road show at an advance in prices in any one city in the United States gives the distributor the right to exclude that photoplay from all contracts in the United States. The Universal contract provides the distributor may road show four pictures at $1 admission prices, and the exhibitor's run is postponed. If the road show is shown in three cities, Universal has the option to exclude this picture from the contract but may exclude not more than two pictures of the four road showed. For each picture Universal elects to exclude from the contract, the exhibitor has the right to exclude one photoplay. It must be clearly understood, however, that if Metro and Fox do not elect to exclude pictures road showed, the exhibitor must run the photoplay when it becomes available. Warner-First National contract gives the distributor the right to road show any and all pictures provided they are shown at an advance in price on a two-a-day basis. The distributor may not exclude them, but the exhibitor has no right to cancel, and must run the pictures road shown when available to him.

Reissues

Under the 5-5-5 contract the distributor warranted that no re-issues will be delivered unless specifically mentioned in the schedule. All distributors, with the exception of Paramount, have included this warranty in their contracts, and since the Paramount contract gives no list of photoplays in its contract, it is within the right of the distributor to deliver any number of re-issues.

Substitution of Stories, Stars, Etc.

Under the 5-5-5 contract an exhibitor need not accept a photoplay when a story, book, director or star or combination of stars was substituted. Columbia, Metro, Pathe, RKO and Universal provide the exhibitor need not accept a photoplay when a book, play, director or star has been substituted. United Artists' does not require the exhibitor to accept the substitution of a director or star, but reserves the right to change any story, book or play. Under the Fox contract the distributor reserves the right to change the stars or director from the list scheduled, but the exhibitor need not accept the substitution of a story, if the story is scheduled. Under this contract, therefore, the exhibitor can claim only that stories scheduled be delivered to him, as the distributor is given a wide latitude as to changing stars and directors. The Paramount contract contains no provision with reference to substitutions, and inasmuch as they do not list any stars, stories or directors in their schedule, the exhibitor must accept any photoplay offered. Warner-First National reserve the right to change the title and alter the story, but the exhibitor can reject any picture where the schedule specified star, story or director.

Delay and Prevention

Under the 5-5-5 contract, if performance of either the distributor or exhibitor was unavoidably prevented, the license of such a photoplay was terminated if a reasonable written notice was given. The contracts of Columbia, Metro, Pathe, RKO, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National provide if the exhibitor is delayed or prevented he is excused from performing, and the time of performance is extended, but if delayed for three months either party may cancel, and if the distributor is delayed or prevented from performing, the distributor is excused, and the exhibitor must accept any delayed picture when it becomes available. The contract of Fox is not so arbitrary—it provides, if a delay of three months is caused by either side, either party may cancel. At least three months as the time of performing is extended the distributor by Paramount, and the ex-

CITE PROVISIONS GRANTED—AND LOST

hibitor's failure to perform is excusable only by an act of God or a public enemy, which practically means the exhibitor is never excused, whereas the distributor's delay or performance or prevention is excused for any reason.

Advertising by Exhibitors

Under the 5-5-5 contract the exhibitor had the right to advertise coming photoplays inside his theatre at any time, even before a prior run exhibition had been completed, and he was permitted to advertise in the papers even before the prior run if his opening date was within fifteen days of the closing date of the prior run. The contracts of Columbia, Fox, Metro, Paramount, RKO and Universal prohibit subsequent runs from any advertising whatsoever, either inside the theatre or outside, until the completion of the first run. Pathe and United Artists permit advertising inside the theatre at any time, and newspaper or outside advertising only after the completion of the next prior run. Warner-First National prohibit any advertising whatsoever until the completion of the prior run.

Accessories

Under the 5-5-5 contract the exhibitor agreed not to sell or lease any accessories that he might buy from the distributor. The contracts of Columbia, Fox, Metro, Paramount, RKO, Universal, Warner-First National require the exhibitor to buy all accessories from the distributor, and the exhibitor agrees not to sell, loan or give away the accessories purchased from the distributor. Pathe, in addition to requiring all the accessories to be bought from the distributor, will not permit the selling, loan, or gift of any of them, and requires the exhibitor to pay for all advertising two weeks before play date, and further requires the exhibitor to return all accessories on demand. United Artists contract requires the exhibitor not only to refrain from selling, loaning or giving away the accessories, but also requires him to destroy all accessories immediately after the closing performance.

Warranty No Paid Advertising

The distributor warranted under the 5-5-5 contract that the photoplays contained no advertising for which compensation had been received. This provision is included in Fox, Metro, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National contracts. No similar provision is included in Columbia, Paramount, Pathe, RKO, so these distributors are not precluded from showing paid advertisements in their feature photoplays on exhibitors' screens. In addition to the above 20 clauses there are several clauses in all contracts that are substantially alike, and do not differ from similar clauses in the 5-5-5 contract. These include the provisions concerning Liquidated Damages, Loss and Damage to Prints, Taxes, Assignment in Case of Sale, and Waiver of Breach. All contracts have included a provision that if zoning and protection is set up the protection granted in the contract is to be changed to conform to the zoning and protection as set up.

In one particular instance all contracts differ essentially from the 5-5-5 contract, and that is the absence of any provisions for voluntary arbitration. As the contracts now read, there is absolutely no arbitration in the industry except where the exhibitor desires to exclude because of racial or religious grounds, and all disputes must be left for courts to decide. Thus the real bone of contention that the distributors wanted in contracts so badly has been entirely abandoned by them. It should be noted that Fox had a provision for voluntary arbitration in a contract form printed in June, but it does not appear in a later form.

All contracts give the distributor the right to record on disc or film and only RKO and Universal provide a place where the exhibitor may designate the type of sound equipment he has. It is necessary for every exhibitor to protect himself by writing in a clause in which he states whether he has disc or film equipment and providing that he shall not be required to accept a print recorded in a manner that he is not equipped to reproduce.

There are several new clauses appearing in some of the contracts, and these will be noted here briefly.

Columbia has a consolidation clause to the effect that a breach of any contract gives the distributor all rights under his contract. Under this provision, the distributor could hold up features if there was any default in the contract for shorts. Columbia has also a provision that in the event of any lawsuit the exhibitor shall pay the distributor counsel fees which are arbitrarily fixed at 10 per cent of the amount awarded. RKO-Pathe also has a consolidated clause which ties together all contracts signed in the same releasing year.

RKO has a consolidation clause, a classification clause permitting the distributor to designate not more than two pictures to be played on percentage, and is also permitted to change the classification of rental pictures. This classification clause appears also in the contracts of Columbia, Metro, Warner-First National and Universal. This is an innovation in contracts and should be watched very carefully by all exhibitors, for it is possible under this clause for the distributor to allocate high rentals on photoplays he probably will not make, then interchange these for pictures sold at a low figure that turn out to be good. It is also possible for the distributor to juggle the prices to his advantage when he decides to hold over the releasing date of a picture beyond the releasing year, which the exhibitor under some contracts will never get unless he buys it again.

Metro has a new provision never heard of before this year, giving the distributor the right to make three additional pictures of any star already sold, and if made are not included in the contract. This gives the distributor the right to designate any hit as a special and an inferior picture of the same star at any later date.

TABLE SUMMARIZES ALLIED'S FINDINGS

Conclusion

In the introduction to this article the history of the 5-5-5 conference was briefly reviewed, together with the events of the recent past which led up to the 1931-32 contracts. In the body of the article, and in the accompanying chart, the present conditions as revealed by the contents of the current contracts have been carefully analyzed and now in natural sequence the article may be concluded with a brief consideration of what the future may hold in store for the individual independent exhibitor.

The probabilities of this future lie along one or two widely divergent paths and the course of events must be determined by the exhibitors themselves. Individually they may protest long and loudly to widely scattered salesmen and branch managers, or collectively, through the Allied States Association, under Commissioner Myers, they may speak directly to the leading distributors, to the Hays organizations or to Congress in Washington, choosing whichever source promises the most rapid relief.

A future guided by individual scattered and necessarily spasmodic complaints, could very easily result in the distributors gradually or swiftly for they would be virtually, unchecked, working towards the unanimous adoption of a contract embodying the most onerous clauses now existing. Imagine for a moment a contract reading somewhat as follows: (a) Exhibitor's equipment must satisfy the distributor and he must have an American Society of composers', authors' and publishers' license; (b) distributor will make no guarantee as to condition of print (Paramount and Warners); (c) term set by distributor, and exhibitor loses all rights to any picture distributor does not care to release therein (Columbia, Paramount, United Artists and Warners); (d) distributor will not guarantee any first or prior run showings (Columbia et al.), will grant no protection to theatres showing double feature programs (Fox), except to large chains, who on national buys make their own contracts; (e) payment must be made seven days before shipment (RKO Pathe and United Artists) and may attach extraneous C. O. D.'s to prepaid shipments (Metro); (f) distributors may use any one (employees of their affiliated theatre chains, for example) to check your theatres or to audit your books at any time (Metro et al.); (g) distributor may road show and exclude any picture, or exclude any picture by calling it an "extra" picture (Metro); (h) exhibitor must take every picture offered (Paramount et al.), can eliminate nothing even though racially or religiously objectionable to his audience (Paramount, Universal, United Artists, Warner), and must even accept reissues (Paramount).

Further provisions if such a not-at-all imaginary contract could be chosen without limit from the accompanying chart of existing clauses, but the foregoing should suffice to convince the most skeptical exhibitor of the possibilities lying in store for the individual independent exhibitor and demonstrate the absolute necessity of united action if he wishes to receive anything more than beggars' crumbs for his future film rentals.

Distributors will undoubtedly protest that no such one-sided contracts would ever be contemplated by any of them, but the points to be emphasized are: first, that almost all of the above clauses have already been adopted by one or more companies; and secondly, that at present there is nothing actually to prevent any of them from adopting just such a contract.

A future guided, however, by a strongly organized, cheerfully supported and intelligently led national organization can produce the uniform contract with its clear, short form as adopted by the 5-5-5 conference; this contract can be brought into existence either through the amicable acceptance of all of its framers or through the more militant action of an aroused exhibitor body directed toward the proper Federal action in Washington.

Unquestionably, no exhibitor is per se desirous of Federal intervention in the motion picture industry, but there is little question that he would choose if confronted with the option of Federal intervention, or swift extinction by means of unfair, inequitable, and oppressive contracts.

"Underscoring" Successful in Work at Culver City Studios

"Underscoring," or interpolating musical backgrounds in talking pictures, which is said to be coming more and more into vogue as the art is being perfected, is gradually bringing to the screen music as it is used on the stage, according to musicians in the M-G-M studios.

Musical phrases chosen for their fitness to the dramatic theme they are to illustrate are "scored" into pictures, very softly so as not to interfere with dialogue. In recent M-G-M pictures, this idea has been developed until an amazing amount of music that the audience is hardly conscious of is being used, it is said. The music is so played as not to obtrude upon dramatic lines, but merely furnish a psychological background.

old haunts and wins the favor of Thomas Meighan, a builder of skyscrapers. He falls in love with Maureen O'Sullivan, who plays the daughter of a foreman in the construction crew. Through a cameo token, carried by Albright, Meighan discovers the boy to be his son. Carried away by the favors of the great engineer, the boy is infatuated with a worldly woman, but is saved from her grasping clutches by the intervention of Meighan. Albright thinks his benefactor has interfered through selfish reasons and goes back to his little Irish sweetheart, wiser for the experience, but cynical and dejected.

The story has a tragic turn when Meighan reveals himself as the boy's father, accounts for his erring behavior to the boy's mother, and immediately falls to his death from one of his new construction enterprises.

Miss O'Sullivan and Miss Loy received a fair share of praise in their less difficult roles. Stanley Fields, Robert McWade and Jack Kennedy were heartily approved as other members of the cast.

Street Scene

(United Artists)

Drama

Samuel Goldwyn spared neither expense nor talent in making the screen production of the Pulitzer prize play, "Street Scene," equally as compelling a study of mass struggle among the very poor as it was on the New York stage. It promises to rank high among the more serious pieces of screen literature this year.

Maurrant (David Landau) comes home to the rusty brownstone tenement in Manhattan's West Sixties to find the neighbors gossiping about his wife (Estelle Taylor) and Sankey the milk collector (Russell Hopton). Maurrant quarrels with her because the daughter Rose (Sylvia Sidney) has not yet returned from work. Rose and Sam (William Collier, Jr.), son of a cynical old Jewish socialist, find themselves in love.

Sam sees Sankey sneak up to the Maurrant flat after Mr. Maurrant, who has been drinking, has left word that he has gone to Stamford to work. Sam next sees the drunken Maurrant making for the door. There are screams and a shot. Sankey appears at the window. A hand appears on his shoulder and there is another shot. Maurrant is caught.

Sam announces his love but Rose refuses, saying that they are too young and that they should wait.

King Vidor has cut deeply into East Side life and laid it bare with the skill of a surgeon. Sylvia Sidney's portrayal of Rose Maurrant is the finest she ever has done. She is ably supported by William Collier, Jr., Estelle Taylor, David Landau, Beulah Bondi and George Humbert—the last three of the New York cast—and many others in minor roles. It is a worthy cinematization of Elmer Rice's play.

Directed by King Vidor. Story and scenario by Elmer Rice. Cameramen, George Barnes and Gregg Toland. Film editor, Stuart Heisler. Release date, Sept. 5, 1931.

Mother and Son

(Monogram)

Melodrama

What praise there was for "Mother and Son," made by Trem Carr Productions and seen at the Fairfax theatre in Hollywood, was none too loud and the general opinion of the preview audience was not favorable. Featuring Clara Kimball Young, who gave the best performance of the cast, the photoplay was slow and lacked force in theme, according to the audience opinions.

The story concerns gambling in Nevada, with Miss Young as "Faro Lil," operator of a gambling establishment. Then she leaves with her year-old son and invests her winnings. She attempts to rear her son in ignorance of her past life, but a climax is reached when she loses her "nest egg" in a market crash and is forced to go back to the old game. The son, played by Bruce Warren, falls in love with Mildred Goldwyn, playing the daughter of the man who helped to "break" his mother. The boy's contempt for his mother's prior occupation is dispelled by the girl's staunch support and Lil's reconciliation with the girl's father.

The picture for the most part was accepted with good-natured complacency, but occasionally laughter greeted some of the less convincing scenes. It was felt that Miss Young did her best in a role not fitted to her.

"West of Broadway"

(MGM)

Post-War Drama

If it was the purpose of M-G-M to lead John Gilbert up to the guillotine and end the waning popularity of one of the most popular stars the silver screen ever has known, then "West of Broadway" is a great success. Unless this was the purpose, the picture may be described as the most monumental pieces of cinematic stupidity on record.

To make a man of Gilbert's former standing and favor with screen audiences the world over a yellow livered, unchivalrous, drunken brute throughout the entire picture, and then expect an audience to acclaim him as a hero in the last ninety-five feet of the picture, immediately after he has shaken his wife around the room in the manner of a terrier destroying a rat, because he draws her to his bosom and cries "I love you," is just a little too much for anyone to accept, and enjoy.

It is significant that the preview audience at the Alexander theatre in Glendale last night laughed when Gilbert tried with futile strength to make himself a hero in these last few moments. Expressions of sympathy for Gilbert were heard on all sides as the audience left the house.

Curiously enough, "West of Broadway" presents Lois Moran in one of the finest performances she ever has given. As the girl who married Gilbert when he returned from the war, ill and alone except for the ministration of a dumb but worshipful Swedish buddy from the trenches (El Brendel), Miss Moran easily and gracefully won the hearts of the audience. If there was the slightest excuse for the treatment which Gilbert accorded her in the role she so brilliantly portrayed, this reviewer missed it. It should also be recorded that El Brendel was most effective in his typical comic vein.

Briefly, Gilbert returns from the war a casual. Escaping from the ship's sick bay, he seeks out his fiancee, whom he finds engaged to another man. So he steps out to a cafe to drown his disappointment. All the girls are brunettes. He demands a blonde. Lois Moran is brought to him. He likes her, and to use her own words, she "falls for him." There is a midnight marriage ceremony, and next day Gilbert wakes with a headache. Lois still is honestly in love, but he grinds her under his heel with offers of money, rushing off to his Arizona ranch after telling her to "see his lawyer." She beats him there, via airplane. Still he treats her as might a rat from the gutter. Still she loves him. Then when a decent cowhand on the ranch falls for her, he becomes wild-eyed for no reason at all, drags her from the reluctant arms of the protecting cowboy and into his own—fade out.

Men Are Like That (Arizona)

(Columbia)

Comedy-Drama

"Men Are Like That" is the title under which the picture is being shown at the Strand in New York, but to the theatre-going public at large it is "Arizona."

The history of "Arizona" as a stage play is one of the bright spots of the legitimate. Thirty-two years ago the Augustus Thomas work began a year's run at the old Hamilton Opera House in Chicago. Interesting, too, are the names of the members of the early cast in the light of the development of the screen. There were the late Theodore Roberts, Robert Edeson, Arthur Byron, Olive May, Eleanor Robson, Edmund Holt and Lionel Barrymore.

Not less successful was the run of the play at the Herald Square in New York and the Adelphi in London. There were triumphant revivals in 1902 and 1909, and in 1918 Douglas Fairbanks placed it upon the screen. The Shuberts gave it a musical version in 1925 as "The Love Call."

A new twist to the story has Bob Denton (John Wayne) going into the Army-Navy game to kick the winning goal despite his injured shoulder. But he is to be graduated from West Point and goes to Evelyn Palmer (Laura La Plante) to tell her that their two-year affair is off, hinting at social reasons. Evelyn determined to get even. At the annual ball Evelyn bids against Bob's guardian, Colonel Bonham (Forrest Stanley), and he, ignorant of her affair with Bob, falls in love with her. They marry and go to his post in Arizona, with Evelyn's younger sister, Bonita (June Clyde). Bob is assigned to the post under Bonham and Evelyn delights in his consternation. But she has learned to love the Colonel and then come further complications.

Bob and Bonita fall in love and are married secretly. Evelyn considers Bob a trifler and the feeling is confirmed when she finds him in a questionable situation with the intoxicated Conchita (Nena Quartero), though the facts are that he simply was giving her a lift to town. When he rushes back to Evelyn's home to make explanations and the Colonel follows, Evelyn tears her dress from her shoulder and calls to the Colonel for help. The Colonel orders Bob to resign from the service. Then Evelyn learns of the secret marriage, confesses to the Colonel, and all is forgiven.

The screen play brought a favorable reaction as a whole. There was something of chuckling at the melodramatic touch of the climax, with Bob packing his trunk in his room and Evelyn wrestling with her trunk at her home before the "all is forgiven." The successive scenes of the football game, the parade grounds and the maneuvers about the army post lent a realism that the audience noticeably appreciated.

The Spider

(Fox)

Melodrama

Fox has turned out a real mystery melodrama in this picture with the capable Edmund Lowe as the chief thriller, supported by Lois Moran, Howard Phillips, El Brendel, George E. Stone and others. For those millions who read mystery stories, go to seances and like hypnotism and mind reading, there will be plenty of entertainment in this one. A fast pace has been set by the co-direction of William Cameron Menzies and Kenneth McKenna from the adaptation by Barry Connors and Lowell Brentano of the stage play. As usual, Lowe does his stuff in thoroughly satisfactory fashion.

Associate producer, William Sistrom. Based on the play by Fulton Oursler and Lowell Brentano. Director, William Cameron Menzies. Continuity and dialogue by Barry Connors and Philip Klein. Cameraman, James Wong Howe. Sound, Albert Protzman. Art director, Gordon Wiles. Film editor, Al De Gaetano. Costumes by Dolly Tree. Assistant director, R. L. Selander.

Lightnin' Smith Returns

(Syndicate)

This Western, a Jack Irwin Production, starring Buddy Roosevelt with Barbara Worth in support, has as its point de resistance a fake holdup becoming all mixed up with a real one.

John Smith (Buddy Roosevelt), an author, receives a letter from Helen Parker (Barbara Worth) at Rome, Arizona, twitting him about writing Western stories without living in the West. So she invites him to pay a visit. Before his arrival she has arranged a fake stage holdup. She gets togs duplicating those of Lightnin' Smith (Tom London) and she dons them. The bogus holdup is carried out and the money is thrust into John's hands. The sheriff "arrests" him.

The real Lightnin' Smith comes to town and waits his opportunity. John is helped in escaping, Helen is "captured" but gets away and speeds to her father's home. There plans go awry and her father is accidentally shot. She blames John. The trick is explained. As he is leaving the ranch house the real Lightnin' appears. John thinks it's still a part of the game until Lightnin' hits him. The real bandits form a firing squad but John escapes by a ruse. He gets the money they have stolen from the girl's father. The real Lightnin' Smith is shot by one of his own henchmen who mistakes him for John.

Produced by Jack Irwin. Distributed by Syndicate Exchange, Inc. Cameraman, Amos Stillman. Direction, adaptation and dialogue by Jack Irwin. Recording by Herbert Eikes. Release date, August 15. Running time, 59 minutes.

Too Many Cooks

(RKO Radio)

Domestic Comedy

Although this picture was not seen on Broadway, it was shown in the huge Hippodrome just off of what is so often called the Main Stem.

It brought more chuckles and hearty laughs during its 77 minutes of running time from the large audiences than any comedy which this reporter has seen recently.

"Too Many Cooks" is a light domestic comedy, the story of which perhaps mirrors the experiences, or near experiences, of many who visited the Hipp.

While Bert Wheeler and Dorothy Lee are considered primarily musical comedy stars, they lend their talents here to straight comedy, and the audience showed its satisfaction.

The story is of the Frank Craven type—a homely presentation of the vicissitudes of family life. William Seiter, in his direction, has kept the story moving.

It is the story of an engaged young couple—Wheeler and Miss Lee—who spend their days and nights visioning their honeymoon home.

Just when everything appears to be running along smoothly, and they are at the peak of happiness, Miss Lee's family (10 or 12 of them) enter the scene to disrupt matters by endeavoring to take charge of matters.

As if this wasn't trouble enough, Wheeler's uncle, an only relative, decides that he is better fitted to direct the future of the young couple, the upturn being that they split.

Finally the honeymoon is completed, but with no one to occupy it, so Wheeler sadly puts up a "for sale" sign. A turn of circumstances, however, brings the young couple together again and they decide, despite parental and relative objections, to be married. They are forgiven, and the uncle of Wheeler delivers a check for full payment on the house.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Story by Frank Craven. Adaptation by Jane Murfin. Directed by William Seiter. Associate producer, Douglas MacLean. Photographer, Nick Musuraca. Release, July 18. Running time, 77 minutes.

(Ufa)

Mystery

This latest Ufa film to be presented at the New York Cosmopolitan, where German dialogue pictures hold forth exclusively, features Charlotte Susa, exotic German actress, as the adventuress, who plots destruction, and is finally captured through the efforts of a man she meant to make her dupe.

Other leading roles are taken by Heinz Koenecke, as the young groom who upsets the plans of the star during the short space of time which elapses while their express is delayed; Fee Malten as his wife; Alfred Beierle as the police chief and Ludwig Anderson as one of the crooks.

The audience at the theatre seemed to find the rapid moving and dramatic story interest-compelling, with comment highly favorable concerning the performances, in particular, of Miss Susa, Koenecke and Beierle.

The story concerns the complicated situation into which the young man is suddenly thrown when he steps off the delayed train for a few minutes. The few minutes become three hours, during which he meets the mysterious and attractive Miss Susa, becomes involved as a dupe in the plot of which she is leader, to wreck the train as a means of killing a certain industrial figure.

There are several narrow escapes from the police chief, who is the reason for their sudden exits from various places, though the young man is unaware of it. Finally, after being knocked unconscious following the shooting of a detective by one of Miss Susa's henchmen, Koenecke regains consciousness, overhears the conversation of the two, and rushes to the train in time to hold the pair for police capture, and still make his own train, just pulling out at the conclusion of the three-hour delay. His wife accuses him of having been adventuring. He agrees, intimating that she wouldn't believe him if he told her.

Favorable comment was accorded the work of the cameramen, for certain of their night scenes, as well as that of the director.

Produced and distributed by Ufa. Story by Rudolph Katscher and Egon Eis. Directed by Alfred Zeisler. Cameraman, Werner Brandes. Sound engineer, Dr. Gerhard Goldbaum. Release date, August 7, 1931. Running time, 65 minutes.

SHORTS

Gold Digging Gentlemen

(Vitaphone)

Dancing

A Gigolo Club is a highlight of this comedy satire on the business of providing professional companions for spinsters. Al Klein and Joan Abbott have the leading roles. At the Gigolo Club there is some entertaining group dancing, toe dancing and roller-skating. A diner in an aside explains that "a gigolo is a man with all the authority of a husband but none of his responsibilities."—Running time, 10 minutes.

Adventures in Africa No. 7

(Vitaphone)

Interesting

"Witch-Doctor's Magic," the seventh of the "Adventures in Africa," presents an interesting scene of the brown and white antelopes of Northern Rhodesia crossing a small lake. While the picture does not carry the exciting sequences of several of its predecessors in the series supervised by Wynant D. Hubbard, there is presented a theme of the capturing of the herd to save a tribe starving to death because of the witch doctor's decree. Running time, 14 minutes.

The Brassie

(Vitaphone)

Splendid

The high standard of the Bobby Jones series of golf pictures for Vitaphone is maintained in this subject, in which brassie shots are demonstrated. The bit of romantic interest is given when Jones helps Loretta Young to elope, as Claude Gillingwater and the two policemen guarding the elopers forget all about them in watching the shots. Running time, 9 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The trend in box office receipts is decidedly upward, although the increase registered in the current week was not as great as had been recorded in the week previous.

Since the middle of July grosses have shown a tendency toward the upturn. Good product and weather are two factors which have been assigned for this optimistic turn.

Business done during the last four weeks will show an increase of at least 16 per cent over the period just preceding.

These figures are based on compilations by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and reports from circuit executives substantiate them.

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY" is S. R. O. Sensation!

IT MIGHT BE ANY ONE OF US!
"An American Tragedy" is just what the name implies. It didn't happen to imaginary people, it is a true story. It might have happened to you, or the boy across the street, or the girl next door.
It is a life as you might have lived it! And in it you can feel the throb of your heart . . . the ecstasy of your first kiss . . . and taste the salt of the world's tears.
Paramount's most important contribution to the screen
"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"
Her arms once more open to him, now now. Like silver & white chains
Based on Theodore Dreiser's great novel with Phillips Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee
Directed by Josef Von Sternberg
"An American Tragedy" has happened a million times and will happen a million times more whenever the wildfire of youth burns away age old barriers! It is not new — and never old!

A STATEMENT ABOUT . . "AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"
Paramount's outstanding contribution to the screen.
"An American Tragedy" has no heroes or heroines. They are average girl and boy. On the threshold of life. Eager. Bold. Plunging heedlessly along dangerous paths!
They might be any one of us
"An American Tragedy" has been enacted in real life a million times. It will be re-enacted a million times more whenever the wild fire of youth burns away age old barriers. Therein lies the story's importance.
It could happen to you!

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Sioux Falls, S. D.

DEAR HERALD:

When we drove through South Dakota three weeks ago they had the finest prospects for corn in the history of the state. Right now, if they don't get rain within the next two or three days, and this excessive heat keeps up, they won't have enough corn to feed a jackrabbit. The western two-thirds of the state is said to be burned out and what vegetation the drought left is being eaten up by the grasshoppers. People driving through the grasshopper district have to have screens over their radiators to keep the hoppers from plugging them up so they can't get air through them and they have to drive with the windows closed or their cars will fill up with hoppers.

It just looks like it is one damthing after another with South Dakota, and the chances are that before the coming winter is over there will be a lot of folks who will have to have the assistance of the Red Cross and Will Rogers. Bill, you know, doesn't believe in red tape. His theory is that if you want to keep people from starving to death you must give them something to eat before they are dead, and that sounds like pretty good logic to us. Maybe a little of his logic injected into governmental affairs might help some.

Speaking of hot weather. Yesterday it was 111 in the shade at Pierre, but that's a North Dakota blizzard compared with this room we are writing in right now, for we are sitting on the third cake of ice writing this Colyum and it is so durned hot that the seat of our pants isn't even moist. This may sound unreasonable to you, so we are leaving it to your option to believe it or not, we are very accommodating that way.

It is reported that over thirty theatres have closed in this state within the last month, and that's a pretty big percentage for a state like South Dakota, and looking at it from the road as we drive along, our guess would be that fifty more will be closed before frost if present conditions continue. Maybe we are a pessimist, anyhow, we are a Congregationalist. The democratic party has always been an optimistic party and you know what luck they have had. Well, all right, have it your own way and see if we care.

Surrounded by Country

We like Sioux Falls because it is surrounded with so much country. You get up on the hill in the west part of the town and you can see country in every direction as far as you can look. That's what makes Sioux Falls such a good town. Neligh is pretty much that way, too. The only thing to mar the view there is the standpipe and Joe Spirk's elevator, but they have got a few citizens there that they'd like to trade in on a secondhand Ford. One of 'em left last Monday with instructions to stay away for at least three weeks.

We walked into the Paramount office yesterday and said to the blond lady at the front desk, "Say lady, would you girls kindly stake me to the price of a dinner,

I haven't had a bite to eat since day after tomorrow?"

She looked confused for a moment then she said, "Well Mister, you go back in that office and speak to the manager, maybe he will do something for you." Just then Al Anderson, the manager, who heard the conversation, came in and said, "Say, you old Devil, come on back here and leave those girls alone." Then the girls took a vote and decided we were crazy. That's why we are against woman suffrage.

Likes "Honeymoon Lane"

When Eddie Dowling made THE RAINBOW MAN he set himself in with us 100 per cent plus, and last night his stock went up 50 per cent more when we saw him in Paramount's HONEYMOON LANE. Al Anderson, the Paramount manager, invited us to witness a screening of this picture at the Orpheum theatre at twelve o'clock midnight, and Eddie is one actor who can hold us up that late. Eddie had a lot of mighty good folks helping him in that picture, among them being June Collyer, Noah Beery, Mary Carr, Raymond Hatton and another Yegg by the name of George Kotsonaros who we supposed was Bull Montana, and Ray Dooley. Say, who discovered Ray Dooley? There's a pippin. She's three or four Mitzi Greens all in one, and whoever discovered her did the industry a service that is worthwhile. Ray will not stun you with her beauty, but you know, with one exception, homely people are the ones who have good sense, and that exception you will note by reference to the picture in the north-central part of this Colyum.

Ray had cooties, and they were working on her every minute and that was what put pep in her, for she was scratching all the while (we wish she would get up close to Zasu Pitts some time) and she's about the keenest little dickens we have seen in many a day, and if they will give her a chance and she don't carve out a lot of motion picture history then this business has gone to the bowwows. But we were going to tell you about our old favorite, Eddie Dowling. Eddie called June "Mary" (and by the way, Mary is mighty restful to the eye) and Eddie has always been strong for "Marys," he had a "Mary" in THE RAINBOW MAN. We used to run after the Marys ourself. But that's aside from HONEYMOON LANE. We are not going to tell you about the story for that would ball everything up, but we are going to say that you exhibitors are a lot of suckers if you don't get this picture while you have a chance to get a good one, and cash in on it, for they are so few and far between that you can't afford to pass this one up, and when you play it, if 99 per cent of your audience don't say that this one is a whiz bang then we won't mention another picture while this excessive heat is taking off fat faster than we can put it on. Thanks to Paramount and Eddie. They hit the bull's eye.

C. J. Hartman of Carnegie, Oklahoma, wrote the HERALD and said he had watched our comments on pictures for years and that we had hit it every time, but you know that that Oklahoma home brew makes the boys' heads sorta wabbly at times and they get to going pretty strong (Note: He's the only exhibitor who has ever expressed confidence in our judgment), but, anyhow, when you play this picture then write in to the HERALD and tell them how crazy we are when it comes to picking pictures for the smaller communities. The "Voice of the Industry" is for your convenience. And say, Eddie, old kid, give us some more like the HONEYMOON LANE, and you Miss Dooley, get rid of those cooties before we get out there next winter, for we want to get up right close to you.

Those Estees

With us, midnight lunches and nightmare go hand in hand, and our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Estee of Parker, S. D., are responsible for us having the nightmare. Her cakes and coffee were so good we couldn't let go.

They are leaving this week for a month's trip to Vancouver, Washington, and other points west, including the Yellowstone park. We hope they don't have a flat tire until they get back in their own garage, then they can all go down if they want to.

Jack Langan, manager for Universal, and Tom Eckert, RKO-Radio manager, both got on the trail of a couple of theatres that hadn't closed yet and they grabbed a bunch of contracts and away they went. When these boys get a scent and pick up a trail they never let up until they get the coon up a tree and then it is just too bad for Mr. Coon, but we're betting that they will both treat 'em right. If we were the boss of a film company we'd instruct the branch managers to keep these theatres open if they had to furnish them service for nothing, but then we're not the boss. Film lying in the vaults doesn't draw any revenue, but future customers mean a lot to the business. We'd sooner have one theatre on our books and buying our product than five hundred closed ones.

The sky is overcast with haze
And it's really hard to tell,
But if it don't rain within three days
This country's shot to—well.

George is awfully particular about the language we use, but we'd expect that from a good Methodist. There'll be no use covering up the tomatoes tonight.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 92—(A) Describe the sound gate. (B) Name the various types of trouble which may occur with relation to sound gates. (C) Tell us just what attention the sound gate should have each time before threading film into it. (D) Suppose there be deposit on the sound gate film track, how should it be removed? Just what should be examined with relation to the film track through the sound head?

Answer to Question No. 90

Question No. 90 was: "(A) Before threading film into a sound reproducing projector, tell us just what examination of parts you would make. (B) What are the most vital points in threading film into a sound projector? (C) What will be the effect of a wrong loup setting? (D) What is the exact distance between the center of the picture aperture and the center of the sound aperture of all professional projectors, following the correct film path, of course?"

For the second time, the list of answers exceeds one thousand—one thousand and seventeen to be exact, and it took a lot of time to read them because so many were so worded that only by careful reading was it possible to determine whether they were correct on some of the points or not.

Here is the list of correct replies—the largest, I think, we have ever had: Joseph Bliven (who also answered No. 89 correctly, but was not given credit), Herman Billings, Lester Borst, S. Evans and C. Rau, Thomas Dunraven, Alex Lodi, H. D. Cole, James McGuire, John McKay, G. E. Doe, Bill Doe, Another Doe (Chicago projectionists who do not wish their real names to appear), Henry Edwards, Nic Granby, Gene Harrison, Jack Billings, Robert Cressman, James Pendone, Leroy Bates, Richard Singleton, Tom Avery, Harry L. Myers, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Neuton C. Tomlinson, James Ledbetter, D. T. Wyley, Alexander Tilson, Wm. D. Hotaling, Dick Richards, Bob Danning, Thomas McGurder, Peter Cermak, Robert Banning, L. L. Tod, George Richards, Lemuel I. Iler, Frank Burker, Frank D. Bates, E. E. Major, Dan Graves, Edward Allord, D. Fausett, Pat O'Brien, James Ramear, Larry Tipton, Evers Stanton, F. T. Leroy, H. D. Schofield, Robert Lester, Gene Bowman, Will Peck, A. Dexter, Philip Matteson, John Williams, W. D. Samuels, Dan L. Graves, James Devoy, B. G. Anden, Frank Oliver, L. Mooring, Wm. Bogert, H. B. Becker, L. D. Danields, Sam Peters, Seymour Emmerson, George Bailey, George T. Rallston, David Moses, Peter Rogers, Dan Garrison and Frank Oleson.

After careful comparison I have selected the replies of Messrs. Evans and Rau, Lester Borst, Herman Billings, Joseph Blivin, James Devoy, Jack Billings, L. Mooring, D. Fausett, George Bailey and Henry Edwards as essentially equal in excellence. Then I numbered them, placed the numbers in a hat and drew out No. 4, which was the answer of L. Mooring, reading as follows:

"(A) Before threading film into a sound projector, carefully examine the sound gate for possible deposits of emulsion or dirt. If any be found, no matter how small, they should be removed by nibbing with a damp cloth. If this be not done the deposits will continue to increase in size, until finally they will work serious damage to the sound track, perhaps ruining it entirely.

"Examine the sound sprocket carefully for any possible deposits on the face or surface on which the film travels, since any such deposit will throw the sprocket slightly out of round, and cause distortion in the reproduced sound in proportion to the extent of out-of-round so set up. To remove such deposit, use a stiff toothbrush. If the deposits be hard, moisten the brush slightly with kerosine and they will yield easily.

"Examine the sound gate aperture to see that it is entirely free from dust or dirt, since any such deposit will affect both quality and volume of the sound.

"These are the vital things, insofar as concerns the soundhead, but they are not all. The projectionist must always be very certain that the entire path of the film, from upper magazine to lower magazine, is clean and in good working condition. Fire trap rollers must be rollers indeed. They must actually roll. Fire traps must be free from possible deposits of emulsions, or anything else. Sprocket idlers must all work freely and roll instead of slide over the film. They must have exactly the correct adjustment; distance from sprocket must be equal at both ends. The intermittent sprocket must be kept clean or the picture will jump on the screen.

"(B) The most vital point in threading sound film into a projector is to have as nearly as possible exactly the correct size loups.

"(C) The effect of wrong loup setting will be to throw the action and sound out of synchronism, in greater or less degree, according to the amount of the fault.

"(D) Following the correct film path, the distance between centers of sound gate and picture apertures is fourteen and one-half (14½) inches. This is for the reason that the sound record which goes with any instant of action is exactly 14½ inches from the action itself—in advance of it as the film is threaded into the projector and soundhead."

NEW MEN IN PROJECTION

From British Columbia comes this letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I have been reading the department in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for some time. Must say I have found it both interesting and very helpful. Am a newcomer in projection work. I enjoy it very much. Have my third class "Ticket" (License card—Ed.) and will not be satisfied until I get my first.

Will you answer the twenty questions I have inclosed, personally? If there is any charge advise me; also quote price on latest "Bluebook volumes."

I have written the correspondent, advising as to the Bluebook and telling him to by all means get it at once; also that it answers his questions, though not all of them just as he has asked them.

New men are entering projection continuously and this department is for them, as well as for the oldtimers. Here are the questions he asks: (1) What is meant by "pulling down" when rewinding? (2) What is the nature of the damage done by pulling down? (3) What are some reasons for film fires in projection rooms? (4) What will cause films to stop, pile up and get into the light beam? (5) what results from large film loops? (6) what will unequal gate spring pressure or traps do? (7) If sprocket idlers are out of line or binding, what may happen? (8) What happens if the upper magazine reel shaft is too tight? (9) Why are new prints waxed and old ones not? (10) What is buckled film? (11) What will cause film to buckle? (12) What will be the effect of buckled film on screen image? (13) Name some causes for rain in film. (14) How is the speed of reels in the upper magazines regulated? (15) Name several faults in projectors which will cause damage to film. (16) What is the cause of flicker? (17) What are the causes of loosening of the lower loop? (18) What is meant by "keystone effect?" (19) How may keystone effect be overcome? (20) Define a condensing lens.

I have not attempted to answer them for the young man, except in the most brief possible manner, but have suggested to him that he get the Bluebook at once, as in those volumes he will find full explanation for them all.

However, maybe some of you older men in projection might find it not so easy to set forth, fully and completely, competent answers to some of the questions, though for the most part they are very simple to men of experience. I shall incorporate certain of them in the Bluebook School of Projection in an early issue.

Activities Not Affected By Ruling, Says Schlesinger

General Talking Pictures approves in theory the recent ruling of Federal District Judge Coleman requiring the filing of an answer by General Talking Pictures to patent infringement suits brought by Western Electric in U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York.

In commenting on Judge Coleman's ruling, M. A. Schlesinger, president of General Talking Pictures, said: "While our company's activities are not at all affected by the decision in question, we nevertheless subscribe to the strictest adherence of equipment manufacturers to any final court decree validating patents and giving full protection to the rights of inventors."

Hatfield W. E. Manager in Britain; Gregg Sails Aug. 28

E. S. Gregg of Western Electric, is scheduled to sail on the Leviathan August 28, returning to the United States following the installation of R. M. Hatfield as managing director of Western Electric Company, Ltd., and general manager of Electric Research Products in England.

Gregg and Hatfield have just returned from a tour of company offices on the Continent, visiting Paris, Madrid, Barcelona and Milan.

Sentry in Philadelphia Tilt With Film Fire Prevention

Film Fire Prevention Company, Philadelphia, is named defendant with John T. Gibson, owner of the Philadelphia Standard theatre, in a suit for infringement filed at Eastern District Court, Pennsylvania, by Sentry Safety Control.

Sentry claims that the fire prevention device for projectors which is manufactured and marketed by Film Fire is an infringement of the Sentry control patents. Gibson uses a Film Fire attachment at his theatre.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

IF ANYONE THINKS THE EXHIBITORS don't read this page, they are sadly mistaken. I already have received five letters regarding my article in last week's issue. I find that where there is only one show in a town, or more than one owned by the same owner, or where there is not much competition in buying, the salesmen will include a clause in their contract giving the exhibitor the right to cancel one of every five pictures bought, and, in some cases, one out of every four. Don't let the salesmen tell you that you have to play the entire block, as they have been telling me for years, for I have the proof in these letters that you don't have to play them all. Every company is included in those mentioned in these letters and I am positive that these letters are true. This is only right and from the number of rotten pictures they produced last year, they should have allowed a cancellation of one out of every two, and then the exhibitors would have had to play some mighty punk ones.

"East Is West"—Universal—Pretty old and pretty punk. Received a disc print, although I use sound-on-film and it had plenty black film in it. Lew Ayres and Edward Robinson didn't show up much in this and some of my patrons walked out on Lupe Velez when she started doing a wiggling dance on the balcony.

"Great Pants Mystery"—2-reel Paramount comedy—These boys might be a big hit on the stage but they didn't get a grin here. Nobody could understand them and nobody seemed to care.

"A Gentleman's Fate"—John Gilbert—MGM—A few more pictures like this will decide Gilbert's fate. Lots of talk and not much action. Louis Wolheim great. Anita Page, Leila Hyams and Gilbert just fair. Gilbert dies at the end and everybody is glad that he dies and that the picture is over.

"Politics"—MGM—They even had to include gangsters, drinking and the killing of a girl in this Marie Dressler-Moran comedy. First two reels great comedy with Miss Dressler, Polly Moran and Roscoe Ates, but after that it turns drama and gets silly rather than funny. Not so big.

"Confessions of a Co-Ed"—The story is hot, but the acting and directing is great. Phillips Holmes and Sylvia Sydney are great. This Miss Sydney can act and is a nice looker, too. She should have some big roles and will be a great draw. Story concerns a college girl who has an affair with a fellow student, then marries another one. She has a child and it is suggested that the child belongs to the man she did not marry. Is this one of the family pictures?—L. L. Levy, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Texas.

An Opportunity

Theatre Owners of America are to be given one of the greatest opportunities in their history, not alone to cooperate with the United States Government, but to show the educational value of the motion picture, through the showing of the George Washington bi-centennial film of Washington to be made by Warner Brothers and shown throughout the United States. The film is sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce of Washington, D. C., and it is already assured of nationwide distribution through the Chambers of Commerce in every city in the United States and through the endorsement of the M. P. T. O.

Plans for the scenario are already under way. The Washington Chamber of Commerce sponsored a contest for appropriate ideas, which were submitted to a group of newspaper men as judges, and for which $500 in prizes was awarded. Jacob Wilkes, in charge of the scenario department of Warner Brothers, has been in Washington, has approved some of the ideas submitted and will have his department at work on the film in the next few weeks.

Regardless of the distance from Washington, every person in the United States is interested in the nation's capital. That is one of the reasons why this film, showing the spirit of the capital, is going to meet a popular demand in every part of the country and every motion picture theatre owner will do well to capitalize this feeling as a means of building goodwill for his theatre and for the industry as a whole.

The George Washington Bi-Centennial, commemorating the 200th anniversary of the birth of the "Father of his Country," is designed to be the greatest celebration ever held in the capital. Congress has appropriated $150,000 as a preliminary fund for making the affair a success, and a committee, headed by Representative Sol Bloom of New York is busy day and night on plans for its fulfillment.

When the idea for the Bi-Centennial was first broached and methods of bringing it before the public were discussed, the educational value of motion pictures was immediately recognized. The Chamber of Commerce decided to sponsor a film and offered a prize for ideas and a committee, consisting of the undersigned and A. Julian Brylawski, went to New York to ask Warner Brothers to make the film. This, Warner Brothers patriotically agreed to do, and the film is assured.

Government officials have come to depend on the motion picture theatre owners for many things and they have never been disappointed. During the war the theatres, thrown open to speakers, raised millions. Every request that has been made of them has been more than fulfilled. I hope that they will again rise to this opportunity to build goodwill with the Government and with the people of the whole nation.—Sidney B. Lust, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington, D. C.

Comments on Showings

FOLLOWING ARE REPORTS ON SOME pictures I have shown recently:

"Dawn Trail" with Buck Jones. Another cut and dried Western. At the start of the season they had some original ideas, but there is so much sameness to the stories that one is not much different from the others.

There is a crying need of some high class Westerns such as Fox promises to turn out: "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "Rainbow Trail."

Some smart producer will stop spending so much money on the sex pictures and come into the market with Westerns and he will clean up in the small towns.

The action pictures are the mortgage raisers and the stuff like "Common Law" and "Born to Love" and the pictures that Paramount puts Chatterton in are not worth a nickel at the box office today in the small towns. They are tired of them, and want either comedy or action.

RKO has turned out a nice picture in "Public Defender." It is so very different in treatment that it is outstanding as an audience picture, and will pull in the small towns if advertised as not a gang picture.

The musicals may be out in the big towns, but we are having calls for them. And it is my opinion that a few of them mixed in during the season that were of high quality would get money today in towns like this one.

It is something that not many of them saw in the flesh, and a lot of them would go for shows like "Whoopee" and "Rio Rita."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia City Theatre Co., Columbia City, Indiana.

Two-for-One Ticket Deals

WE WOULD APPRECIATE YOUR PASSing on to other exhibitors through the medium, "Voice of the Industry," the information to be very careful in making any deals with a Mr. Rodgers and Mr. Sisk alias Mr. Evans. These two men are operating in the Middlewest putting on two-for-one ticket deals for theatres in cooperation with the merchants in the town.

These men do not keep their agreements with the theatre men or the merchant, and, we understand, are wanted on "bad check" charges in Mitchell, South Dakota.

Mr. Rodgers claims Minneapolis as his home and Mr. Sisk alias Mr. Evans hails from Oklahoma.—M. A. Pay, manager, Royal theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D.

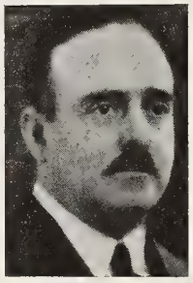
Van Beuren Sees Possibility of Color Cartoons

A. J. Van Beuren, of Van Beuren Corp., producer of animated cartoons for RKO-Pathe, sees color in cartoons as the next step to add novelty to cartoon entertainment, although he does not believe that color has been perfected sufficiently as yet, or that it has proven enough of a success from an audience standpoint in feature productions to merit serious consideration for the time being.



A. J. Van Beuren

It has taken long years of study and work, he says, to bring black and white cartoons to their present state of perfection and they will not be abandoned for the sake of novelty until color has been developed to an equally satisfactory degree and picture audiences definitely decide they want color on the screen.

In the new camera department now being equipped at the Aesop Fable studio, a small laboratory is being installed for experimental purposes so that Fables will be prepared to offer the exhibitor color cartoons when the time is ripe and a process has been perfected to overcome the various technical difficulties that now present themselves, especially as regards imperfect sound.

WITH the single exception of the inclusion of the Spectator in its list of screen papers, I can imagine nothing about the film business that is not embraced in the Motion Picture Almanac, an extraordinary volume recently brought out by the Quigley publications. It must have been a stupendous task to assemble all the information that is arranged so handily between the covers. It is a book that should prove of the utmost value to the entire industry, one that should be on the desk of every executive, on the shelves of every studio and public library, and in the hands of the film editors of all the publications that ever even mention motion pictures. It is a volume that one can not review beyond stating that it contains every known fact about pictures, their organizations, their finances, their personnel and all their supplementary businesses. Truly a commendable work, courageously conceived and admirably executed. It is so up to date that it doesn't list Horace Liveright among Pathe's assets.

MUSIC AND TALENT

WARNERS OPEN FLEXIBLE UNIT SHOWS

Will Use Acts Booked By Walter Meyers

Bills Will Be Arranged Individually by Producers in Each House Under Zone Manager's Supervision

By ED DAWSON

Warner Theatres is going into the stage-show business on its own for the entire circuit. Warner Theatres hereafter will arrange its own programs, using acts booked by Walter Meyers, head of the Artists Bureau in the home office. The policy is to present stage shows and vaudeville acts as preludes to feature pictures.

Each of the bills or units will be produced individually by producers in each of the Warner houses on their circuit and at all times, will be under the personal supervision of the zone managers.

By the new plan, which has been approved by Warners, it will be possible to get up flexible units, something long desired. For instance, when there is a big star engaged for any of the houses it will be an easy matter to build up the show around him. First of the name stars engaged for the Stanley, Jersey City (this house being the first to inaugurate the new plan) is Joe E. Brown. Under the old arrangement there was no flexibility to the vaudeville programs sent these theatres, it being necessary to present them intact as they were sent on tour or have the added expense of using a house master of ceremonies and talent who were locally popular.

Each house will have a producing head of its own who will balance and stage his programs. Zone managers for the different territories are Harry Kalmine, Stanley, Jersey City; William Goldman, Mastbaum, Philadelphia, and John Harris, Stanley, Pittsburgh. Producers who will work under their supervision are Larry Conley and Clement Murphy, Stanley, Jersey City; Al Kaye and Larry Princ, Mastbaum, Philadelphia, and Bob Alton and Jerry Mayhall for the Stanley, Pittsburgh.

The Earle theatres, Philadelphia and Washington, will continue their present arrangement of straight vaudeville programs. The Philadelphia Earle has eight acts and the Washington Earle four.

Jimmy Flynn Dies

Jimmy Flynn, well known music man who started in the business many years ago with the firm of Leo Feist and who has been with Remick's for a long time, died last Friday morning after a year's illness. Jimmy leaves a wife and four children, and many sad friends.

BERNARD COWHAM

This intellectual chap doesn't look like he was a farmer before the urge to entertain audiences with clever organ novelties betook him, but he was and in fact he still is keen about it, going back to his farm in Oshkosh every year for his vacation. He has been a permanent attraction at the Flushing, Long Island RKO theatre for the past three years. Not only that, he has proved himself a real box-office attraction too. This is not just hearsay either, just ask his manager or the patrons of this house. Bernie, as he is known to thousands of people in that territory, is a hard worker, putting on novelties that have a natural appeal to audiences, and doing it in a manner that appears to be the personification of ease. This, dear children, is the secret of one boy who made good in the big city.

Roxy Conductor to France

Maurice Baron, conductor of the Roxy Symphony Orchestra, sails Saturday aboard the S. S. Paris to visit briefly in his native France. Baron will spend most of his three weeks' vacation on the Atlantic, but expects to have nine days in Europe, most of which will be spent in Paris. During his absence, his co-conductor, Mischa Violin, will direct the Roxy orchestra both in the theatre and in the weekly radio broadcasts.

Myers to Tour Twins

Myer Myers, who formerly handled the Hilton Sisters, has contracted with the Godino Siamese Twins for a world tour to open at St. Louis. William L. ("Bill") Oliver will handle the tour.

Add Stage Shows At Four Spots in Columbus District

Stage shows will be added to four spots in Columbus, Ohio, territory within the next few weeks. RKO Palace goes vaude-film August 22, with RKO Keith's, Dayton, to follow shortly thereafter. Civic organizations both at Columbus and Dayton have been agitating the question for several months, and forwarded petitions with thousands of signers to RKO executives. The Cambridge Amusement Co. inaugurated vaudeville policies in their houses at Cambridge and Marietta, Ohio, booking out of the Gus Sun office at Springfield, beginning this week.

Theatre Organ Tie-up Helps Create Audience Interest

Milton Charles, organist at the Mastbaum, Philadelphia, evolved a tie-up with Speak-o-phone in that city which proved a successful program feature.

A Speak-o-phone recording apparatus was placed on the stage along with a Brunswick Panatrope. Charles then flashed slides of three old-time songs on the screen, the audience indicating their favorite by applause. "Till We Meet Again" was chosen. Charles played the number with practically the entire audience singing. The record was then played back to the audience, humorous touches being given by Charles, calling the audience's attention to their own work and his own comments—"That's you" and "That's me," etc.

The holder of the lucky number given at the door received the record of the audience's singing.

Organist Takes Place of 10 Men in Opening Show

Kay Custer, organist of the RKO Orpheum at Portland, Ore., recently was called upon to take the place of 10 men on the new opening show at this popular playhouse. It all came about through her being made a featured part of the program with her "Organ Fantasies," a clever group of musical numbers which supplanted the usual overture by the RKO Westerners.

In addition, this diminutive organist scores daily with her organ concert from 11 to 11:30. Her "Organ Fantasies" were a clever arrangement of her own, and were presented in conjunction with some clever slides on the screen.

NBC Shifts Menser to Midwest

C. L. Menser, of the production department of NBC at New York headquarters, has been transferred to Chicago, to assume charge there.

STAGE SHOWS

Week ending August 15

"Cool Off," Capitol stage presentation unit staged and devised by Chester Hale under personal supervision of Louis K. Sidney, opened on full stage with shredded silver cloth hanging from the flies for icicles, and backdrops to represent a snow scene, the band being banked on tiers upstage behind banks of ice with silver cloths over the piano, and dressed in white coats with jersey caps. The girls had on white imitation ermine cloaks and hats. Into routine and then, as they warm up, remove cloaks and hats and are in very abbreviated costumes of silver cloth. Then Allan Rogers comes on from left in white flannel suit and introduces Chilton and Thomas, who come on in song and dance work. Carol Chilton sings as Thomas goes into his hurdle dance. Then Rogers sings "I Surrender, Dear," and for encore introduces "Little Things in Life," with comedy chatter. He gets laughs with his talk about husbands holding wives' hands and others doing likewise, coming down into the audience and singing to a girl or child there. Rogers then directs the band in a modernistic tune and at the close the girls enter from either side in white chiffon and offer a pleasing routine. A white scrim curtain closes out the band in back. They toe-dance, then leave as a feminine voice is heard singing "O Solo Mio," from right wings. Milo comes on dressed as a tramp (same costume and routine as in former years). He goes into his routine of imitations, whistles, birds, chickens, with horse neigh getting most laughs. Next Rogers introduces Chilton and Thomas again in the act they used in the Al Jolson show. Miss Chilton sings "Pit, Pat, Pit, Pat, Listen to the Rain," while Thomas does a tap and knee bending dance work on the floor on three solid metal stools of different heights. Miss Chilton next sings to her own piano accompaniment, and starts dance steps and is joined by Thomas. For encore they do a song and dance with toy piano and stool. Applause. For the finale the girls come on in white and silver costumes, divided skirts, large half moon headpieces, and are joined by a show girl with a resplendent multicolored costume with a large half-moon headdress and two girls in silver.

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week Ending August 21

The week's program, although offering nothing startlingly new, novel or original, is nevertheless entertaining, and holds attention of the regulars to "the last drop."

The opening spot is filled by Mme. Olympia's Prize Winners, a dog act in which the exceptionally well-trained canines appear to enjoy their work equally as well as the people out front. Five Russian wolf hounds were exhibited during the act, with one doing an unusually high jump.

Bud Harris, dusky piano comedian, assisted by Tommy Brookings and Paul Harris, in No. 2 position, offer a line of repartee, songs, piano playing and tap dancing. The act majors in the musical and hoofing turns, although the others are enjoyable.

Arthur and Morton Havel follow in a sketch, "Hot Water," aided and abetted by Helen Lockhart, Denise Dooley and Bud Williamson. The special backdrop and appurtenances representing a ship at sea form the basis of the action which is a series of comedy lines and situations in which the girls are able "feeders." The act contains considerable hokum which could be profitably sacrificed in favor of the dances and quartet work occasionally interspersed.

Louise Groody, musical comedy star, on next to closing in "Storiettes," again employs Nevelle Fleeson as her accompanist on the ivories, but he now shares the billing instead of remaining practically an unknown quantity as was the case last season. Miss Groody does her famous "Tea for Two" song which she originated in "No, No, Nanette," subsequently burlesquing the number as it would be sung by a cabaret shouter. Fleeson fills in the spot while Miss Groody changes to a Salvation Army costume for her next number. Discarding the religious garb on the stage, she appears in the opposite extreme for a Cuban rhumba. The act took three bows at the first show.

Harry Kahne, billed as "The man with ten brains," closes in almost uncanny demonstration of freak handwriting which he accomplishes backwards, upside down and what not. For a finale, Kahle, suspended head downward before a large blackboard, recites a poem selected by the audience while he transfers headlines upside down on the board, taken from current newspapers which he also holds in an inverted position.

Week ending August 13

Bernie, of the trio of Bernie, Veronica & Walker, acts as master of ceremonies in Fanchon & Marco's "Tomorrow's Stars" Idea. The opening episode presents the various members of the Idea seated at tables, with the orchestra, under the direction of Glen Kelty, in the background. The setting is blue with many golden stars.

Theal Nelson opens the Idea with a neat bit of tumbling, including a series of backward revolutions across the entire stage.

Zelma tap dances on her toes with no mean ability and gives way to Dorothy Welch, who sings an operatic selection. Miss Welch is known as the little girl with the big voice, and clicks in fine fashion.

Chiyo Kadomatsu goes through a series of gyrations to stage an oriental dance. Bernie, Veronica and Walker inject their personalities at this time, as they do at various odd moments during the Idea.

Helen Ireland entertains with a saxophone selection. Buddy & Gretel do a bit of ballroom dancing, first to a classical number and then to a jazz selection. They do plenty of fast stepping and get a good hand.

Harry Stockwell sings "I'm Marching Home to You," after which Wanda Allen does a sparkling bit of toe dancing. Miss Allen handles herself very well and clicks. Fern Dale impersonates several people, including Will Rogers, and gets a big hand.

Mary Miles is an acrobatic dancer of no mean ability and is succeeded by Anderson & Allen, whose acrobatic maneuvers include a number of balancing features performed in an able manner.

Bernie, Veronica & Walker wind up the act with some comedy chatter and dancing, while the finale finds the feminine members of the Idea in black, glittering outfits posing about a devolving disc in a setting of mirrors. The Idea is well received and the "stars" all exceptionally talented.

Philadelphia Fox

Week ending August 14

Fanchon & Marco's "Submarine Idea" at the Fox this week supplies some new thrills in addition to plenty of speed and pep.

Ron and Don at the organ play a charming "Spanish Fantasy," illustrated through scrim. The organ then accompanies an accordionist whose name is not announced.

"Submarine Idea" is introduced by a solo, "Echoes of the Sea," featuring Willard Singley, baritone. The stage setting consists of a submarine base on a rocky coast with a lighthouse in the background.

The Sunkist Beauties in ruffled Spanish costumes dance and sing "Lady Play Your Mandolin," and then group themselves in the background as two men and a girl dance a spirited Spanish tango.

Two negroes, Radcliffe and Bob, dressed as sailors, put over a lot of nonsense that gets a good hand.

The action of the next scene apparently takes place on the bottom of the sea, with very realistically moving green waves as a background and the Sunkist Beauties dressed as mermaids with long glittering trains. Claire Lea, a clever little contortionist, does some amazing stunts and a huge crocodile crawls sinuously across the stage as the chorus are grouped in the background.

Radcliffe and Bob reappear dressed as divers with a treasure chest, which proves to be an upright piano, and they take turns playing it. Their singing and clowning is so well received that they take two encores.

The next scene also takes place on the bottom of the sea with coral reefs and strange sea growths growing about, and curious fish swimming about a wreck at one side of the stage. The Sunkist Beauties come on in pirate costumes consisting of black velvet jackets, big hats and boots, and they do a clever routine.

A submarine is seen descending beneath the waves and the Aerial Bartletts perform some breath-taking feats on a trapeze suspended from the craft. As a climax the submarine explodes with a great crash.

"Mickey's" F. & M. Tour Nears End

Mickey Mouse is scheduled to complete his nation-wide personal appearance tour in New Orleans on September 24. The little rodent star, featured in a Fanchon & Marco "Mickey Mouse Idea," staged in collaboration with Walt Disney, started his transcontinental junket early in the year at Loew's State, Los Angeles, and has been "on the road" for approximately nine months.

Radio Team in Films

"A Pair of Jacks," until recently featured over KTAP, San Antonio, will depart for the Coast and films shortly.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Ben Grauer, one of the recent additions to the NBC announcing staff, comes to radio from the theatre. He played in several successful stage productions and in silent pictures.

Harry Kogen, conductor of the Farm and Home Hour program and various other coast-to-coast hookups over the National Broadcasting chains from the Chicago studios, is not only one of the most popular conductors in his field, but is also one of the most talented arrangers in radio today. Kogen gave a startling demonstration of his skill in the latter field recently. Because of a last minute change of musical numbers, he was required to make an obliggato arrangement to accompany a vocal solo a few minutes before the program went on the air. In order not to lose any precious moments of rehearsal, Kogen wrote the obliggato with one hand, while with the other he conducted the orchestra through the rehearsal of an entirely different number.

What does the radio announcer do with his spare time? Of course it all depends on his hobby. In the case of Jean Paul King, the popular NBC announcer, he spends his time in his apartment, playing over his collection of phonograph records. King is a great lover of modern music and has a valuable collection of American and European recordings, some of which are very rare.

Clyde McCoy and his orchestra are now the possessors of six daily chain hookups over the NBC, from the Terrace Gardens—Lix Riley soon closes at the Congress Hotel. The management of the hotel does not intend to put another orchestra unit in the hotel for the next few months.

Joe Plotke, who plays the traps on the golf links, besides the traps in Maurie Sherman's orchestra, recently made a hole-in-one on a 175 yard drive at the Quit-Qu-Oc Country Club. Incidentally, Sherman's band are now playing at the Schoreder hotel, Milwaukee, for the next few months, then returning to the Beachview Gardens.

Wayne King, one of the country's most popular dance band leaders, has returned from a vacation and leaves Chicago in his own airplane this week for a limited engagement at Lakeside Park, Denver, accordin gto Music Corporation of America officials.

Earl Burtnett and His Californians, the west coast's popular dance band who are making their first trip east under the auspices of the Music Corporation of America, are going into the Lincoln Tavern, Chicago, for a return engagement this week. Burtnett and his music have made a big hit here.

Irving Aaronson and His Commanders, internationally famous orchestra, who recently completed a nation-wide tour of deluxe motion picture theatres, has been booked for a limited engagement at the Dolls, Chicago's smart night club west of Evanston. The Aaronson engagement, according to Music Corporation, marks the orchestra's first appearance here for nearly a year. They scored a big hit at a popular night club while playing here a year ago.

ORGAN SOLOS

EGON DOUGHERTY (Astoria Triboro) presented another and incidentally his last "Sing With Dougherty" organ songfest before being transferred to another house. This one was appropriately entitled "Deep South," and incorporated many of the famous southern melodies, together with one of the most popular of the new southern tunes. Each of the slide choruses was superimposed on a typical southern effect slide which enhance the presentation. This audience, who are mainly foreign, lustily sang all of the songs. The program consisted of "Ole Man River," "Swannee River," "Old Kentucky Home," "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," "Shine on, Harvest Moon," "Chloe" and a final chorus of "Roll on, Mississippi." This solo was beautifully presented and very well played and earned the organist the fine response he deserved.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee Wisconsin) achieved such success several weeks ago with his organ number entitled "Your Part of the Program," that he has again adopted this for the current week. He opens with "I Found a Million Dollar Baby," followed by "I'm Through With Love," and "Honey I Want to Sing About You," with Orville Rennie doing the singing in connection with the last two numbers. The combination works out satisfactorily and goes over big with the audience. Words to each selection are flashed upon the screen and the audiences join in singing.

ADA RIVES (New Orleans, State) offered "Temptation" for the week ended August 6, which turned out to be the usual organ solo meeting with moderate popularity. It opened with a parody on "My Baby Just Care for Me" commenting upon the temptations which exist to break laws and invoking a new law prohibiting singing in the theatre. After that came "Let's Get Friendly." Then they sang "The Same as We Used to Do," following this with a muddling tongue twister to the melody of "Confessin'." The close was "Out of Nowhere." Miss Rives works hard and gets her solo over.

MACK BRIDWELL (San Antonio, Majestic) recently rendered the following up-to-date tunes on the mighty Robert Morton at the Majestic: "I'm Happy When You're Happy," "You're the One I Care For," "In a Five and Ten Cent Store," "I'm Alone Because I Love You," a lively parody to the tune of "Betty Co-Ed," a tongue twister on "Apple Blossom Time," "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone," next, a travesty on "Just a Gigolo," and last, the well-liked "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver."

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) went into introductory strains as the title "Hello Reno" was flashed on a colored slide. Then he played "Little Grey Home in the West" as parody words were flashed on "Little Gay Homes in the West." From that he played "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," with parody words, and the same treatment for "It's Always Fair Weather—When Grass Widows Get Together." Next came "Order in the Courtroom," to the tune of Eddie Cantor's "Making Whoopee." Next was a burlesque on "Who," running: "Who Makes My Baby Cry," and followed by a comic rendition of "Wabash," starting "While Your Daddy's Tight Tonight Upon the Wabash." Then for the comedy of "Would You Like to Take a Walk With Me," the Judge was supposed to be taking the girls out to tea. Colored slides interspersed with word slides with cartoon illustrations. He finished with straight words on "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

By the time you read this "pillar" the better half and yours truly will have jumped in the old fliv' and will have flown away from all the noise, strife, struggle and all the other things that are so irritating a week or so before the annual vacation . . . and will be doing the things we have banked on doing for the past month. You know, . . . lazying around on the bank of a small stream and thinking of nothing but rest . . . Probably though . . . before long I'll be getting in touch with someone of the Main Stem and finding out how things are. I've had it happen so often that I'm sure that's how it will be. . . . Well, at least we can count up an hour's rest . . .

A prince of Jazz is Teddy King, popular musical director and master of ceremonies at the Fox Audubon who is also a feature of the Fanchon and Marco Radio Hour over station WGBS . . . If you "listened in" on last Sunday's broadcast, you had a double treat, because Paul Ash, the Genial Giant of Jazz, was the guest announcer . . .

The National Studios have just announced a new orgologue which is distributed on a rental basis to organists throughout the country . . . The new one is "Motor Mania," and it incorporates the human characteristics of the "Sunday Driver," in a cleverly worded lyric form . . . The boys who have used it claim it the best 10 minutes of entertainment they have used . . . A lot of the boys have used "Looking Backwards," "A European Tour," and "Literary Indigestion," and found them darned good bets and chock full of entertainment value, too . . .

There have been numerous changes in organist personnel lately in various parts of the country which should be of interest.

Henry A. Keates, for the past five or six years one of Chicago's biggest and most popular advocates of Community Singing, is soon to open at the Keith-Albee, Brooklyn. . . . Dr. Mauro-Cottone and Will Gilroy, organists at the Capitol, are out . . . Gilroy though, opens next week at the Pitkin, Brooklyn . . . Hy C. Geis, the "Eiffel Tower of Organists," who has presided at the console of the Stanley, Jersey City, for the past three years, opens at the Fox, Washington, on the 27th . . . Con Maffie is slated to go to an out-of-town house for Loew's shortly . . . Egon Dougherty, formerly of the Triboro, Astoria, is going into the Paradise, when Maffie vacates . . . Ken Wright, "The Singing Organist," formerly of the Orpheum, Green Bay, Wisconsin, is now the featured organist at Lloyd's State, Rhinelander, Wis. . . . Art Brown, "The Maple Sugar Kid," who for the past 4½ years has been with the Flynn outfit in Burlington, Vt., has just resigned and will be in town shortly . . .

Here are a few more changes, but not like the ones above. Bill Gilroy, again is a proud Father, this time it is a boy, the grand total in the Gilroy family is now four, two boys and two girls. . . . Another to have an addition to the family is Bob Raso who is the proud father of a 7 pound girl. . . . Adolph Goebel is visiting Germany and France, he hasn't been home for 10 years and is paying his mother a visit and incidently showing off his new wife. . . . Paul Miller, who has been featured organist at the Hollywood in Gowanda, N. Y. for the past three years has been visiting friends here in New York.

Space is short, so.....long.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

THE unnecessary unbusinesslike and jackass method of constantly changing house managers has now reached the point where it can be classed as humorous news, because a daily in Racine, Wis., carried a two-column story on their own local situation; and believe me brothers, it was so funny to read that I'm going to reprint it in this issue of the Club section. . . . Wanna laugh? . . . just turn over a few pages until you spot a yarn captioned: "Theatre Managers Change Rapidly In Racine Playhouse Realm." . . . In this humble writer's opinion, a copy should be tacked on the front door of every circuit executive and division supervisor in the country . . . not that we expect it would do them any good, but they might begin to realize what a laughing stock they are making of showbusiness. . . .

Here in the big (?) town, we boast (sometimes) of a certain symphony (more ???) orchestra where we sit through agony and the show wondering which will win the intense battle, the brass or the strings; but, sad to relate, although there is far more sweet music in the strings than in the brass, the latter is so far ahead of the former that it would not surprise us if they left half the strings out entirely . . . and still stranger to relate is the fact that the promoted director of this blah-blah aggregation, plays a string instrument himself . . . such is life . . . we soon forget our own first love to bask in the sunshine of a lotta noise. . . .

Lord help the man who lacks enthusiasm. Without it you are just second fiddle to a dead-head. Without it your theatre will be just another movie house. Without it you can hardly hope to enthuse your staff. Without it you will be unable to enthuse others.

But with it you are aces-high. It will be evident in everything you do or say. It will brand you as a go-getter and a leader in the community.

What is this thing called enthusiasm? The dictionary tells us—"Earnest and fervent feeling; ardent zeal for a person or cause."

Take stock of yourself. Have you that much-needed enthusiasm or are you just another so and so—?

While we're waxing sentimental and optimistic, we'd like to ask managers a simple question:

"Are you ready for promotion? Could you take the next high-up job? Are you capable and equipped to handle it?"

Be honest with yourself when you answer this question. Are you looking far enough ahead and preparing yourself when opportunity knocks at the door?

Have you the makings for a bigger and better future or are you content to ride along until you have outlived your usefulness to your company.

Our advice is, look ahead to promotion and be ready for it; and instill the same thought in the minds of your subordinates so that they too will have something to look forward to.

Those of us who have not circulated among our patrons as much as we should have in the past, ought to start off the new season with a firm resolution to be as much in sight around the lobby and floor of the theatre as is possible.

Get to know and like your patrons. Give them the chance to know and like you. It means much good-will for the theatre and cements a feeling of friendliness that pays well in box-office returns.

Instead of feeling antagonistic towards the man who is driving you (we said driving, not riding), you ought to feel grateful. And you in turn should be driving those under you (again we said driving, not riding).

It's driving that makes for greater accomplishments. Without it we may all become stagnant, allowing ourselves to drift along all too freely. While with it, everything will hum along at top speed.

Don't mind being pushed; push with them and keep everybody stepping to the fast tempo of better times.

According to Babson, the business economist,—"Advertising is like driving a nail. You don't drive it home at one blow—you keep hammering at it."

Keep that in mind whenever you work out a campaign for some big attraction or some special event. Don't make the mistake of starting off with a lot of noise and then let your campaign shift for itself. Keep driving and hammering at it until it must spell success in box office receipts.

Economy! You boys back of the guns have probably heard that word until you're ready to throw a fit. But we'll risk your throwing that fit because of the importance of economy with present-day conditions.

The indelible stamp of ability is making money and saving money. What's the good of making it if you turn around and spend it foolishly?

While on the other hand, even if you can't increase business you'll be making money by practicing sensible economy and keeping the overhead down to the minimum.

Moral—Don't Think Out Loud!

Louis Lamm's Baby Contest Under Way; Two Other Contests

Baby contests are flying around thick and fast among Club members at this writing and the latest member to stage one of these popular affairs is Louis Lamm, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lorain, Ohio. Louis tells us he thought it about time to give the infants a break and incidentally find out just what is the status of his town's population. The contest is in full swing at this writing so it is impossible to give his brother members all the dope but we can at least tell you the original plan of campaign.

For the backbone of his campaign Louis made a tie-up with 10 merchants for the running of a full page co-operative ad over a period of five weeks, the merchants agreeing to furnish gifts amounting to a total of $75 to the baby voted the most popular. The contest is not being run according to physical points of the child; personality, or any other characteristic which would gain public approval, counting in the final decision. The merchants are given a free trailer on the theatre screen. A cut of the co-op ad will be seen on this page.

In line with the co-op ad the newspaper published a coupon to be filled out by the applicant for a free sitting at one of two of the leading photographers mentioned; or, the application may be obtained at the Palace Theatre. The newspaper offers the inducement of 50 votes for filling out its coupon while only ten votes are given at the theatre with each paid admission. As usual in these contests, pictures of the babies are numbered and displayed in the theatre lobby and the voters pick their favorites, number the ballots and drop them in a box prepared for that purpose. Age limit of contestants runs from 6 months to 3 years.

Two other successful contests recently put over by Louis included a Spring Fashion show and one to find the prettiest redhead in Lorain County. In the former case the merchants paid for everything, the ads gave the theatre a fine break and the stunt did bring additional business to the house during a period of exceptionally bad weather. We are reproducing an ad run in connection with the above to show you how it was worked out. This page ad was also supported by a follow-up ad of the theatre.

We must agree with Louis that the layout on the redhead stunt is a corker. Just take a glance at the accompanying cut and note the space allotted the house. Also note that all the merchants cooperated to the fullest extent by each donating gifts to the winner. The contest was open to all red-heads and they were required to appear on the stage where they were judged by a committee composed of the Mayor and two leading citizens. In choosing the winner the judges were guided by the applause of the audience. Of course, Louis tells us, the tie-up was an ideal one on account of the picture featuring "Millie," but adds that it can be used just as favorably with a picture featuring any red-headed star.

He also enclosed a little gag used in connection with "Doctors' Wives." It is the usual size of a prescription envelope with face copy reading: "Prescription—For Blues, Bad Business, Lassitude, Loss of Appetite, Low Spirits and General Depressed Mental and Physical Conditions." See Inside. The card enclosed advises the reader to swallow the enclosed pills and dash right over to the Palace theatre.

All good stunts, Louis, and the Club is glad to hear that you are so busy out your way putting over shows. Thanks for your contributions and be sure to let us know how the baby contest came out. We believe that this stunt is a splendid way to boost a drop in trade at any season of the year.

W. E. TOOLEY SAYS:

"We find the ROUND TABLE CLUB a very interesting section in the Herald, as no doubt all managers are wondering how the next fellow puts the picture over. The writer has found in its pages many helpful suggestions that have assisted greatly in exploitation."

State Theatre,
Red Bluff, Cal.

Bailey's Magazine Tie-up Secures Big Circulation Of An Ad

In exchange for a small number of guest tickets, Harold Bailey, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., pulled off a recent stunt which netted him the circulation of a message in 5,000 homes throughout the city and secured additional ballyhoo on a current attraction by staging a parade to the theatre.

He made a tie-up with the distributors of Liberty magazine for the insertion of a herald on the picture he wished to plug in each of the 5,000 copies for local distribution. Except for the cost of printing the herald no other expense was attached to the deal. He then arranged to have the delivery boys attend the theatre bearing signs such as you see in the accompanying photo. A police escort on motorcycles, via the main stem, headed the procession.

That's certainly getting extensive circulation of a message at minimum cost, plus the added value of street advertising. Bailey states it worked out so nicely for him that he just had to pass the idea along to other Club members.

Schmidt Puts Over Fine Cooperative Stunt With Bakery

An 8 by 10 still from "Seed" showing two of the featured players in a breakfast scene captioned, "What would you like for breakfast, Genevieve," inspired Wm. El Schmidt, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., with an idea which developed just like a snowball rolling down hill. One idea led to another and before this manager was through he not only garnered a lot of costless advertising on the current picture, but worked in a lot of free and valuable publicity for a coming attraction.

He called on a big local baker with the above mentioned still, having painted in an additional balloon reading, "Give me the delicious toast that's made from Blank bread," as an answer to the above question.

Schmidt first sold the bakery on the idea of this tie-up as a newspaper ad, which space and cut would run the baker about $30. The completed ad appearing in the paper had the above described 8 by 10 in a four-column cut with a box head above in bold type reading, "It's Life Itself——!!" Directly underneath the cut in a descriptive manner appeared, "John Boles and Genevieve Tobin in a scene from Seed, Charles G. Norris' daring novel that shook the country, appearing at the Capitol now."

After the bakery was thoroughly sold on going through with the newspaper tie-up and the cut was made, Schmidt endeavored to show the bakery for a few more dollars how to get further value from the cut as well as the money he had already spent.

Twenty thousand coupons were inserted in wrapped loaves of bread over a period of four days; copy reading, "Save this coupon. When accompanied by three others spelling 'Seed,' the sensational Charles G. Norris novel now showing at the Capitol, it will entitle you to a guest ticket to see Gary Cooper in 'City Streets' at the Capitol May 23-25-26. This coupon is transferable—ask your neighbor—maybe they have the missing letter of your set."

The letter "D" from SEED was used as the key letter, allowing 100 of these to be printed and inserted in the bread. The baker was so pleased that he actually offered to pay for all over 100 tickets, feeling positive that that number would not be reached because of the wide territory in which his bread is distributed.

The baker was sold to make use of the cut further by making it up as part of a window card, advertising the coupons in the bread. Four hundred of these cards were distributed to 200 dealers to be used in their windows. Two thousand of these window card layouts were run off on paper. These were pasted on windows of the different stores, the inside of show cases and inserted into packages whether they bought bread or not.

By using the word Seed as the key word and having the newspaper ad of Seed on the window card and heralds as well as Seed mentioned on the coupon in the bread, Schmidt could not see the logic of giving a prize to see something already so well exploited. So, naturally, the next thought was to make the tickets good to see the next picture and in that way have the one campaign carry two different sales without interfering with either.

To our way of thinking, this is one of the best examples of cooperative exploitation and merchandising we've run across in some time. You will note that the enthusiasm of the baker increased as each new phase of the stunt unfolded until he actually offered to stand certain costs. If this isn't backing up sales effort with results then we don't know what we're talking about. The truth of the matter is that there are lots of bakers and merchants who do not know much about advertising and they are not in the class that generally employ an agency; hence, they are more than ready to welcome practical suggestions with open arms. And it's a fair enough break all around to make every one happy. Fine work, Schmidt, and let's hear about another one on par with this.

BEST FORMS OF THEATRE ADVERTISING! By Douglas F. George

(EDITOR'S NOTE: We continue to present articles from Club members on the subject of what is thought to be the most efficient form of theatre advertising. Opinions have been varied; newspaper, screen and ballys all coming in for their share of glory.

Herewith we present the views of Douglas George, manager of the Columbia Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio. It will be seen that he is a strong supporter of the newspaper medium.)

Newspaper advertising will sell your show—providing you sell the public your ad!

How can a manager sell the public on his ad? It's all very easy—TALK TO THEM IN THEIR OWN LANGUAGE! The most successful advertiser is one who understands humble folk and can express himself simply and naturally. Don't get your language too involved or conspicuous—you'll scare people. The public does not and cannot appreciate good writing.

Remember! You can't kid the public—so you managers who use superlatives on every attraction might as well forget all of them and get down to writing copy that really SELLS. The art of advertising is merely having the knack of understanding people's preferences, likes and dislikes, and Heaven knows—they hate to be kidded!

There are five points that should command your attention when preparing an ad.

1. You must attract attention.
2. Your ad must be readable.
3. It must be convincing and truthful.
4. It must be concise and to the point.
5. It must create a desire.

If your ad attracts attention; if the eyes of the potential patron is drawn to it; but if they find it difficult to read, their eyes will travel on. If it is readable, understandable, but not convincing, you will not get their money. If it is untruthful and misleading you may get them once—but not twice.

In my estimation the perfect ad has plenty of white space, has a layout with a definite focal point, and has a "Sock Line" at the very beginning that attracts enough interest to read further on into smaller type. It must be an ad that is simple in the manner of layout. Any ad that is too involved, contains too much copy, or is broken up into too many small boxes is doomed to failure.

Use capital letters for emphasis only. When used in excess they lose their value as emphasizers.

Always try to place your illustrations on the right hand side of your ad. The reason for this is that an ad is read from left to right, which brings the eye continuously into the illustration. Another primary reason for placing an illustration of any decent size on the right of an ad is that it has a tendency to serve as a natural border.

Whenever possible the illustration should carry the same story you have in type.

Another important item: SELL YOUR ENTIRE PROGRAM. Under present conditions it is necessary more than ever to sell your shorts. The public is shopping for entertainment bargains and want the most for their money.

Nothing in advertising is ever accomplished without enthusiasm. In preparing a campaign try to project yourself into the minds and beliefs of ordinary human beings, and not a theatre manager. Put yourself in their place and try to imagine just what their feelings and reactions will be when they read your copy. Try to do something different whenever you can. Search for new angles. Make your campaigns refreshing to yourself, and they will be refreshing to the reader.

REMEMBER! The newspaper ad is the backbone of your seat-selling campaign. Build your exploitation and publicity around it.

Here Are Some of George's Newspaper Ads!

Pickett Wins Out In Phoenix, Ariz., With Several Stunts

Two campaigns, one on "Skippy" and the other on "City Streets," recently waged by A. G. Pickett, District Advertising Manager for Publix in Arizona, netted him a large amount of space and coverage at minimum expense.

In connection with "Skippy" playing at the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., Pickett promoted a newspaper contest. The contest included prizes for the longest tailed dogs and for the shortest tailed dogs, and for the next longest and shortest. This contest was started three days ahead of the opening date for the picture and had it carried on through to culminate with the judging on Wednesday of the week's run.

The contest got a lot of attention and publicity in the homes. This together with the newspaper display and publicity coupled with the announcements made in the schools by the various teachers, along with announcements made by the Women's Clubs and the PTA focussed the attention on "Skippy."

In selling "City Streets" for the Orpheum Theatre at Phoenix, Pickett effected a tie-up with the city, somewhat similar to the "Manslaugher" traffic stunt; only this one was made to include both the motorist and the pedestrian. The stunt was to print cards, the size of window cards (white cards with red ink) reading as follows: "City Streets—Are Not Race Tracks—Motorists—Drive Carefully—Pedestrians—Watch Your Step."

The cards were mounted on wooden stands or standards and set about the town—at the curbs of the four corners of the intersections. They had the appearance of city property and that helped considerably.

On the city traffic markers—the "No Left Turn" markers, the theatre used larger posters—the same copy—but these were about 3 feet high and were prepared in the art room, beaverboard painted in with white and then the red letters. Where the intersections were light controlled the smaller cards were set on the standards out in the middle of the intersections in addition to the curb lines.

The stunt got over nicely and had a very good selling effect, as selling the title tied-in with the regular newspaper display, theatre display, etc.

We've published a variety of stunts and contests on both of the above-named pictures and it is possible that some members are familiar with the foregoing. However, they're good as new wherever they've never been tried out and there's a different slant in the traffic stunt that makes it all the more interesting. Thanks for the details, Pickett, and let's hear from you some more.

Hobby Horses Used By Griffith When He Played 'Dude Ranch'

Two hobby-horses built of beaver board and horse hair were used to advertise "Dude Ranch" by P. D. Griffith, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Macon, Ga., and lest some will classify these as cut-outs let us reiterate that they were built.

A head of Jack Oakie was cut from a poster and mounted on movable, comic looking legs. This was placed astride the hobby horse from which hung loose reins attached to the bridle worn by the horse. The two horses were in the long lobby for nearly a week before showing and on days of showing were moved out front. Copy relative to the picture, star and playdates appeared on cards which were placed against the hobby horses.

A simple and effective way of making something novel for a lobby display can be accomplished with little effort, as Griffith points out above. These attracted attention for him and he's therefore passing the idea along to his fellow members. By this time, P. D., you must have another stunt to send the Club so why not shoot it in to your host of brother Round Tablers?

Ralph Bartlett's First Contribution A Bridge Whist Idea

Along with his application for membership in this Club came also the first contribution of Ralph Q. Bartlett, manager of the Fox-Hippodrome Theatre, Murphysboro, Ill. It's a bridge whist gag and if any of you are passing up opportunities offered for some crackerjack publicity through this medium, then you're bound to find his experiences interesting.

When Bartlett was stationed in Salem, Ill., last summer, he arranged with clubwomen to supply their regular Thursday parties with tally cards as a means of getting his message before a class of patronage more or less difficult to cater to. Considerable success followed his efforts in this direction because of the cards being carried home and it was entirely reasonable to assume that the program on the reverse side of the tally was read.

Shortly after his arrival in Murphysboro he found conditions practically identical with those in Salem and again proceeded to put his plan into effect. The clubwomen were again enthusiastic over having their tally cards supplied free of charge and were glad to lend co-operation.

As another example of what can be accomplished along bridge whist lines, only recently Bartlett was approached for a donation of $10 to help promote a public bridge party at the home of a local fraternal organization. He suggested that he furnish the tally cards instead of cash and this was instantly accepted, inasmuch as it was figured a big item. Through this move he secured circulation of his program through 105 tables, or to about 420 people he wished to reach, for the small sum of $5.

Bridge is a mighty popular pastime these days, and it's by no means limited to one class of patrons; and Bartlett's stunt shows what can be accomplished by contacting clubs with an idea of this kind. He's real enthusiastic about this scheme and wants other Club members to try it out in case any are overlooking this means of circulating a message. The accompanying illustration will give readers an idea of how the card was made up. Each one, of course, had a piece of colored cord attached to the top portion and this is not shown in the cut.

EDWARD C. SPENGEMAN SAYS:

"Needless to say, I find the HERALD a great help in more ways than one, and would certainly not wish to do without it, as I read it from cover to cover each week as it comes out."

FALL FASHION REVUES!

It would be wise to start making preparations early this fall for the big Fashion Show tie-up. It may be the turning point for hitting your mid-season form in receipts and should, therefore, be started early enough to make sure that every angle is covered.

Few merchant-theatre tie-ups are as effective or as profitable as this particular Show and most always it results in packed houses throughout the run. Incidentally, why not plan your Fashion Show for this fall to run more than one performance? Others have made two to four day affairs and turned them away during the entire run.

It is always advisable to keep in mind the bookings for these shows. Proper selection of the feature picture is just as important as any other phase of your arrangements and you must be certain that the picture is a good one. Don't rely solely upon the Fashion angle to put it over because it will attract many patrons who rarely or never attend the theatre and won't help to make them steady attendants for your house if they have to sit through a bad picture.

Past issues of the Club section carried many detailed accounts of how these Fashion Shows and Revues are handled; look them over carefully and lay your own plans out well enough in advance to insure success.

We shall endeavor, from time to time, to carry more dope on these Shows, so watch the Club pages. Those who have already started the ball arolling would be helping their brother managers by forwarding the layout as soon as possible so we can carry it on these pages.

Kids Got Off From Schools to Attend Weaver's Matinees

One of the many excellent stunts put over by L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., in advertising "Skippy" was the early closing of schools to permit the children to attend a special showing of "Skippy."

Weaver contacted the Superintendent of Schools and sold him on the idea of dismissing schools early to permit the children to attend the first matinee showing of the picture. The children were granted a special admission price by attending this opening matinee. Proper announcement of the early Friday closing to permit the scholars to see "Skippy" was made throughout the schools by the teachers in their respective class rooms.

Further publicity was derived on this stunt due to the kiddies carrying the news home to their fathers and mothers. They were convinced that they wanted to see "Skippy" and they helped to convince their folks, too, on the catchline, "Whether young or old, you'll like SKIPPY."

An early school closing stunt ought to make a big hit with kids in all parts of the world, but now that vacation time is here you'll have to file this one away for next September. Word-of-mouth publicity, in any form as long as it's the right kind, is generally conceded one of the best forms of publicity obtainable and we are glad to give space to Weaver's contribution.

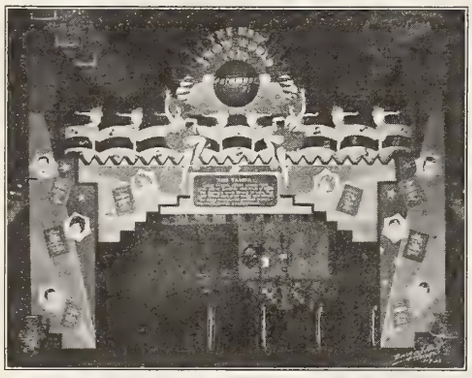
A STUNT ON UNDERWORLD PICTURE!

One of a series of stunts pulled on "Criminal Code" by W. A. Popham, manager of the Starland Theatre, Winnipeg, Canada, consisted of a pony-drawn street ballyhoo with man dressed in a prison suit of clothing. The photo above shows vehicle near the front of theatre. The house also had a large sign of title across front, with background of stone-work effect and a lobby display of inmate in regulation prison cell.

SHOWMANSHIP IN THE LOBBY
BEAUTIFUL ART DISPLAYS
To Catch and Hold the Patron's Eye

(Reprinted by Request)

The displays pictured on this page were created by Louis Sylvester, artist for the Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Fla. A complete description accompanies each display and should prove immensely valuable to other theatre artists anxious to improve their work or seeking new ideas. We are grateful to Paul Short, manager of the theatre, for furnishing us with this fine material.



Sunburst in red and gold metallics and clouds in blue tones outlined in silver. Revolving globe in green and blue with green and silver metallic letters. Background in silver and black with figures in metallic costumes. Side panels and top panel in brilliant colors outlined in silver. Silver metallic star heads and contrasting panels.

Foreground—Veranda and house in stucco effect, made realistic by fountains and pathway.

Figures — Girls in metallics. Head of Buddy Rogers in colors.
Foreground — Money bags in tones of brown. Stocks of cutout gold money.
Lettering — "Buddy Rogers" on green metallics outlined with purple metallics.

Special Newspaper Edition And Radio Aids For Whittaker

A red-inked first page of a special edition of the local newspaper, sympathetic co-operation by the newspaper management and a radio broadcast, were the highlights of a recent campaign made on "Front Page" by E. E. Whittaker, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

3,000 copies of the paper were over-printed with the message reading, "'The Front Page'—Great As The Stage Play—Greater As A Picture—It Has Everything." Name of theatre and dates followed. Newsboys stood in front of the theatre, yelling sales copy and passing out papers, and others stood on prominent corners shouting out a similar message. This stunt was pulled on Friday and Saturday atfernoons prior to the Monday opening. A preview was given the local newspapermen and they gave vent to their feelings in their respective columns.

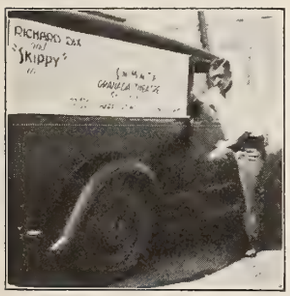
A radio announcer and news broadcast for the newspaper gave the theatre two announcements over the regular broadcast during the run of the picture, getting over the name of the theatre, title and playdates.

The above strinkingly illustrates how advantageous it is to stand in with local publicity channels when it becomes necessary to stress this phase of a campaign. Certainly, no manager should ever lose an opportunity to cultivate the good-will of those fellows behind the guns of radio and paper. It is evident that Whittaker has made friends among them in his town. Next time he writes we will expect to hear how his summer campaigns are going over.

Gardner Ties With Boy Scouts To Aid In Sale of Tickets

A summer business booster in the way of a ticket tie-up with the Boy Scouts proved a most valuable aid to combat the usual slump in trade during the hot weather for "Al" Allen Gardner, manager of the Granada Theatre, Stuart, Neb.

He heard that the local troop was making plans to spend a week in the lake region and immediately contacted the leader with the suggestion that if the boys would sell a number of season tickets, each good for $5.40 worth of admissions for $5, he would agree to pay for the cabin accommodations. We are reproducing a sample of the ticket on this page so you can see how the card was made up. And did the boys sell them? To the tune of $800 worth, they did, and when taking into consideration the small population of Stuart this amount of money means something. Of course, their parents came across and when others heard that the Granada was rewarding the boys for their efforts, they, too, gave the sale strong support. And don't get the idea that the tickets are not being used, for they are.



It's a little late in the season to spring a summer business booster gag on our members, but this one can either be filed away for future use or put in effect at most any time as a means to stimulate trade. As Gardner suggests, some local organization, such as the Boy Scouts, back of a scheme practically assures its success. Only 40 cents was lost through the sale of each ticket and when this means a steady stream of patrons during an off season, plus the creation of good will, then it's something to think about. Anyway, it worked wonders for Al, and he's so enthusiastic about it that he's shooting it along for the benefit of others. He neglected to state just what the cabin rental amounted to, but you can easily figure out for yourselves that it couldn't have been very much.

WELL-BALANCED SHOWS!

Don't be discouraged if on one or two occasions in the past your suggestions for improving the shows were not well received by your district or circuit booker. Possibly, prevailing conditions made it impossible for him to take action on what you wanted.

The local manager is beyond all question of doubt the best judge of what a well-balanced program should consist of. He is also the one who should be in a position to suggest the best days to spot certain productions. Any intelligent booker knows this and if he is at all anxious to cooperate with the local manager he will gladly change or switch the shows to suit the suggestion.

Get your bookings as early as possible and as far in advance as you can. This will permit sufficient time for the booker to pay attention to what you want. Look over every program booked into your house and consult the HERALD regularly for reviews, etc., so that you can decide whether the bill is well-balanced and not top heavy with some particular phase of entertainment. Or possibly lacking in much needed comedy.

By keeping informed at all times on the various subjects released, especially the shorts, you can readily see, as soon as the bookings come in, whether suggestions are in order.

We have always admired the programs assembled by the independent exhibitor because he must shift for himself and naturally pays careful attention to these details. You must likewise learn to give more thought to what is projected on your screen. Don't take anything thrown at you and laugh it off with the alibi that the booker is to blame. YOU are the one responsible for your house. Fight for every little thing that will help you make your house a profit-maker.

MANY MANAGERS MAKE MERRY—DOWN ON THE FARM!

Combining business with pleasure, Charlie Winkleman, g. m. of the Playhouse-Prudential Theatre Circuit, assembled a group of his managers and carted them up to Darien, Conn., where they were the guests of Irwin Wheeler, prexy of the outfit on his farm.

After a short business session, during which prizes for exploitation, etc., were awarded, they adjourned for lunch and some healthy outdoor sports. The awards were won by Bill Pine of Darien and second place to Johnny Mason of Bellerose, L. I.

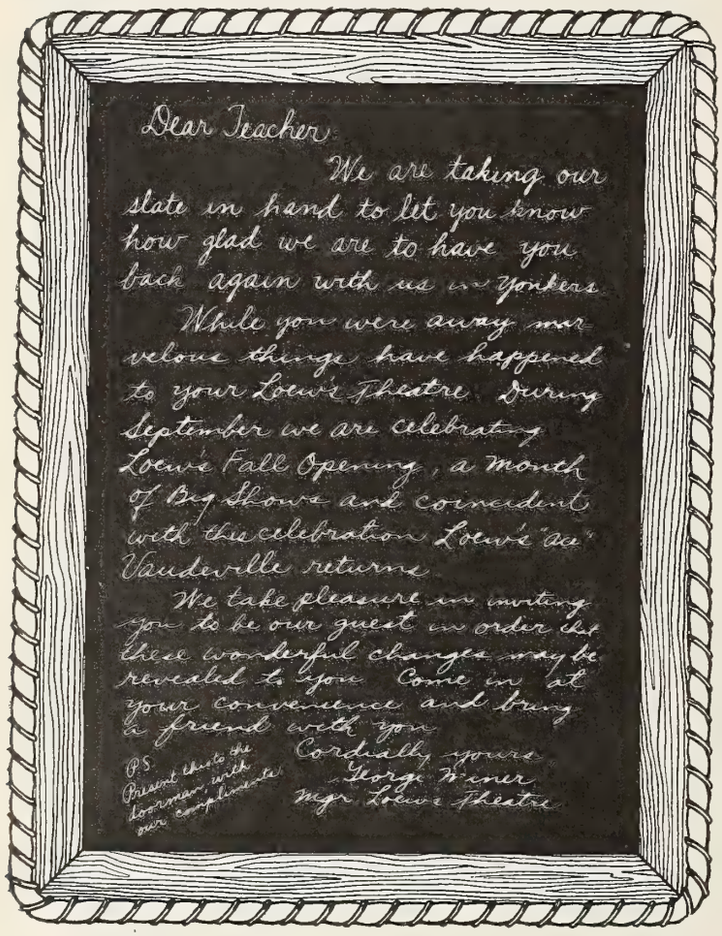
START WITH THE TEACHER!

We are reproducing here a gag used by the Loew Circuit in several of their spots last season and which we feel warrants repetition on our pages. At the same time this will take care of the requests from various sources for copies of this slate.

Those who feel that a stunt of this kind will sort of cement some more good will between teachers and the theatre are welcome to the layout and text. Make it up to suit your own ideas or revamp it entirely. Or, perhaps, something along these lines might be good for the school children or high school students, too.



Dear Teacher
We are taking our slate in hand to let you know how glad we are to have you back again with us in Yonkers
While you were away many velous things have happened to your Loew's Theatre. During September we are celebrating Loew's Fall Opening, a Month of Big Shows and coincident with the celebration Loew's Vaudeville returns
We take pleasure in inviting you to be our guest in order that these wonderful changes may be revealed to you. Come in at your convenience and bring a friend with you
P.S. Present this to doorman with our compliments
Cordially yours
George Weiner

Special Hand Bill On "Devil To Pay" Aids Howard Thomas

Distribution of a special hand bill on "Devil to Pay" brought a lot of laughs and favorable comment to the ears of Howard Thomas, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Greenville, S. C., when this stunt was put in effect as a portion of his campaign on this picture.

The handbill was in the form of a bill and at the head it read, "To Ronald Colman, in Account with the Devil":

"February 4. One nicely arranged marriage; broken up and sweetie swiped.—Two hours of hell fire.

"February 5. For breaking promise to Miss Dot Hope not to see actress lover again.—One severe conscience pang.

"February 6. For enjoying clandestine visit to actress sweetheart.—Thirty prods by devil's own pitchfork.

"February 7. For marrying wealthy heiress and thereby cutting out the Grand Duke Paul.—Ten coals of fire on head.

"Total amount due—Probably loss of chances of getting to heaven."

And then, in the lower left-hand corner: "Ronald Colman will settle this account in full." Also name of theatre and playdates.

This was a novel way of getting over some of the highlights in the picture, we'd say, Howard, and many thanks for sending it along for the rest of our gang. Novelty heralds, with new slants on copy, appear to find favor with many of our members who are not in localities where patrons have had an overdose of this sort of literature. And we'll be ready for that next stunt whenever you're ready to send it along.

Engel Has A Kiddie Club Under Way At Strand, Perth Amboy

As a means of further boosting an already established feeling of good will for himself and house, Phillip Engel, manager of the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., has formed the Strand Kiddie Club and inaugurated Saturday morning matinees for the members. As we write, it is progressing nicely.

At the first Saturday meeting of the club the children were given their membership cards, identifying them for future admission to the theatre. The following Saturday a meeting was held in order to elect officers of the organization. All during the summer special performances will be held on the specified days, this same admission entitling the holder to witness the afternoon feature performance.

It is also planned, with the cooperation of various service clubs, to hold a picnic as the summer vacation period nears a close. If this venture succeeds in getting over, the admission to the outing will be the presentation of the regular membership card. It is also planned to draw upon talent of the members for entertainment during the morning shows and a cordial invitation is being extended to parents to come along and see just what the theatre is doing along the described lines.

In addition to the above promotion of the Kid Klub we also note that Phillip crashed the Staten Island paper for a big story about himself and policy of his theatre and we'll have to admit that it puts over a lot of points that any manager would like to get into print. Here's hoping your club turns out to be a huge success. Engel, and we know you'll put it over. Let's hear all about what you did to boost it along during the summer months.

Radio Club Skits Feature Thompson's Work With "Skippy"

A feature stunt recently put over in connection with "Skippy" by T. W. Thompson, manager of the Avalon Theatre, Strand Junction, Col., was a broadcast tie-up with a Kiddie Club sponsored by a local radio dealer for a series of skits to extend over a period of three weeks in advance of opening.

A script on the picture was obtained and two local boys took the parts of "Skippy" and "Sooky" and a local girl took the part of "Eloise." The kids even dressed their parts for the benefit of the visitors at the studio. The radio broadcasts were arranged with the adult appeal in mind and from the reaction of favorable comments received, these broadcasts surely hit the spot.

A dog parade was held on Saturday morning current with the showing of the picture, for the benefit of the kids. From appearances, it seemed that the kids picked up about every stray dog in town. All in all, it was a huge success. A prize was given to the owner of the best dog and passes to the theatre for other prize winners. The music store also contributed prizes, kazoos and ukeleles.

The music store arranged with all dealers of radios to set a radio in front of their store during the parade between 10 and 11 o'clock. During this time the radio station broadcast march records for the benefit of kiddies on parade.

This stunt earned a lot of valuable advance publicity for the above picture and Thompson is passing it along for the benefit of any of his fellow members who may want to try it out. By this time, T. W., you must have another good one up your sleeve, so why not shoot it in next time you write.

YOU CAN'T SINK A FLEET WITH ONE BROADSIDE!

If there is any branch of business where determination, pertinacity and plain every day stick-to-it-ive-ness is needed, it is advertising.

The business man who goes into advertising with intentions of firing a salvo and returning to port is all mixed up in his battle plans. It takes more than one broadside to sink a fleet.

Advertising, to be successful and profitable, should be prudently planned, designed to fit the business, backed by good merchandise and service, and the whole carried out faithfully and continuously.

Fred Meyer Built Summer Trade By Selling Cool Idea

In an effort to build trade over the warm weather, Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., sold a newspaper the idea of running a solid page of theatre ads stressing the fact that Milwaukee's theatres were the coolest places in town. The page was run in two colors, green splashed here and there to suggest sea waves.

The power of suggestion is great and undoubtedly this ad helped stimulate trade over a period which generally falls off due to the many trips planned by people on holidays. It also seems to us that the idea is a good one to run regardless of holidays. Occasional propaganda to the effect that theatres ARE the coolest places in town would appear to be excellent tonic for the hot weather months, and we are indebted to Fred for passing along the reminder. As he is always putting over new ideas, expect another one soon.

Connor Has Large Lobby But Keeps It Well Decorated

There's excellent reason for a manager to rejoice over the possession of a lobby large enough to properly advertise coming attractions. That's an advantage. But the trick of keeping a large lobby filled with attractive displays, to a degree that it doesn't present a lonesome looking appearance, is another point to be taken into consideration. For that reason we're presenting a sample of one of a variety of displays M. M. Connor, manager of the Tower Theatre, Chicago, Ill., made to decorate the spacious lobby of his theatre.

The illustrated display on "Tabu" is a part of one used for the front of one of the first-run houses in the same circuit as the Tower. It was backed up with a set of Blue drapes, a valance and cut-out with letters painted for the top. Two shadow boxes were used, one containing a painted poster and stills and the other a special poster made of cut-out felt letters, to tie in the other feature that was running that week. The boxes were linked with the piece on "Tabu" by crepe paper streamers, and 22 x 28 posters in frames completed the display.

We're sorry that a number of other photos of Tower lobby displays cannot be reprduced here but detail is not sharp enough to do full justice. But we can easily see that Connor has some excellent ideas on how a large lobby should be dressed and we believe he will impart further information to any Club member who will but take time to drop him a line. In the meantime, we'll look forward to receiving further examples of work from this showman.

SAENGER CLUB 13,000 STRONG

A little over one year ago the Saenger Theatre and the "Item-Tribune," both New Orleans institutions, started a club for children under 12 years of age and during its recent first birthday celebration it was announced that a membership of 13,000 had been attained over this period. Dues are five cents a year—for a button to wear.

The club meets each Saturday morning at the Saenger and each week more than 20 members take part in a special Booster Show, staged just before the regular show opens. Over 1,000 children have participated in acts during the past twelve months. Once a year the entire stage show is produced by Booster members.

"Uncle Joe" Estes is the leader and guiding star of the club, assisted by Helena Strakova, ballet instructor, and "Herbie," who plays the organ. Seasonal and holiday stunts are promoted the year 'round, including Easter Egg hunts, 4th of July picnics, beach parties and a gala Xmas party when 7,000 toys were distributed.

Congratulations, "Uncle Joe," for organizing one of the largest kiddie clubs in the world. We'd like to hear more about your activities.

THEATRE MANAGERS CHANGE RAPIDLY IN RACINE PLAYHOUSE REALM

(Editor's Note: This article appeared in a Racine, Wis., daily. Read it and laugh—or weep!)

In view of the rapid changes taking place in local theatre managerships, it has been deemed practical to present this prospectus, so that the public at large may know who's who in the Racine entertainment world and the theatre help may have some guide to their current bosses.

(Editor's note: This story was accurate at the time of going to press, but is subject to change without previous notice.)

All laurels for quick changes in managers rest securely on the brow of Warner's Venetian theatre, where the managers are checked in and out so fast they meet themselves in the foyer. Owen McKivitt was followed as manager by "Doc" Westphal, now managing the Kenosha theatre. Another week followed in which nobody seems to remember just who managed the Venetian, although there is a vague recollection of Dick Pritchard as assistant. About this time, too, Henri Margo was walking around the theatre giving orders.

Recruited from the big-tops was Lon Ramsdell, ex-circus man, who next took charge of the cinema cathedral with Robert Clark as assistant. After a short time in the managerial chair, Mr. Ramsdell became firmly convinced that Barnum was right, and consequently at this writing, Mr. Ramsdell is in Appleton.

In a couple of months Mr. Ramsdell was supplanted by Charlie Nebel, who was flanked with Harry Anderson as assistant manager and B. A. Griffiths as publicity director, advertising manager and counselor of public relations. So successful were Mr. Griffiths' relations with the press and the public that he was appointed to the managership. But the Venetian was still erupting, and now "Mac" returns to his old stamping grounds as the "new" Venetian manager.

Plans to stage a parade of ex-Venetian managers were kiboshed when local authorities decided that traffic would be tied up for too long a time.

Bob Ungerfeld, the old maestro of the Fox State theatre, has resigned and his place will be taken by Mickey Gross of El Dorado, Kan., Carthage, Miss., Springfield, Mo., Kansas City, Kan., South Bend, Ind., Sioux City, Ia., St. Paul, Minn., and other points. The turnover in assistant managers at the State is almost on a par with that of managers at the Venetian. After the departure of Elmer Zieman, the assistant manager's shoes were filled by Leon Poitra, who was later sent to Antigo.

Gordon Kline, chief of service, was advanced to the job of assistant and was recently supplanted by H. Nichols of Milwaukee.

Since the opening of the RKO Mainstreet theatre, George Gambrill as manager and Matty Fox as assistant, have pursued the more or less even tenor of their way, although neither of them go around smashing mirrors to see what will happen.

Not only theatre managers, but theatre names change in Racine. The Orpheum became the Allen and later the RKO Mainstreet. The Bijou became the Saxe State, later the Fox State, and now the New Fox State. The Majestic became the Uptown. And to theatre men and newspapers it would not be in the least surprising if by the time this is published, the Fox State has become the RKO Mainstreet, the RKO Mainstreet has become Warner's Venetian, Warner's Venetian has become the Fox State and the Rex has become Roxy's.

Van Hook Acquires Theatre And Sells Co-op To Merchants

The home-owned-enterprise idea was splendidly capitalized upon when former manager R. W. Van Hook, of the Rialto Theatre, Morrilton, Ark., recently acquired this house from the Malco Amusement Co.

What he did was to make a call on his local newspaperman and these two put their heads together for the promotion of a full page of ads from practically every prominent merchant in town. In addition to this flock of congratulatory ads the page contained a photo of the new owner, with write-ups underneath, and a large announcement of current atractions and theatre policy. A streamer head ran across the top of the ad reading, "R. W. Van Hook Acquires Rialto Theatre."

In this case the merchants gracefully came across with the page of ads because of interest in an enterprise that was owned and operated by a man who had made known his desire to become a local citizen. This fact was also stressed in copy announcing the theatre acquisition and its future policy. This was a smart move on the part of Van Hook and it gave his house a nice send-off under the new banner and we're telling you all about it in case there's another member of this Club making plans to become the owner-manager of a theatre.

PROGRAM READERS!

PRICE IS IMPORTANT; BUT PRICE ISN'T EVERYTHING

You can buy a first class automobile for a thousand dollars and you can buy a second hand automobile for four hundred dollars. Both have wheels but of course they both won't give you the same service.

We could run inferior pictures and maybe give you a show at 15 cents, but you would never enjoy any of our pictures and we would never enjoy your patronage.

When you are thinking of price, and comparing price, compare the shows also. Remember that for 25 cents the Orange Theatre has given you "Strangers May Kiss," "Connecticut Yankee," "Cimarron," "Millionaire" and "Skippy," and will soon show you "Trader Horn," "Seed," "Daddy Long Legs," "Gold Dust Gertie," "Smart Money" and many others.

Other theatres may be able to equal our price; no other theatre can equal our price and at the same time equal our shows. We want to thank you for your patronage and we want to tell you that we're going to continue to give you what we always have given you . . . the finer pictures at a reasonable price.

Rosenthal Wages A Splendid Campaign To Sell "Politics"

A corking campaign was waged on "Politics" by Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkesbarre, Pa., and it not only brought home the bacon but materially aided to further publicize the names of theatre and manager in all sections of the city. It looks like a winner, boys, and here it is:

He started off by having the Mayor, his secretary and city officials sign a petition to have himself put on "Everybody's Ticket" to run for the office of Supt. of Docks and Piers. Wilkesbarre being an inland city, this office naturally does not exist. The idea was further built up putting on a burlesque skit a week in advance of trailer, the skit being framed around his political campaign. Assistant manager George Bannen acted as campaign manager and introduced the candidate who gave a humorous recital of his platform and policies, all of which led up to the trailer.

Newspaper offices were contacted to announce the candidate for office and they all played it up from a humorous angle. Saturday night before opening a political rally was arranged to be held in the Square and prior to this a parade was staged, led by an old 1906 auto with the candidate riding in it. An old time German band was dug up and put on a truck and 100 kids were mobilized to form the vanguard and carry banners. As soon as Bannen began to speak from the truck to introduce the candidate he was arrested for not having a permit, all according to prearranged plans made with the Chief of Police. Reporters were on hand to cover the story and it broke in next morning's paper.

Additional effort consisted of a tie-up with a local furniture store for distribution of small cards with copy reading, "It's Good Politics to Shop Here," and stating that the card was good for 10 per cent on any purchase; tack cards were placed in downtown districts advising the public to vote for Marie Dressler for Mayor; campaign speeches were broadcast; a street bally of an old barouche with two girls dressed as Marie and Polly (an accommodating horse helped matters by pulling a runaway directly in front of newspaper offices); a political skit put on at Women's Club; and a giant board, about 25 feet long, was placed on the public square and covered with 11 x 14 stills and cut-out heads of Dressler and Moran. Of course, regular miscellaneous advertising was also carried out.

In connection with exploitation of the Bobby Jones Golf shorts he visited every country club and secured their membership lists; special caddy nights were held at the theatre and felt caddy caps distributed; 5,000 book marks went to the libraries; a tie-in was made with a news agency for extensive distribution of a "Good Morning" slip, pasted on all papers; made arrangements with newspaper to have local golf pro cover series for review; and installed a putting course in the lobby of the theatre.

Another stunt he recently put over was selling the Sunday paper the idea of running a movie page, all stories written by him, including a column of gossip carrying his by-line. And it's a darn good column, too. The material is interesting with just enough humor mixed in to pep it up.

Original or not, that campaign stunt on "Politics" pulled off by Morris was a corker to our way of thinking, and it ought to furnish inspiration for a lot more gags to pull in connection with this picture. Anyway, this one went through without a hitch, some taking it seriously and others tumbling to the stunt at once and getting a big kick out of it. But outside of its humorous angles it secured valuable publicity for the house and so we're passing it along for others to use as a pattern, or to adapt to their own needs.

Traffic Rule Gag Helps John Burke Sell "City Lights"

Use of a novelty card, listing city traffic rules, and a school poster contest recently netted a front page break for the former and intense interest from the students on the latter, when these stunts were employed on "City Lights" and "Skippy" by John A. Burke, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Eastland, Texas.

The front page break, in connection with distribution of cards on the Chaplin picture read, "If the Watch Your Step editor notices you on the street and sees you do some act of kindness, an amusing act or anything out of the ordinary you will be entitled to a free ticket to the Lyric theatre. Your name will not appear. Through the co-operation of the Lyric Theatre the paper will publish these columns each week, hoping to give many tickets and bring about many deeds of kindness and happy surprises to the people of Eastland."

The novelty cards listed ten rules on the city ordinance in regard to motor vehicles. A caption at the top read, "Police Notice—This is not a law violation notice but a list of the city's traffic rules which must be observed by all motorists on the city streets." At the bottom of the card appeared copy relative to title of picture, cast, theatre and playdates.

Every student in the grade schools who wanted to enter the contest made one poster on "Skippy." The ten best were selected by the teachers to represent their respctive schools in the contest. The ten best posters selected from each school were displayed in the lobby on compoboard placques and a committee of local critics from the Parent-Teachers' Association selected the winning posters from this display.

An award was given to the winning school to be used in buying playground equipment or library books. The contest aroused considerable interest among the childrens' parents as well as the children; and was a very good drawing card for the picture.

On the opening afternoon of "Skippy" a parade was held—led by the High School band. This parade consisted of the band and members of the local boy scout troops with some of the Scouts carrying signs relative to the picture.

If you can sell your newspaper the same cooperative idea as effectively as Burke did we're sure that this is a good stunt which can be adapted to any number of other pictures and if you've already played "Skippy" the poster contest idea can be filed away for another films along similar lines. Both proved effective selling aids for this member and we are passing them along for future reference. In the meantime, John A., let's know what else you're doing

Cigarette Tie-Up Plays Strong Part In La Bar's Work

A cigarette herald tie-up for "Dishonored" and trick Chaplin cut-outs for "City Lights" played important parts in recent campaigns made on these pictures by F. La Bar, Jr., manager of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

The heralds were 3¾ by 7 inches in size with a place in the upper left-hand corner to permit the insertion of a cigarette. Copy gave reference to the Fate of a Nation, the Delights of Love and a Puff of Smoke—all being connected in some way in the picture. Also appeared, "As you enjoy the cigarette attached presented to you with the compliments of Miss Dietrich and Chesterfield, reflect on the uncanny happenings which might occur were you smoking the fateful cigarette of "Dishonored." And, of course, the title of picture, theatre, star and playdates were listed.

He used two kinds of these heralds. One kind was printed in white with no copy on back. These were distributed in a drug store to their patrons of both the store and a Dutch kitchen on the second floor. The other kind (those printed in yellow) had Dutch Kitchen copy on back and were given out in the theatre a week in advance. A very charming lady was employed for this purpose, she wearing a mask marked X-27.

One thousand heralds were distributed at the drug store and 2,000 at the theatre. The 3M cigarettes were promoted at no cost to the theatre and the drug store paid for the heralds. He also had the lobby and front fixed up in elegant manner, which greatly helped to sell the attraction, especially from passers-by.

As to "City Lights," by cutting out Chaplin on the cut-out card, and bending back on dotted lines, these cut-outs would stand up. One thousand of these was scarcely enough as they were in great demand. It seemed that every kid in town wanted one. By this means, La Bar felt sure that he would contact the kids, and when they took them home, naturally their parents would know about the Chaplin picture. In fact, many of the parents came to the theatre asking for these Chaplin cut-out cards for their children.

"This Week in Asheville"—a weekly booklet put out by the Chamber of Commerce and distributed to hotels, restaurants, newsstands and other public places—contained important data on the Chaplin picture. The front cover shows a cut of Chaplin with the following inscription underneath, "Silent—But How He Acts! Imperial all this week." The inside cover was devoted to copy regarding Asheville's Publix Theatres. The booklet was widely distributed on Sunday before the picture's Monday opening.

The above combination represents appeal to both adults and children in the respective campaigns, and as they worked nicely for this manager they will undoubtedly serve some other member equally well. Regarding the cut-outs for the kids, the word-of-mouth advertising obtained is always 'way ahead of the small amount of effort needed to effect the desired distribution. What else is doing down your way, La Bar?

Reverse Method Of Advertising Tried By Hobler; Says O.K.

They're trying out a different kind of advertising over in Townsville, Australia, where Victor Hobler manages the Wintergarden Theatre, which, we are informed, caused quite a stir in his community.

For advance exploitation on "Last of the Lone Wolf" he ran a series of readers, some adorned at the bottom with the abbreviation—advt., and others with no mention at all. No allusion to picture theme or cast was made, no slides were screened nor was any billing done prior to the night before the picture opened.

Of course the above was a stunt, and the complete reversal of what is geenrally considered a formula for drawing trade to a theatre. We have two of these readers before our eyes. One is headed, "$2,500 Reward," and goes on to state that this amount will be paid to secure information leading to the arrest of one of the greatest safeblowers in existence. A description follows and in the very last sentence the picture title appears in quotes. Then, advt. at bottom. The other is headed, "Safeblowers Active," and is a straight out and out news story to the effect that this criminal had committed a number of daring robberies in Australian communities and was being sought by the police. The public was advised to take extreme care, etc.

With reference to the latter reader we have no hesitancy in stating that it would never get by the desk of a newspaperman in this country without also carrying the abbreviation, advt., at the bottom, but not being familiar with how this is handled in Australia we cannot state to what extent this leniency can be carried. In other words, it's great if you can get away with it. Matter of this nature could, of course, be carried on a page devoted to amusements, but would still have to be labeled an ad. Well, anyway, Hobler tells us it worked out in great shape for him and he's passing it along.

Other activities over his way include a striking lobby display made for the Ambassador Theatre, in Perth, when showing "Silver Horde," a photo of which is shown on this page. It certainly looks good. This house also made a big window tie-up, all kinds of canned fish being offered at special prices.

Kofeldt Planning New Kind Of Club For Fox-Arlington

We shall watch with keen interest the activities of Walter Kofeldt at the new Fox-Arlington Theatre, Santa Barbara, Cal., one of the finest West Coast houses that has been recently opened. He was in Riverside prior to making his present connection and his several years' experience in this industry includes not only theatre management but distribution, etc.

When the Arlington was opened last May the morning paper devoted a 16-page section to the event and we note that a spread announced something new in theatre history, "The Fox Hunters Club," to be introduced to the juvenile element. Special programs will be shown to members of the organization who, in turn, will contribute their part in the way of making posters, writing jingles and stories, sing songs, etc., under the direction of a trained teacher. Each month some kind of a party will take place, combining entertainment and education.

There are many Kiddie clubs and kindred organizations in operation in all sections of the country these days and they have done much to develop good will among the youngsters' parents and to boost both juvenile and adult patronage.

Auto Bally Boosts Business At Yazoo For Clara Schmitt

Taking advantage of the presence of a delegation of 2,000 country people, in town to listen to the speech-making of candidates for state offices, Miss Clara Schmitt, manager of the Yazoo Theatre, Yazoo City, Miss., hastily arranged a street auto bally for the second day's showing of "Amos 'n Andy." She secured two local boys to impersonate the well-known characters of the principals and had the car driven through the street all day long, the high receipts of the final showings proving the value of the stunt. A better bally for this picture has yet to be devised.

We realize that it's a bit late to present the above bally to many communities for the reason that this picture has had extensive circulation, and, likewise the auto bally; but the picture only recently played Yazoo City and there may be other points where this will serve as a reminder that this stunt always proved a successful means of attracting the desired attention. Miss Schmitt is one of the Club's several lady-managers and we are sure that what she has to pass along on show selling will always prove of interest to her fellow members.

ADVERTISING THAT SELLS!

Framing newspaper advertising so that it will do you the most good is, naturally, of major importance. Little can be gained by throwing a mess of material together, without rhyme or reason, and expecting it to bring the patrons flocking to the box office.

In this ad, Johnny Hucknell, of the National Theatre in Stockton, Cal., used excellent judgment and succeeded in making it eye-arresting as well as creating a desire to see the picture in the minds of the newspaper readers.

This ad was two columns by about ten inches; the mats secured by Hucknell, as you can see, were broken up to get the desired results. Altogether, it made a marvelous looking ad on the tear sheet we have before us.

Considering the fact that this showman, like thousands of other exhibitors, must depend solely on his own ability and judgment in making up newspaper ads, he deserves much credit for the type of stuff he is turning out day by day.

From time to time we will select individual ads for special mention instead of always incorporating them on full-page layouts, but those selected will be chiefly from showmen who are without the resources of a special ad artist and must dope out all of their own advertising. If YOU have any to offer, send them along, but please make sure they are good copies that will reproduce.

RUTS AND RECKLESSNESS!

(Reprinted from Fox's "World Wide News")

Publicity is a queer thing.

It seems haphazard and the way a lot of birds practice it such an impression is justified.

Yet it is an art and requires just as much brains as any other department of a business.

You have to make your product known.

But you must accomplish this with as much headwork as you put into the making and selling of that product.

Get a plan. Don't be reckless and a hunch and stunt player.

Keep your plans ever new and up to the minute. Don't let them get into a rut no matter how good they are. The public will get tired even of a good thing.

Don't do a thing until you have doped out the main idea you want to put across whether it be about a picture, a star or institutional.

And then don't do or say a thing that does not advance the main idea.

Don't waste your publicity energy on non-essentials and worthless strivings after a big gross of inches of space.

A two-inch paragraph in a newspaper of 2,000,000 readers is worth a thousand times as much as a page in a magazine of small circulation.

Realize that if it were worth anything you probably never would have gotten a whole page. And besides if you need a whole page to get over your idea, then get a new idea.

Keep out of ruts and don't be reckless.

Real publicity is applied brain power. A real publicity man sacrifices his "ego" upon the altar of the picture he is supposed to publicize.

City's First Local All-Talker Boosts House For Mackenna

Just as the old time movie-making, built around local celebrities proved popular, so the promotion of one in the modern manner bids to become an effective means of exploiting a theatre and the chosen co-operator. We have in mind a recent stunt put over by George H. Mackenna, manager of the New Lafayette Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., which gained a vast amount of interest and publicity for all concerned.

The stunt consisted of a beauty and film contest, engineered in cooperation with one of the city's leading newspapers, to find the leading players for Buffalo's first all-talking picture. At the same time, a scenario contest was conducted to find a fitting story. The contest was open to both male and female people of all ages and a prize was offered by the theatre each week for the foremost contenders. From the weekly winners the leading players for the production were selected. An additional inducement was held out to the female winner in the way of a free trip to the Hollywood studios of Columbia Pictures where the player would be granted a screen and voice test. Contenders registered via application blanks printed daily in the paper and the winners received publicity and further instruction as the contest progressed.

Entrants in the scenario contest were asked to contribute manuscripts of not more than 1,000 words each, with a grand prize of $75 to the winner and an additional $25 to the author of the best title. It was stated that the winning script would be purchased by Columbia.

An idea of the general interest in the stunt will be gained through knowledge that more than 100 entrants for the film contest and 30 odd manuscripts were filed on opening day as the result of advance publicity. It was a great circulation booster for the newspaper and the theatre received an intensive daily publicity break for a number of weeks. Pictures of the contenders were published as they were chosen and the Columbia studios also came in for a generous share of space. In addition the publication's trucks carried two sheet streamers on both sides announcing the event in all sections of the city.

The above stunt is of course not applicable to towns of all sizes but there are many cities where it can be pulled in bang-up style. In these places there is generally a news camera man with enough experience to successfully handle the photography and direction. As already stated the old-time silent movie making was a great way to arouse community interest. It hasn't been pulled in a long time; hence, we are passing along Goodno's plan for those who would like to try a promotional scheme of this nature. In this particular case it is assumed that the film company bore a portion or a good share of the production expense, otherwise a stunt on this scale would be apt to prove a costly bit of exploitation unless some manager's ingenuity finds a way to get around it. Or, it might be engineered on a scale to fit local conditions.

GROWING STRONGER EVERY DAY!

J. FRED CROSSON is the manager of the Majestic Theatre, Stuttgart, Ark., and in addition to forwarding his application for Club membership Fred displayed the proper spirit by enclosing a few samples of his activities in the show-selling business. We will hope to receive many more from this new member whenever he can find the time to send them in.

C. M. MOREHEAD doesn't know why he put off the act of joining this Club as long as he did because he admits reading everything that is published in this department. But he's quite a busy manager for he has charge of the Fox-Peoples and the Fox-Plaza Theatres out in Chanute, Kansas, and maybe supervising these two houses has taken up just about all spare time. However, he's in the organization now and we believe he will make up for lost time by sending along some good live show tips in exchange for those he's received from his brother members.

CARL N. JONES hails from below the Mason Dixon line—in Durham, N. C., to be exact, where he manages the Wonderland Theatre. We're glad to have you with us Carl, and as there are a lot of other Club members down your way give them our hello when you meet. Now that you've become an active Round Tabler don't forget that the prevailing spirit among all members is to let one another in on all good show-selling ideas. Might send along that photo of yourself so we can use it with your next story.

EDGAR HART is in charge of the Liberty Theatre, a Fox first run house out in Astoria, Ore. He is an old subscriber to this publication and has been following this department for a long time. Now he's going to do some contributing himself. Just as a sample he sent along a little story on what happened during a campaign he made on "Daddy Long Legs" and we can promise his fellow members that this will soon make its appearance. In the meantime, we will look forward to further accounts of what this new member is doing to sell his shows.

T. S. YEOH is located a long ways off from many members of this Club for he manages the Capitol Theatre, in Malacca, S. S.; but no place is too far away to find representatives of this organization unless it's some place that cannot boast a motion picture theatre. He also shows the Club spirit by requesting a Round Table emblem and we will hope to be able to soon present a story and photos in reference to theatre activities in his community.

REX BROWN has the task of managing the Fox-Valencia, a West Coast Theatre link in Walsenburg, Colo. Please accept our cordial welcome of your application to become a member of this organization, Rex, and we'll be looking forward to receipt of some interesting accounts of what you are doing to put shows over in your community.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

A PREDICTION

IN 1914 Eastman announced the first panchromatic motion picture negative film. It swept the country... In March, 1931, Eastman announced the first stable ultra-speed panchromatic—Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative, Type 2...It is predicted that just as color-sensitive film has practically replaced color-blind material, so the new Eastman Super-sensitive will make slower emulsions virtually obsolete...Naturally the producers and camera men who are adopting this remarkable film now will reap the greatest advantage... Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

A CONSOLIDATION OF EXHIBITORS HERALD-WORLD AND MOTION PICTURE NEWS

LABOR

¶ Theatre owners are negotiating new union contracts with projectionists and their assistants, musicians and stage hands.

¶ A national survey of annual September contractual activities indicates that musicians will benefit from a movement which definitely points toward the return of the stage show.

¶ Exhibitors in innumerable key territories seek relief from the union agreement which compels the employment of two men in a booth.

In Two Sections — Section One

Vol. 104, No. 9 — Entered as second-class matter, January 12, 1931, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879. Published Weekly by Quigley Publishing Co., Inc., at 1790 Broadway, New York. Subscription, $3.00 a year. Single copies, 25 cents. — August 29, 1931

The cause:

Here's Your Invitation To PARAMOUNT NATIONAL SCREENING WEEK

August 10-15

Hundreds of hard-boiled, show-me Showmen last week saw the first big guns in Paramount's mighty barrage of 1931-2 hits. They're convinced that the only way to insure week-after-week boom-time grosses is PARAMOUNT. Read some of their unsolicited comments!

The effect:

(Wire)

"CONSIDER AMERICAN TRAGEDY VERY BIG SURE BOX OFFICE HIT."

... Fitzer Amusement Co., Inc.
Syracuse, N.Y.

"I never saw finer shows than SILENCE, HUCKLEBERRY FINN, SMILING LIEUTENANT and AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY."

... Max Torodor, Ritz Theatre,
Minneapolis, Minn.

"SILENCE, what a drama."

... S. Lebedoff

Homewood Theatre
Minneapolis, Minn.

"Mr. A. C. Richter of the Sunset Theatre, Boerne, Texas, stated: 'I enjoyed HUCKLEBERRY FINN and AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY very much. They are both excellent pictures.'

Sincerely,
H. E. Pickett, Branch Manager
San Antonio Exchange

(Wire)

"'SMILING LIEUTENANT,' 'SILENCE,' 'AMERICAN TRAGEDY' AND 'HUCKLEBERRY FINN.' FOUR GREAT BOX OFFICE ATTRACTIONS."

... Albert A. Fenyvessy,
Rochester, N.Y.

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN keenest entertainment of the season. "SILENCE very fine entertainment."

Sam. H. Blair,
Blair Theatres
Belleville, Ks. Mankato, Ks.
Osborne, Ks. Smith Center, Ks.

"SILENCE, HUCKLEBERRY FINN, SMILING LIEUTENANT, AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY great shows, all of them. Thanks for the opportunity of seeing them."

... L. Rubenstein
Faust and Dale Theatres,
St. Paul, Minn.

"In AMERICAN TRAGEDY, SMILING LIEUTENANT, SECRETS OF A SECRETARY, Paramount has proved that the 20th Anniversary Program will eclipse all others."

Paramountly yours,
Thomas O. Davis,

Misdirected Energy!

A COOL and canny observer of film business put it to us neatly. He said: "Picture people would be unhappy without a couple of new 'issues' to fume about annually. We have 'em regularly, but who remembers them a year later? We do remember what business we did! How much better off some exhibitors would be if they used their 'misdirected energy' to put over pictures at the box-office."

The only kind of "Talk" that you can turn into cash is on the screen in pictures like: "Politics", "Min & Bill", "Reducing", "Secret Six", "Strangers May Kiss", "Trader Horn", "Dance Fools Dance", "Paid", "Inspiration", "Shipmates" and other current M-G-M pictures. The first two M-G-M 1931-2 releases: Laurel-Hardy in "Pardon Us" and "Guilty Hands" continue the box-office standard M-G-M has maintained for seven solid years! And, of course, the new season has barely begun!

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 104, No. 9 August 29, 1931

The New Contract

THE adoption of a new standard exhibition contract form is a favorable development in all respects.

The whole business of renting and leasing motion picture film is a difficult and perplexing one. Obviously the theatre owner, in encountering various forms of contracts in dealing with the various distributors, finds the inevitable difficulties of his work substantially increased. In the use of various forms of contract there is no advantage to distributors. Their activities also are made more difficult in many ways when they are compelled to operate with a contract form which is not standard throughout the business.

The negotiations which led up to the adoption of the new contract form were long and arduous. The negotiators on all sides carried a heavy burden of responsibility. It is decidedly a tribute to all of them that the negotiations have been successfully concluded.

What the business now needs and has always needed is a basic contract which is right and equitable. It is not, however, conceivable that at this time, or at any other particular time, a contract form can be drawn which shall indefinitely serve the purposes expected of it. Theatre owners and distributors should cause to have set up an arrangement under which such changes in the contract form as may appear necessary or desirable from time to time in face of changing conditions, may be put into effect.

The collapse of the old standard contract form created widespread hardship. Insurance against the possibility of this recurring should be provided for in the creation of an arrangement under which such changes as may be necessary or desirable from time to time in the future may be brought about in an orderly manner and without confusion.

Independent Product

HOLLYWOOD reports the likelihood of three hundred feature pictures being contributed from independent sources during the coming year. This is probably a decidedly optimistic forecast, but at any rate it may be taken as definite indication of a considerable widening of influence on the part of independent production.

It is commonly accepted that a successfully functioning independent arm in the production branch of the industry is a decidedly good thing for the business generally. The production situation, at no time, should be so arranged as to make it impossible for an independent production unit to operate. Under existing circumstances it is not at all certain just how importantly independent production can contribute toward carrying the industry's responsibility for better and still better product, but it is only reasonable to assume that with the situation so ordered that many independent units will have at least a good chance for existence, that out of their activity should come from time to time pictures which will not only make money at the box office but will stimulate production generally through the introduction of new and original viewpoints.

Fewer Pictures

THAT there should be widespread dissatisfaction with rental prices asked does not seem to involve a matter for surprise or wonderment. Buyers of every description, whether the item is a package of gum, an automobile or anything else, are, under existing circumstances, anxious and determined to pay less money.

The current uncertainty of business conditions inevitably creates this attitude.

In the film business the distributor is now being confronted on one side with pleas for lesser film rental. On the other side he is being warned by the studio that unless adequate production budgets are available the product inevitably will suffer.

It appears that the one thing which must not be permitted to happen in the picture business is to allow production to be cheapened. Quite properly, every possible economy should be introduced in the studios. In this connection it may be observed that there probably has been more thought, as well as more action, on economical operations in the studios during the past six months than in the preceding six years. Motion picture production will never be standardized on a Ford factory basis. In order to accomplish results, chances must be taken, and the chance that fails costs money.

It is not the successful picture for which the exhibitor generally pays too much money. It is the unsuccessful picture for which he cannot really afford to pay the rental, irrespective almost of how low the rental may be.

The road of sound economics in this connection seems to be along the line of fewer pictures. Every studio, in order to maintain release schedules, undertakes productions from time to time about which they have little enthusiasm, or which they are not quite ready to make for one reason or another. These usually are the pictures which result in losses, both to the producer and to the theatre owner. It obviously would be much better if they were never attempted.

"Creating" Stars

THE "baby star" stunt of the Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers seems to have gotten somewhat out of hand. The projectors of this scheme have either come to believe that they are creating "baby stars" or, at least, they have created the impression that this is the purpose of their serious business.

The stunt originally was aimed to get special publicity for young players who, for one reason or another, elicited the interest and attention of the Hollywood press representatives. As a publicity effort it has amounted to something in the way of an important achievement. When, however, it is considered in the light of marking the creation of "baby stars," it is an absurd procedure. Stars, meaning personalities who have been elected to special interest on the part of the public, gained that position through the public and in no other way.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

THE INDEPENDENT of MURPHYSBORO in ILLINOIS has the quaint idea that if there is to be censorship of motion pictures in behalf of children it might well be exercised by the parents in behalf of the individual children concerned. Discussing morals, and the young, it says:

One friendly critic takes us to task for our views on censorship.

"Don't you think there should be some censorship over what children are permitted to see?" she writes. "I read your 'platform' Monday and agree with much of it, but your views on censorship seem far too loose."

Sure there should be a censorship over what children see or read, and it should be imposed by the parents, for the most part.

But somehow that sort of thing carries its own catharization.

We can remember when the young "sports" used to gather on street corners to watch the lady bicyclists and comment on their legs. Nowadays those same youths don't turn their heads on a bathing beach to see an almost complete display of nudity.

Here's something you can wager on safely. The average youngster of 12 or 14 today, knows more about the matters of sex and vice and crime than you did at 20. And he's just as clean and as moral as you were, too. Not much better but no worse.

The Indians, when they encountered the white man's whiskey, went crazy. Why? They didn't know how to handle it. It was a brand new and delightful vice to them. They had no opportunity to build up a defense against it.

Take a kid who has been protected from all temptation, and has had no chance to build up his moral defenses, and he is in the same position.

But mental freedom should be just as sacred as moral freedom or physical freedom. Each individual should have the opportunity and the right to learn any facts available and hear any views that are presented on any subject under the sun.

No man can be called moral until he has chosen between right and wrong. And no man can be called educated on any subject until he has heard all sides of it.

Censoring political views is silly and futile. If the "reds" have a better system than ours, we should adopt it. If they haven't why not let folks consider it and pass on it intelligently?

Gang pictures were supposed to be a bad influence on the young. Maybe they are. If so, the young ought to be kept away from them, by their parents. Most of the rest of us will stay away because they bore us.

The Romans tried to throttle Christianity. They drove it under ground into the cellars and sewers of Rome. There's a good example of how censorship works with an idea that is right. It simply strengthens it. And if the idea is wrong why not give intelligent people a chance to know about it and discard it for themselves?

THE RECORD of PHILADELPHIA in PENNSYLVANIA is not entirely happy about some aspects of the gangster situation, but it refuses to believe that the motion picture is entirely responsible. A discussion on its editorial page the other day said:

Capone Worries the President, Mocks the Law, Shocks the Public— Why? Hoover Upset Over Failure to Jail Capone

Hope to Make Political Asset of Victory Is Dashed

What do thoughtful American citizens think of those headlines?

Are they contemptuous when they learn that the President of the United States is dejected because a single crook continues to evade the law?

Or are they humiliated and profoundly disturbed?

Gangster films, some people say, are harmful because they are distorted. Because they exaggerate the intelligence and success of criminals. Because they subtly suggest that public enemies can paralyze the laws and mock the Government itself.

But name one Hollywood movie that has outdone in scandalous implications the veritable history of this case.

Here, in actuality or popular belief, is the master gangster; acknowledged head of an organized enterprise with a record of lawlessness ranging from bootlegging and terrorism to mass murder.

For months the Government of the United States has exerted its utmost powers to stop the nefarious activities of the arch racketeer; to prove, by putting him behind bars, that the law is stronger than the most powerful of criminals.

Yet he is still free. It will be months, it may be years, before decision is reached and enforced.

The Treasury is baffled, the Department of Justice exposed to discredit, confidence in the Courts is further weakened, the White House itself is gloomy and distraught.

What does this shocking spectacle mean?

Capone and his system, the collapse of the plan to put him in jail, the demonstrated power of the organized racket, the spreading corruption which debauches the police power and corrupts the processes of government— all are products of prohibition.

Refreshingly the newspapers here and there are finding pleasant things to say of the motion picture, in spite of the current wave of blaming the industry for all the sins of gangland.

DETROIT, MICH., FREE PRESS: " . . . It would seem that the pendulum has begun its backward swing to common sense and decency. How otherwise could be explained the rush of people in recent days and nights in Detroit to see two pictures that are wholesome, clean and intelligent entertainment, while gangland and sex-appeal draw only a minimum crowd?"

ASHEVILLE, N. C., CITIZEN: "The quality of sound pictures is distinctly improving. 'Viennese Nights,' 'Cimarron,' 'The Devil to Pay' and 'Kismet' are four pictures presented in Asheville recently which are responsible for this impression."

MIAMI, FLA., HERALD: "The talkies are far better than the legitimate theatre and the novel. Hollywood . . . . usually serves up a fairly clean bill of fare."

ELIMINATION OF SECOND OPERATOR SOUGHT BY EXHIBITORS NATIONALLY

Only Minor Difficulties Hamper Agreements With Stage Hands and Musicians—About 2,500 Projectionists Are Affected in Nation-Wide One-Man Agitation

Agitation of national proportions against two operators per shift has developed tremendously within the past few days and is approaching a climax in the negotiations now under way for the annual renewal of theatre labor contracts, it is revealed by a national labor survey just completed by MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The agitation against the two-operator policy is in evidence in fifteen major cities and immediately affects the employment of approximately 2,500 projectionists in 1,100 theatres. Attempts to obtain the reduction of one operator have already resulted in the closing of approximately 500 theatres in widely scattered sections, although about 300 of these have been reopened under circumstances which may hardly be considered other than temporary inasmuch as no definite labor settlement affecting the majority of them has as yet been reached. The situation in other localities has resulted in strikes and walkouts and there are scattered instances of retaliation.

There are only isolated instances of opposition to renewals of old contracts with stage hands and musicians, the labor survey indicates, although numerous efforts are under way to obtain reductions of wage scales.

The labor situation in fifteen major cities may definitely be described as unsettled. Peaceful renewal of existing contracts is probable in only nine cities, and in only six situations have labor agreements been reached to date. In the remainder of the major cities existing contracts have from one to three years to run.

Counteracting to some extent the indicated reductions of number of employees and of wage scales are other negotiations for new and increased employment of theatre labor and for wage increases.

Musicians Will Benefit

New employment is indicated by reported negotiations for the employment of musicians and stage hands this year in cities where last year there was no employment of these crafts whatever.

The negotiations for reduction of operator personnel are under way in widely scattered sectors, with independent exhibitors, apparently, the most active in the movement.

The basis of the exhibitor demands for a reduction of projectionist staffs is the claim that mechanical developments in projection eliminate the necessity for a second operator in the booth. The two-operator shift, they contend, is definitely outdated and an unnecessary burden on the exhibitor.

The defense of the projectionist centers almost entirely on the fire hazard, and involves a contention that the presence of two operators in the booth definitely reduces danger of fire. No contention is made by the projectionists, so far as could be learned, that there is a physical or labor necessity for the employment of two men in the booth.

115,000,000 Customers

According to International News, a recent survey shows that approximately 115,000,000 persons attend pictures weekly in the United States, at an average outlay of 26 cents per capita, or a total of $30,000,000 for weekly admissions. $200,000,000 has been invested in sound equipment and the necessary appurtenances, according to the survey.

A Semi-Official Censorship Now Set for England

Semi-official censorship is about to be established in Great Britain, consisting of the present board of censors and a board representing county councils. The move is seen by the trade in general as effecting automatically a solution of many of the censorship problems facing the industry.

The suggestion that the county council committee be appointed originated at the government Home Office. County boroughs have now to accept the suggestion sent to them in a letter also dispatched to the County Councils Association. It is learned that the county boroughs withheld decision, awaiting the action of the County Councils Association. Now that the latter body has approved the suggestion, it is generally felt that the county boroughs will almost automatically do likewise.

France to Govern Trade Regulations

Last week's decision of the French government to establish an official motion picture committee has been followed by the formulation of plans to vest in the new body full power to censor all product shows in the country and to pass on trade disputes, establishing laws and regulations governing actual operation of the industry in France.

Members of the Public Instruction and Fine Arts branches and deputies and senators will comprise the board, which will be sub-divided into five divisions governing law, tecnhical, professional, educational and trade questions.

11 Birmingham Houses Reopen After Union Tilt

Eleven Birmingham, Ala., theatres, which have been closed for the past six weeks, will reopen on September 7.

These houses are owned by Birmingham Theatrical Amusement Company and were closed following a dispute between the owners and projectionists over a salary reduction.

Four of the theatres which are announced to reopen by Frank Meritt, president of the corporation, are downtown houses, while seven are suburban theatres.

The reopening will put approximately 100 employees back to work.

11,000,000 Television Sets In 10 Years Seen By CBC System

Columbia Broadcasting System, closely connected with Paramount, has predicted that 11,000,000 television sets will be installed by 1942.

By 1932, it is estimated, 30,000 sets will be in use, 9,000 of which will be in New York, while by 1933 there will be 1,000,000 in use. Installations will approximate the speed with which radio installations are made, is the prediction.

Composers Society Denies Planning Seat Tax Boost

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, which collects ten cents per seat from picture theatres using music of Society members, this week denied that the organization is contemplating an increase in the tax to $1 per seat. No increase of any size is intended, according to New York headquarters.

The report stated that the Society sought to bolster revenue lost through talkers.

Discs Quit at Publix Next Week

All Publix houses will cease using sound-on-disc on September 1, when the duel system of reproducing will give way to sound-on-film exclusively.

INDEPENDENTS TO FILL FALL PRODUCTION GAP

Plan Start of 300 Features, 900 Shorts Immediately After Labor Day

With major producer-distributors behind on production at this time and unable to guarantee enough first-run product to meet theatre requirements of the near future, independent producers will step into the breach immediately after Labor Day, inaugurating a production program of unusual proportions.

It is regarded as highly probable that no fewer than 300 features and 900 shorts will be made by independent producers during the season immediately following Labor Day. This estimate embraces the production plans of Columbia, now selling in the open market; Tiffany, releasing through Educational; Trem Carr Studio, releasing through Monogram exchanges; Howard Hughes, J. G. Bachman, Selznick-Milestone, Benny Zeidman, and others.

The production activities will provide an abundance of employment opportunities for writers, actors, technicians, directors, assistants and studio labor, and may result in making available much desirable product for filling in booking gaps in all classifications of theatres, including those of the larger distributors. This is felt to be particularly true in view of the recent localization of circuit buying which affords increased opportunities for marketing independent product.

Because of the changing policies in regard to long-term contracts and salaries, a great many superior actors and actresses have been added to the free lancers, with the result that the independents have available for their use name casts that add to the value and quality of their pictures.

Monogram Has Twelve

Caddo Productions will put out eight big ones with the Hughes brand, starting with "Age for Love," the Billy Dove-Frank Lloyd smash. Others to come are "Scarface," "Sky Devils," "Cock of the Air," "Rivets," "Queer People" and two untitled. Four others may be added, bringing the Hughes total for 1931-32 to 12.

Monogram schedules 12, as follows: "Ships of Hate" and "Mother and Son," completed; "In Line of Duty," shooting; "The Arm of the Law," "Klondyke," "The Western Limited," "The Law of the Sea," "Police Court," "Strangers of the Night," "Forgotten Women," "Midnight Patrol," "Blazing Barriers."

Others to be made on the Trem Carr lot are eight westerns, with Bill Cody and Andy Shuford; eight Tom Tyler, and eight Bob Steeles.

Little at Metropolitan

At the Metropolitan studios there is little current activity, except on the part of Welshay, with musical shorts and fashions, and the comedies which Al Christy is making for Educational. Herman Cumbin's Liberty Productions soon expect to be under way.

The independent field, with such men as Bachmann, Selznick, Milestone, Hughes and Zeidemann as a nucleus, soon will be in a position to offer plenty of work to actors, and there are several more important groups forming. Eddie Silton, of Rebecca & Silton, is planning to start one independent production to cost in the neighborhood of $400,000 and may turn out two others before the shooting ends for the new season.

One of the busiest spots in the colony is the Tec Art studios, where 16 separate companies have space. Some of these are at the moment inactive, but all are scheduled for active production for this season's market. The line-up on the Mannon lot is as follows:

Inspiration (United Artists release)—Inactive.

Patrician (Emil Jensen-Al Mannon)—Six features.

Imperial (Al Mannon)—Eight features. State rights.

Supreme (Al Mannon)—Twelve features. State rights.

Allied (Hoffman)—Six features, six Hoot Gibson Westerns. State rights.

Harry Carey Pro.—Eight Western features. Inactive.

Willis Kent Prod.—Six features, six Westerns. State rights.

Pioneer (Berkowitz and Wolfe)—Inactive.

Perfection (J. J. Goldberg)—State right features.

Italatone (J. and G. Rizzo, A. Danna). Inactive.

Mascot Prod. (Serials)—"Vanishing Legion," Western, completed; "Galloping Ghost" football with Red Grange in work; "Lightning Warrior" and "Eagle's Shadow" to come.

Football Shorts (Al Mannon)—Six for Educational release.

Spencer Bennet Prod.—Six two-reel detectives for RKO.

C. C. Burr—Six "Torchy" two-reelers. Educational release.

Voice of Hollywood—Twenty-six one-reelers for Educational.

Clofford Reed Prod.—Six or eight one-reel W. J. Burns detective for Educational.

Van Buren Corp.—Elmer Clifton directed Travelogues.

Golden State Prod.—"The Gun Maker." Feature.

Miguel C. Torres Prod.—"Dreamers of Glory." Spanish.

Lewis Handles Paramount Ads While Holman Does Production

Cliff Lewis, as the result of a shift in Paramount's advertising department, will handle the advertising for the company, while Russell Holman will concentrate chiefly on editorial work in the production department.

Alvin Adams, formerly in charge of press sheets in the advertising department, will succeed Lewis as assistant in the same department.

American Films To Be Remade In Germany, Plan of Dr. Boehm

Arrangements have been completed for the remaking of American talking films in Germany, using the original story, but with German casts and productions. American producers are to share in the profits under the arrangement.

Dr. H. L. Boehm, formerly with Tobis and now heading his own company, Tempotonfilm, is responsible for the arrangement. Pictures of various American companies will be used.

The Rainy Day!

"It pays to be thrifty" is apparently the watchword of the stars of Hollywood today, particularly since that "crash." There are something like a dozen firms in the studio center, which call themselves investment counsellors, and whose sole work, and source of income, is to be the respective financial guiding stars of picture stars. They budget them, get their salary checks, pay their bills, and then allow them so much spending money per week. They dissuade them from extravagant expenditures and advise them in the matter of investments. One firm takes care of the financial affairs of 35 of the most prominent of Hollywood's lights. The rainy day has come into its own, apparently.

Metro Protest Meet May Consider All Company Contracts

With the possibility of the Metro National Protest Meeting, developing into a general scrutiny of the trade practices of all companies, many distributors are preparing to have representatives at the meeting for the purpose of checking on developments. The Metro Protest Meeting will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Tuesday. It is sponsored by the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, although it will be nonpartisan in character with invitations out to all exhibitors to attend.

Although originally called for the purpose of discussing numerous phases of the new MGM contract, independent exhibitors of New York and New Jersey are asking that the contracts of all distributors be considered. The unwillingness of many exhibitors to attend a meeting confined exclusively to scrutiny of the Metro contract, it is believed, will tend to broaden the meeting into a general survey of all company's contracts.

Walter Vincent, of Wilmer & Vincent, Atlantic Seaboard theatre operators, will serve as chairman of the meeting, it is understood. Al Steffes, Allied States official may also attend the meeting in company with Allied President Abram F. Myers, who will take a prominent part in the proceedings.

Allied's attitude is evidenced in a recent statement by Myers that the organization "views with dismay and alarm the sales policies adopted by certain distributors this year and in particular deplores the form of contract being used by the Metro company."

Estelle Starts Vaude Tour

Estelle Taylor opens an RKO vaudeville tour today (August 28) in St. Louis. Miss Taylor is doing a singing act, will play St. Louis for one week and then go on to Columbus, Cincinnati and Chicago for a week in each.

"BETTER PICTURES" BRING INCREASE OF 22% IN GROSSES TO CIRCUITS

M-G-M Invading Philadelphia; Loew Leasing Keith Run

The M-G-M invasion of Philadelphia became a fact Wednesday night with the announcement that Loew's circuit had taken over Keith's and would open on September 11 with M-G-M pictures, and United Artists' films as well. The first attraction will be United Artists' "Street Scene."

Keith's for the second time within as many years will be the flagship of interests opposing the Stanley-Warner group there. It was leased a year ago by the Moon Amusement Company from the Shuberts for two years to show Paramount pictures, when Paramount and Stanley-Warner split. When these two companies settled differences a few weeks ago, it was understood that Keith's was to go Stanley-Warner, and for the last four weeks Stanley-Warner has been booking features for the house. However, before the deal became final, Loew's stepped into the scene and snapped up the lease for the remaining year from the Moon Amusement group.

M-G-M is now holding the same strategic position enjoyed by Paramount during its year. All of the second-run key neighborhood houses which showed Paramount product during the year, including the large Tower, the Nixon and the Roosevelt and Frankford, will play second-runs direct from Keith's. In addition to these and the other independents who will fall in line, the new Midway, one of the largest new de luxe houses, will show Metro and United Artists' product when it opens around Thanksgiving Day.

The taking over of Keith's is merely a temporary affair, is the belief of local film men. The house will serve as a "show-window" for the product until the lease with the Shuberts expires. It is freely rumored that during the ensuing year a large new Loew house will be erected in Philadelphia.

"Cloud Projection Machine" Permits Night Visibility

Dr. Manfred Mannheimer, German inventor of a "cloud projection machine," has succeeded in making still photographs visible in the heavens at night, and is quoted from Berlin as stating it would be a simple matter to project a cartoon. The cartoon would be stenciled through an acid process on a metal band to withstand the heat of the apparatus, which is said to be a simple machine involving a secret process. Two mirrors reflect the rays of a powerful searchlight through the stencil.

Berlin Attendance Off

Reports from Berlin indicate picture theatre attendance there has dropped from 58,000,000 to 56,000,000 during the last 12 months.

Herald Figures Also Show Substantial Gain

Theatre Executives State That Improved Business Is Due to "Pictures, Weather"

Theatre business from Coast to Coast, based upon the records of the circuits, has taken an upward turn.

Grosses for the week ending August 15 were up from 18 to 26 per cent over the week previous.

"Good pictures, plus weather" are assigned by circuit executives as responsible for this optimistic trend.

Three of the five major circuits reported gross increases as follows:

Publix	18%
Warner Brothers	22%
Fox	26%

This brings the average gross increase for the three circuits to 22 per cent.

In computing the percentage increase for the Fox houses, Joel Swensen of the advertising department, pointed out that he had taken the grosses for the last two weeks in July and the first two weeks in August, with the August business topping July by 26 per cent.

Although Harry C. Arthur, head of the Eastern division of Fox Theatres, refused to be quoted, as is his steadfast policy, Swensen did state that "we feel that better pictures are responsible for increased grosses."

Radio-Keith-Orpheum declined to give figures for publication, although Joseph Plunkett, general manager, did offer this comment:

"Business is considerably better. Product and weather have been responsible."

Substantiating the circuits' contention of increased grosses are MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S compilation of weekly theatre receipts. These reveal that business took an upward trend the week ending July 25, the bottom having been reached the week of July 18. The HERALD'S grosses are from 164 theatres in 29 cities. Following are the totals of weekly receipts as published in the Herald:

Week Ending	Total Receipts
July 25	$2,024,443
August 1	$2,038,596
August 8	$2,195,426
August 15	$2,206,196

With July 18 registering a total gross for the 164 theatres of $1,889,523, the week ending July 25 shows an increase of 7 per cent. The week ending August 1 brought grosses up slightly less than 1 per cent, although receipts for the week ending August 8 again topped those of the previous week by 7 per cent.

Dan Michalove, head of Warner Theatres, in commenting upon improved business conditions, said:

"There was approximately a 22 per cent increase for the week ending August 15 over the business of the previous week.

Fox Centralizes Advertising Work New York Group

A new policy has been adopted by Fox placing all advertising, for both theatre and film divisions, in the hands of a home office staff working under the supervision of Glen Griswold, vice-president.

In the new system, the home office advertising department will lay down advertising policies and direct advertising expenditures through co-operation with the several operating units, their general and division managers and house managers.

It is pointed out, however, that this method is not intended to diminish the independence of house managers, but merely an attempt to coordinate advertising activities in a group of advertising experts.

A new editorial board will be composed of six vice-presidents and lesser executives with Richard A. Rowland as chairman. In addition to Harley L. Clarke and Rowland, the members will be Winfield Sheehan, W. C. Michel, S. R. Burns, James Grainger and Glen Griswold. They will be final judges of all story material submitted by the reader department.

As a step to effect a closer operating relationship between all Fox theatre divisions, Harry C. Arthur, theatre executive in the East, and E. Oscar Oldknow, in charge of Fox West Coast, will alternate between these offices.

Arthur is scheduled to leave around Labor Day for a visit to all Fox divisions, motoring to the Coast, where he will spend six months in Oldknow's office, while the latter will assume the Eastern chair for the same period.

The system follows a similar centralization of advertising activities for both theatre and distributing branches.

All Hollywood in Coast Pageant

Virtually all picture celebrities for the first time will parade together before the microphone during La Fiesta de Los Angeles, on September 11, the sesqui-centennial celebration of the California's city's founding, which will be broadcast over a coast-to-coast NBC-WJZ network. The screen stars will participate in the "Motion Picture Electrical Parade" in Los Angeles Coliseum which, it is said, will bring together the greatest gathering of flicker favorites in history.

Texas Houses for Publix, Hughes

Work will start in September on a $100,000 theatre in Del Rio, Texas, by Hughes-Franklin Theaters.

J. N. Beasley will build a two-story theatre and store building in Amarillo, Texas, at a cost of $400,000. Publix will lease the house.

U. S. STIMULATES FRENCH STUDIOS

Paramount and American Enterprise Called Boost to Domestic Production

Film Making Today in Paris as Witnessed by W. H. MOORING

I have just had a look at the principal centers of motion picture production in France—my first visit since the old silent days when the film output of this country, like that of Great Britain, was spasmodic and unimpressive. Today the leading studios located on the outskirts of Paris present a completely different picture and afford at least one vivid example of America's new policy of pioneering in foreign-language centers.

The first reaction to talking films in France—stimulated by a section of the French press—betrayed an anti-American, anti-British, anti-German bias which would have been easier to comprehend had the French been prepared—without foreign stimulus or aid—to meet the native demand for audible screen fare. But they were not, and for over a year after talkies were staple entertainment in U. S. A. and British theatres, the supply of suitable reels for the French cinemas was appallingly short of requirements.

In the process of reconstruction through which French studios have since had to pass there is little doubt that Paramount, with their Joinville outfit, has set the pace, issuing a competitive challenge which has inspired and encouraged native producers to a healthy state of "wakefulness."

Today there is no sign of anti-foreign bias in the attitude of the French picture-goer. French speaking films are preferred because they are more easily understood, but that it is not impossible to achieve success in France with English dialogue pictures of American or British origin, has been proved again and again.

Entertainment the Key

With the great French public, as with those of most other countries, entertainment values are fundamental to film success, and only so far as it facilitates understanding and heightens effect, is the French language preferred to any other.

W. H. Mooring, author of this article, editor of The Bioscope and representative of the Herald in London; shown in Paris with Harry Lachman, Paramount director at the Joinville studios of the American company.

The wisdom, however, of producing in native environment such subjects as are to be rendered in native tongue, is obvious, for a picture made in Hollywood with French dialogue would, unless faithful to the very distinctive characteristics of the French race, be less acceptable in France than a frankly foreign story told in a foreign language. It is probable that a deep realization of this fact induced Paramount to initiate a serious French production policy. The result has been a complete "electrification" of France's almost moribund motion picture industry, which today has outgrown by at least 100 per cent the boundaries which hemmed it in in 1927.

A more business-like plant than the Paramount Joinville studio, located about half an hour's car ride from Paris and in the Saint-Maurice (Seine) locality, could not be imagined.

The original buildings, consisting of a real French Villa, now used as a central sound mixing station for the whole lot, and a few small out-houses, are almost dwarfed and form only part of one side of a quadrangle, the open center of which is something of a garden oasis for resting artists, as well as a plot for garden exteriors.

Working Day and Night

Grouped on either side of the quadrangle are six large working stages some 30x18x8 meters, others 30x20x10 meters. Laboratories, stores and the "sound recording" villa occupy the far end, while the frontage buildings on to the main road consist of reception and administration offices, directors' rooms and scenario departments. The whole studio is kept going day and night on the 40 features and 50 odd shorts due for completion by the end of this year.

During the year ended April 1931, Paramount made 150 pictures there, including shorts, using as many as 13 different languages.

But experience has proved that too many languages involve insuperable complications, and production policy is now confined to French, German, Spanish and Swedish.

An interesting innovation is the "international" dialogue picture, in which as many as 30 or 40 different players will be directed by Max Reichmann, each nationality introduced into the story speaking its own tongue. "Marco Le Clown" is the title of this experimental subject, which if successful, will be followed by others of a similar character.

At the moment, six features and two shorts are in production at Joinville. These include "Marius" in French and German, being directed by Alexander Korda (due

Warners Get British Plant; May Affect Company's Plans

Possible reduction of the volume of Warner Bros. production in America is seen in the acquisition of the Teddington Studios near London by Warners.

The studios have been acquired for a minimum period of two years, and extensive production plans have already been completed. It is considered possible that the remainder of the George Arliss pictures may be filmed at the new Warner property in Britain.

The first of the Warner productions for the Teddington Studios gets under way early in September, when shooting on "Murder on the Second Floor" will be started. Fifteen additional features have been decided on, including a George Arliss vehicle. Both English and French dialogue versions will be made, and all productions will be designed for American circuit bookings.

The new company will operate as Warner Bros.-First National Productions, Ltd.

Wampas Selections Are Declared Out By Studios

No more Wampas baby stars will be selected, Coast studios have decided. Producers viewed with considerable alarm the predicament of Fox in finding none of its candidates selected for the baby star constellation of this year and accordingly each studio has decided to name its own star candidates in the future.

It is regarded as unlikely that the Wampas will make any attempt to contest the studios' decision, as ranking studio officials will merely indicate the new order to their publicity men, ending the baby star selections.

Has Physical Handling Only Of Kinogram Advertising Reel

The deal whereby Education will handle Kinograms Allied sponsored newsreel, is for physical handling only, Educational having no connection with sales, publicity or collections.

The first issue of the new advertising reel is already set for release.

U. A. Theatres Unaffected By U. A.-Fox Peace Treaty

Showing of United Artists product in that company's theatres is unaffected by the peace deal which again made United Artists product available to Fox theatres, Lou Anger, U. A. official, states. The deal, he said, involves only those situations in which United Artists has no theatres.

Pep Club Postpones Election

Annual dinner of the Paramount Pep Club will be held on Thursday, October 22, in the Hotel Astor, New York. Election of officers is scheduled for the September 22d meeting, having been postponed from this week's meeting.

Giannini Talks

Dr. A. H. Giannini, San Francisco and New York banker credited with having as much intimate knowledge of the picture industry as anyone in the financial field, says he is not in accord with some of the criticism of "big business" leveled at the amusement field. He is visiting in California and expresses the opinion that there have been no more mistakes made by producers and exhibitors than in any other line of business. He also says that marked steps have been taken to adjust operations to present business conditions.

Publix Cancels Stanwyck Booking

Indications that other companies are willing to co-operate with Columbia in its contractural difficulties with Barbara Stanwyck were given with the cancellations this week of Publix and RKO bookings for Barbara and her husband, Frank Fay.

The contract for the appearance of the couple at the Paramount Theatre, New York, the week beginning September 4, has been cancelled without explanation. RKO, earlier, cancelled other bookings for Barbara and Frank.

Books M-G-M Product Despite Edict of the Maryland MPTO

Joe Brodie, owner of the Brodie, Baltimore, has broken away from the MPTO of Maryland in its front against percentage booking with M-G-M and Paramount, by booking M-G-M product. He is the only one in the city, so far as is known.

Brodie claims he was forced to book M-G-M product to protect himself from the competition of the McHenry and Pacey's Garden, which had booked everything else, leaving him nothing.

Ufa Acquires Royal Theatre in Cincinnati

The Royal Theatre at Cincinnati has been acquired by Ufa, and will open about September 18 with "Tankstelle." The theatre seats 320.

Buddy Rogers May Go On Air

Coast reports indicate that Buddy Rogers has been allowed six months leave of absence by Paramount for radio work with a salary adjustment. The radio work may be leading the Hotel New Yorker orchestra, for which Paramount previously refused a part time arrangement with NBC.

To Study Educational Films

A French educational film congress will be held in Paris September 28, 29, 30, to study the value of films in primary, secondary and technical education.

Maloy Lays Union Troubles In Boss Canavan's Lap

Both the I. A. T. S. E. and the Chicago Operators' local manifested a reversal of policy this week when William Canavan, president of the International, summoned Tom Maloy, business agent of the Chicago local, to New York for conferences over union policy in regard to the 100 Chicago independent theatres which reopened last week with unaffiliated operators imported from New York.

The policy of the I. A. T. S. E. in matters of this kind heretofore has been to permit the locals to handle their own problems. Maloy's regime has always resented intrusion of any description in its affairs, yet Maloy, accompanied by Ralph O'Hara, Tom Reynolds and Emmett Quinn, Chicago union officials, all of whom are under indictment there, complied with Canavan's summons and went into secret conference with him in an undisclosed location in New York. Attempts to communicate with Canavan and Maloy were unsuccessful.

Maloy's submissiveness in the matter is interpreted as an admission that the situation in Chicago has progressed beyond his control and that he is now willing to have Canavan assume command.

The Chicago theatres reopened Saturday with one "imported" operator in the booth after being closed for two weeks. Several operators were arrested because they were without city licenses, but the independents obtained an injunction restraining the police from further interference on the grounds that the licensing ordinance is unconstitutional. Attorneys for the operators' union are now seeking dissolution of the temporary injunction.

C. K. Creiger, who replaced Joe Maloy as city examiner of operators last week, is now charged with obstructing the licensing of the imported operators. Creiger, according to attorneys for the exhibitors, is an ally of Tom Maloy's and a former member of the Operators' union.

Meanwhile theatres are being guarded by police, although the only retaliation efforts of the union thus far have been of an ordinary nature, and included peaceful picketing of theatres and radio appeals to the public not to patronize the independent theatres involved.

A lockout of theatre janitors was charged by Thomas Burke, business manager of the union, but was denied by Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois, who stated that janitors who failed to report for work were acting on Burke's advice.

Ludwig Siegel, secretary of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association for many years, resigned last week, stating that his interests rested with the small, independent exhibitor and that he planned to reopen his Lindy Theatre with one operator. Theatres of the Chicago Exhibitors Association are mostly circuit or affiliated houses.

Make Drastic Admission Cut

Loew Cleveland houses, numbering 10, have cut admissions 16 to 40 per cent. Fred Desberg is the circuit's general manager.

Film Production Not 'On the Rocks,' Says McGoldrick

With productions such as "Tom Sawyer," "Skippy" and "Huckleberry Finn," Paramount not only inaugurated a new production cycle, but it uncovered story material of broad enough appeal to counteract an important part of the depression in theatre business.

This constitutes the message given members of the Paramount Pep Club at a meeting in the home office this week by Rita C. McGoldrick, of the Motion Picture Committee of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, and editor of School and Screen, a department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

"When many other producers were crying 'depression' and doing nothing about it," said Mrs. McGoldrick, "Paramount decided that what the industry needed was pictures of general appeal—pictures which the entire family could attend together.

"Many other producers were absorbed in the cycle of sex and gang pictures," Mrs. McGoldrick continued. "Paramount placed no particular emphasis on gangster pictures. It did not follow the trend of production which purported to reveal the status of sex in business. Instead," the speaker declared, "Paramount sought material of family interest and appeal and the production of stories of adolescent life resulted."

Paramount has "kept its production slate clean" in other significant ways, Mrs. McGoldrick declared, pointing to the number of sensationally conceived and salaciously executed books that are available to producers as source material. Few of these have been purchased by Paramount, she said, and what sensational literature the company has adapted has been treated in production with discrimination and restraint. As a result of this treatment, Mrs. McGoldrick stated, organizations which would never have endorsed "An American Tragedy" as a book will endorse it as a picture.

Mrs. McGoldrick stated that the same assertion applies to Fox's treatment of "Bad Girl."

"Production is not 'on the rocks,'" she said, "when results of that kind are obtainable."

Mrs. McGoldrick declared that the cycle of juvenile story pictures comes at a time when it is "crucially necessary in the industry." Depression, she said, is not yet over. Pictures of family appeal will always do business at the box office, and Paramount, as the leader of this production cycle, is in a position to reap the greatest financial harvest from it.

Mrs. McGoldrick, who interrupted her vacation in order to address the Paramount employees at the meeting, described the radio work done under her direction with the object of developing public interest in worthwhile productions which are not "box office."

"A large public is being educated to patronize better pictures," Mrs. McGoldrick concluded.

Editor Motion Picture Herald,

New York City, N. Y.
Dear Sir:—

A man by the name of F. G. Gulette, came to us and agreed to make a local picture in Sound of our leading business houses and factories. This reel was not to cost us anything but we were to show it for one week which we agreed to do. We gave him a letter of introduction to our business houses, asking the business men to listen to his proposition. Gulette had very little difficulty getting many of the merchants to go along with his proposition. He collected his money in advance which averaged $35 per merchant. He made many promises and told varied stories.

Gulette suddenly disappeared and we could not locate him anywhere, although he had phoned to Chicago, Rochester, Pittsburgh, Canton and Cleveland, Ohio. We had our police department wire these cities but just couldn't get in touch with him. Two days ago, the reel arrived here from Baltimore. When we called the laboratory on the phone, they advised us Gulette brought the negative there, paid for a positive and gave shipping instructions. Now, this is our kick in the matter, the reel is not in Sound and is a very miserable example of photography.

Gulette has splendid references from many leading theatres in the middle west and western New York state, also fine newspaper clippings.

I suggest you have this inserted in your columns notifying your readers to get in touch with me, before doing any business with this man.

Very respectfully,
C. D. BUSS.
Gen. Mgr.

Hughes-Franklin See 125,000 Seats By 1932 In 110 Houses

The Hughes-Franklin circuit expects to have 125,000 seats in 110 theatres before the end of 1931. It already has 104 houses, with 120,000 seats, nearly 50,000 having been added during the last six months through various acquisitions.

Additions to the circuit will be the Leimert, Los Angeles, 1,500 seats; the Sunkist, Pomona, 1,200; the Whittier, 900, and possibly the proposed Universal house, which will also seat 900. Franklin admitted the circuit took a slight loss in Texas during the summer hot weather, but said business in general was holding up well.

Warner May Rebate Wage Cut As Studio Is Set To Reopen

Warner temporary studio wage cuts on the Coast may be rebated within 30 days, it is understood, as the plant swings into the final stages of its preparation for reopening the first week in September.

Already 114 employees have returned to the stenographic, accounting and technical departments.

Columbia Profit Is $560,869 for Last Fiscal Year

Columbia Pictures reported a net profit, after taxes, for the fiscal year ended June 27 last, of $560,869, equivalent to $3.09 per share on 181,829 shares of common stock outstanding.

This figure is approximately $400,000, or 40 per cent under the company's 1930 earnings of $960,000, equal to $6,12 per share. Joe Brandt, Columbia president, has said the figures do not fully represent the earnings of the company for the year included, since a certain substantial income, normally received from the distribution of films in Great Britain and the Irish Free State, will not be received until after the beginning of the new fiscal year, by reason of the shift to a percentage basis of distribution in those countries, which is expected to result in a greater yield ultimately than the previous distribution system.

Columbia's gross profit for the year was $4,129,053.01. Net taxes were $637,369.86, while the company's earned surplus is $1,283,085.43. Cash on hand amounts to $402,400.14.

The uncertainty of prevaling conditions in Australia as well as declining foreign exchange, were assigned by Brandt as reasons for the decision to sell Australian pounds and bonds derived from distribution of Columbia pictures in Australia, resulting in a shrinkage of $86,452.91. This amount was charged against profit during the last quarter, according to Brandt, although the rentals were actually accumulated for the entire period April, 1930 to the end of the present fiscal year.

Canada to Reveal Results Of Film Probe in Two Weeks

Results of the Canadian government's investigation of the film industry in that country will be made public in about a week, when the R. H. Greer report is expected to be completed.

Colonel Greer, appointed by Attorney-General W. H. Price to investigate the structure and practices of the film trade in Canada, has been examining the evidence taken before Peter White, commissioner in the inquiry.

Cantor To Go On Air

Eddie Cantor, stage and screen star, will be heard in a series of seven broadcasts over a nation-wide NBC-WEAF network beginning Sunday, September 13.

Skouras Visits New York

Charles P. Skouras, general manager of the Skouras Super Theatres, Middle West circuit, was in New York last week booking films for the new season.

Plan To Take Circuit

Burris and Wharton, recent lessees of the Ryon in Georgetown, Del., plan to develop a circuit of houses on the Delmarvia Peninsula.

BAIRD READY TO BATTLE FOR U. S. CONTROL OF TELEVISION MARKET

Mass Production Planned Immediately

Bankers and Technicians of English Company En Route to States for Long-Planned Invasion

Closely held plans of the British Baird Television Company to invade the American field in television competition with the electrics here is about to materialize, with a complete unit of Baird executives and technicians about to leave London for New York where a plant will be acquired for mass production of popular-priced sets.

Two years ago, Baird sent engineers to America to gather data for the invasion. This survey, it is understood, was completed a few weeks ago and the results, favoring an invasion, recommended immediate action in order to beat to market Radio Corporation and others which have decided upon a one-year layoff before commencing mass production of home television sets.

Sydney A. Moseley and Leon Osterwell, who represent the London bankers financing Baird, are already en route to New York. J. L. Baird will follow shortly, heading the contingent of engineers and technical experts.

Reports from London television circles indicate that the Baird move is the biggest event of its kind since television was introduced, and represents the first serious effort to break open the home field on a wholesale scale.

RKO-Paramount Ready Sept. 5

The new 3,000-seat house recently built by Paramount in a strategic suburban location in Cincinnati, and considered the most beautiful theatre in the city, will be opened September 5 by RKO, who acquired a 21-year lease on the property. It will be called the RKO-Paramount. Policy will be second runs 14 days after first-run showings in RKO downtown houses.

Holiday Change in Canada

The Canadian Government has decided to split Thanksgiving Day and Armistice Day, which were observed simultaneously in recent years. The two holidays will now be distinct and separate—a matter of interest to exhibitors in Canada.

Television in a Year

Sydney Moseley, of Baird Television, London, predicts that "ultra-short" wave television will be ready for use in theatres in one year.

Baird is one of the largest television organizations in Europe and is known to have eyed the American market with a view to invading as competition to American electrics.

22 Television Broadcasters in U.S.; 68 Shortwave Stations Operating

Television broadcasts are now picked up regularly from 22 stations in the United States, although the total number of shortwave relay broadcasting stations reaches 38, with 30 in Europe.

W6XK at Los Angeles is the only television broadcaster west of Indiana with nine of the total 22 operating in New York, three at Chicago and one at Downers Grove, Ill.; three in New Jersey.

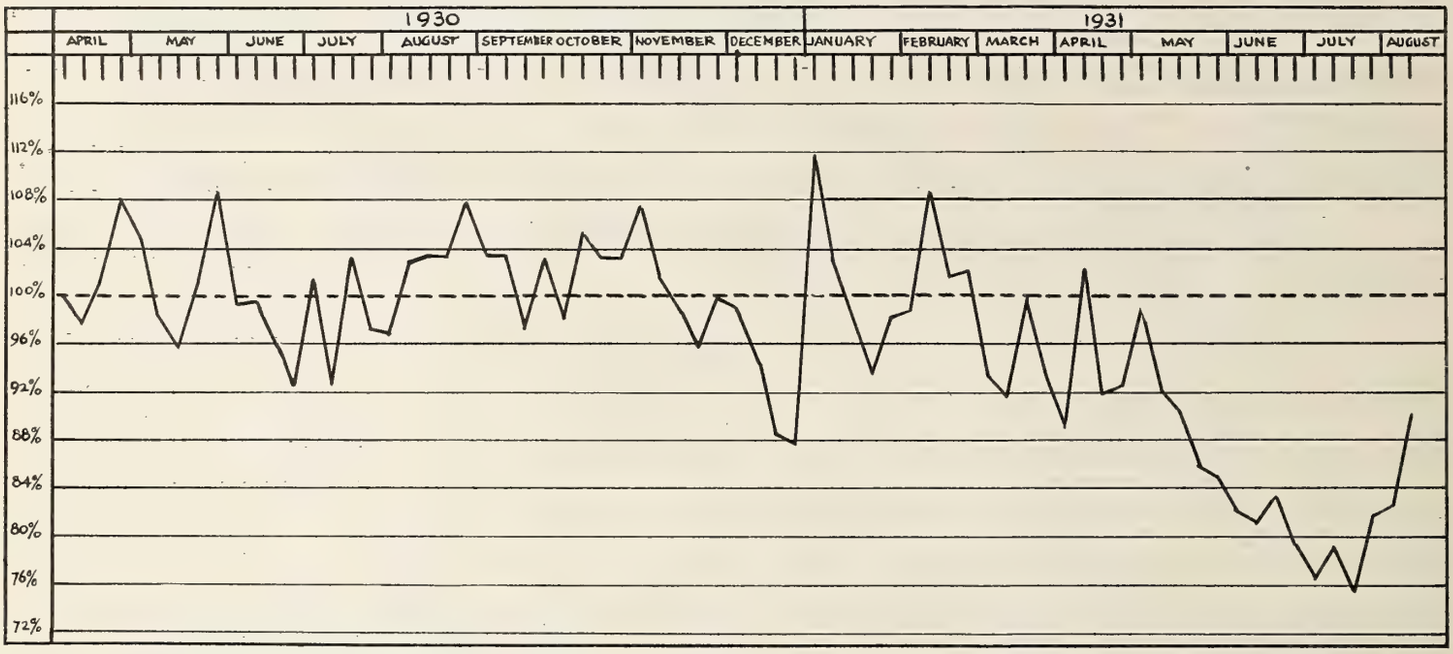
Box Office Receipts Continue Steady Climb Upward



The drive toward healthier box office receipts continues! Not once since the second week in July have weekly grosses faltered in their steady climb upward. This week, figures from sixteen cities disclose the extent which admissions gained over one week ago.

The chart above reveals box office receipts in 16 cities from the week ending April 1, 1930, to August 8, 1931. The 100 per cent line represents the average intake for the same period in 1930.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

PREMIERE. Smiles for "An American Tragedy," smiled for the news cameras by Stuart Erwin, Paramount player, and his wife of only a few weeks, June Collyer, also a film celebrity, upon their arrival at the United Artists theatre in Los Angeles for the Western premiere of Paramount's "An American Tragedy."

SOCIETY-FILM NOTE. Cavalier Ufficiale Rosario Romeo (right) being greeted by Mayor Dunne of Providence, R. I., while a guest of Marchesa Iside Minnucci, Italian noblewoman, at her villa in Newport. Romeo has come to this country to produce a series of Italian pictures for the Aurora Film Corporation.

ACME PHOTO

LUCKY THIRTEEN. For that was the number of feminine film players selected as the Wampas "baby stars" of 1931. Forsaking competition for the moment in order to pose as a group for this picture taken in Hollywood, they are (left to right) Joan Blondell, Warner Brothers; Constance Cummings, Columbia; Frances Dade, free lance; Frances Dee, Paramount; Karen Morley, M-G-M; Marion Shilling, RKO-Pathe; Marian Marsh, Warner Brothers; Barbara Weeks, United Artists; Anita Louise, Universal; Joan Marsh, M-G-M; Sidney Fox, Universal; Rochelle Hudson, Radio, and Judith Wood, Paramount.

JAPANESE ATHLETES. At least they are from Waseda University, all except Sessue Hayakawa (center), whose guests the rest were when this picture was taken recently at the Paramount West Coast studio., where Hayakawa is making his second screen debut in "Daughter of the Dragon."

IN FILM DEBUT AT 104! Charlie High Hat, Western Indian, who makes his first screen appearance (after all these years!) in the Clifton-Allen Talking Picture Epics production, "The Navajo Witch."

FILM CELEBRITY AT HOME. Another addition to our collection of screen notables pictured where they live the real, not reel life, this week's contribution being Marilyn Miller, First National star, at the entrance to her charming home of early Californian architecture in Beverly Hills.

AFTER SEVEN YEARS. And meanwhile a lot of water has passed under Brooklyn Bridge to the sea. Yet somehow right at home seems Polly Moran, M-G-M comedienne, on her arrival in New York after an absence of that length of time.

ANOTHER OVERSEAS RECRUIT. Lily Dagover, German star, who has been signed by First National. Despite her background (or because of it) she will be assigned to leading roles in English-speaking productions.

HOLIDAY. But a busy day for those wary creatures who swim the streams in the hills around Hollywood. Here is Madge Evans, M-G-M player, adding another to her catch and thus affording a double feast for the fisherman's eye. Madge's next screen appearance is in "West of Broadway."

LOS ANGELES' OLDEST HOME. La Casa de Dona Encarcacion Avila, located at 14-18 Olvera street and built in 1818, as it appears today, practically unaltered since 1847, when Commodore Stockton made it his headquarters. Above Gary Cooper, Paramount star, adds a human touch in proper costume.

ELIMINATION OF SECOND OPERATOR SOUGHT BY EXHIBITORS NATIONALLY

Reintroduction of Vaudeville May Rehabilitate the Ranks of the Musicians' Federation

tions are based on decreased revenues or the expectancy of lower grosses. Labor officials discount the lower gross expectancy by pointing out that there has been no noticeable decrease of admissions which might indicate the proximity of a serious drop-off in theatre grosses. Their concessions of this summer, involving a voluntary wage reduction of 7 1-2 per cent for a period of ten weeks, and amounting to an estimated saving to exhibitors of $800,000, were made in recognition of the existence of an unusual summer period of depression in theatre business and sufficiently demonstrated, they say, labor's willingness to co-operate with exhibitors in periods of real emergency, the labor officials declare.

With the passing of those factors which contribute to lower grosses during the summer, labor headquarters in New York will not advocate further concessions on the part of members, it was said at the offices of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and those of the American Federation of Musicians. Officials of both organizations, however, indicated that they would not stand in the way of individual locals of their organizations which saw fit to continue the concessions made this summer.

More Theatres Become Unionized?

An increase in the percentage of houses unionized this year, as compared with last; a maintenance of average wage scales in all territories, and a favorable percentage of men employed, is expected by labor leaders to result from the negotiations now in progress. Naturally, figures on these phases of the theatre labor situation are not available in advance of the settlement of the annual contracts, but the theatre union heads are both optimistic regarding the outcome of negotiations.

Significant increases in the employment of musicians in theatres this year are certain to materialize, Joseph N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians, believes.

"The reintroduction of vaudeville in many situations, together with the current progress of negotiations for the employment of musicians this year in cities where none were employed last year, clearly indicate the improved outlook for the employment of musicians," Weber said.

He declared that he was unable to specify those localities in which new employment of musicians would probably materialize, pending the outcome of negotiations. It is known, however, that several situations in Denver are now negotiating for the employment of musicians.

"We have powerful evidence of an increased public desire for the personal element in the theatre," Weber continued. "Not the least of this is the response of more than 6,000,000 people to our advertisements against the maintenance of 'canned' music in the theatre. All of this increases the probability of a more favorable employment of musicians this year."

No Slash for Musicians

In regard to wage scales, Weber said that the "American Federation of Musicians will not agree to any reductions of the basic wage."

General amicable settlement of all contracts under negotiation is anticipated at the offices of the stage hands and operators federation, where it was admitted, however, that any predictions at this stage of the negotiations, must possess an element of uncertainty. The general condition of employment and the status of wage scales is expected to be satisfactory.

William Canavan, president of the I. A. T. S. E., estimated that the labor concessions of the summer had effected an $800,000 saving for exhibitors.

"It was our desire," he said, "to co-operate with exhibitors in a period of industry depression. It is the obligation of both to work hand in hand for a return to normal business conditions. I believe the period of emergency is now over, however, and I will not advocate any further concessions."

Canavan indicated, however, that the question of additional concessions is a matter for the disposition of the individual locals. His office discounts considerably the present national agitation for a return to one operator per shift in the theatres and believes that all contracts will be settled on much the same basis as those which are expiring. The outlook for the employment of stage hands, the union office believes, is made more favorable than ever before by the tendency toward the reinstatement of vaudeville and the increased introduction of stage presentations, attributable, it was said, to the cessation of studio production of musicals.

Following are the detailed results of the national survey of the theatre labor situation.

New Orleans' Operators Agree to Wage Cut

New Orleans—Allied Stage Crafts Contract expires September 1st. Present scale: Operators Class A houses, Orpheum, States, Saenger; $57.80. Stagehands, $60 to $65, with overtime amounting to $67 and $70. Musicians class A, $70. Overtime and outside work amount to approximately $100 per week; conductors 50 per cent. more. Crafts are requesting 5 per cent. increase. Recently operators accepted a reduction of 7½ per cent. for 10 weeks, June to August. All houses will resist any advance. There will be no walkouts as majority of the members are said to be favoring a 10 per cent. to 20 per cent. reduction on contract.

No Settlement Yet of Chicago Operator Turmoil

Chicago—Although 100 independent theatres here which were closed for two weeks have been reopened on what may prove to be a temporary basis, the Chicago labor situation as regards employment of operators is still in a state of turmoil. Independent exhibitors contend that no contract exists between themselves and the operators' union and that the agreement on which the operators have been working was forced on them eighteen months ago without any preliminary negotiations or agreement and, in consequence, is not a valid contract. The independents are demanding a return to the one man in the booth status and have reopened their theatres with either owners or unaffiliated operators manning the projection machines. The contract with the circuit and affiliated theatres expires in January, 1932, and is regarded as a valid document by those theatres. At this time, it appears that there is little possibility of the contract being renewed without a reduction of one man in the booth or a reduction of the existing wage scale, or both. Little difficulty is contemplated in the renewal of contracts with musicians and stage hands, as both exhibitors and labor appear satisfied with existing contracts.

General Condition of Musicians' Wage Scale Expected To Be Completely Satisfactory

Pittsburgh Independents Demand One Operator

Pittsburgh—Pittsburgh chain theatres have signed a 2-year agreement with operators beginning September 1st at 5 per cent increase in wage scale. Independent theatre owners are meeting almost daily with operators and demand elimination of one man in booth. Operators are willing to accept a slight wage cut, but will not reduce man power. Independents threaten to employ non-union men September 1st. Independents employ 30 per cent of the operators and unlikely they will gain their point. Independents pay slightly less than chains. Unlikely there will be any change with musicians and stage hands.

Cincinnati Wants Wage Reduction and One Man

Cincinnati—Cincinnati suburban exhibitors object to continuing 2 men in booth simultaneously, claiming 1 man sufficient since introduction of sound on film. Also seeking a reduction from present scale of $55 to $80 according to seating capacity, based on 40-hour week. Suburbans only operate evenings. Operators work average of 33 hours weekly. Present contracts expire August 31st. Meetings are now in progress. Satisfactory settlement expected soon.

Non-Union Operators And Stench Bombs in St. Louis

St. Louis—Musicians' contract with first run houses including Ambassador, Missouri, Fox and St. Louis, and the St. Louis Amusement Chain expires in September. St. Louis Amusement Company officials have announced they will not renew their music contract as the company has been paying forty musicians it does not use. None of the independent neighborhood houses are using musicians at present. Projectionists are working under a special ten week summer schedule which reduced pay in houses of less than 700 seats from $54 to $44 a week and cut the pay in larger houses 7½ per cent—arrangement expiring about September 1st. Agreement with stage hands also expires about September first. They are paid base rate of $75 a week but only about twenty stage hands are employed in other than the first run houses which feature stage shows. It is probable all the unions will seek a renewal of old contracts but there hasn't been any official announcement of the position of either the union or the theatres except that made by St. Louis Amusement Company relative to renewal of music contract. Three small neighborhood houses have been using non-union projectionists. Recently some one planted a stench bomb in one of these houses but no other labor trouble has been reported here for months.

Atlanta Exhibitors Fight Two-Man Bill

Atlanta—Initial gun in the battle between Atlanta theatres and operators over renewal of contracts on September 1 was fired here last week when a bill said to be sponsored by labor interests and making maintenance of at least two men in each booth mandatory was introduced to the city council. Committee action was deferred at the request of theatre interests and another hearing was scheduled for September 3rd. It is understood officials of seven downtown theatres will remain adamant in demands for wage reductions with the smaller houses insisting on one man per booth. Operators are equally firm in demands for higher wages and status quo man power. All interests are frantically striving to avert duplication of the Birmingham labor situation.

Wage Cuts and One Operator Asked at Omaha

Omaha—Probably fireworks when contracts affecting 75 operators expire October 1st, unless union heads offer salary cuts. Agitation for several weeks by Nebraska Theatres Corporation and Popular Amusement Company controlling all neighborhoods except two, for 1 man in booth. Looks like operators will lose on this count, but Howard Jackons, business agent, will not reveal conditions of new contracts now being drawn up. All neighborhoods voluntarily given 7½ per cent cuts by union shortly after national cuts. Evert R. Cummings, Publix Division manager, looks for peaceful negotiations. RKO has only orchestra in town. Musician situation amicable.

Kansas City Says, "One Operator—Or Else"

Kansas City—Operators and local independent exhibitors are in conference on new contract. Exhibitors are demanding one man in booth. If union refuses to comply with request, all independents will drop union operators and hire operators of the Sound Projection School. It is believed that the neighborhood circuit theatres may switch to the non-union group, if settlement cannot be made. No trouble as yet.

New Contracts Agreed On at Baltimore

Baltimore—Harry Cluster, business manager of Independent Operators and Managers Union not affiliated with A. F. L., says they have operators in 58 theatres and contracts run until August 31, 1934, and all are contented. William K. Saxton, Loew's city manager, says: "New contracts with Local 181, operators' union, affiliated with A. F. L., came up August 31st, and there are no indications of any differences coming up." A. F. L. operators are in about 25 houses. They took voluntary reduction of wages for 10 weeks, ended August 15th. A. F. L. operators are working in some houses here without contracts. There are no signs of any dissatisfaction.

Three Charlotte Theatres Become Unionized

Charlotte, N. C.—Three of Charlotte's five theatres are now using union men entirely and there has been no trouble between operatives and management for sometime. The recently organized Charlotte Labor Journal carried an article urging people of Charlotte to patronize these union theatres, and although the union has made many efforts to get the two remaining show houses to use organized labor there has been no understanding to date. Just how long the local situation will remain tranquil is a matter of opinion, but no definite break is expected in the near future.

Mort Singer Aids With Minneapolis Negotiations

Minneapolis—No hint of labor trouble here. Stage hand contracts only ones coming up for discussion. Mort Singer of RKO is in town today to confer on subject and will meet union men with Theodore Hays, veteran of Minneapolis Theatre, representing Paramount-Publix. Other Twin City contracts have another year to run. There has been no difficulty here for a year or more.

Milwaukee Confers With Stage Hands This Week

Milwaukee—No labor trouble here to date. Negotiations start this week with stage hands. Musicians on new season contracts. Operators are on two-year contracts with one more year to run. Original operator contract called for five cents an hour increase this year over last. Owners seeking to knock off this stipulation. Outlook is favorable.

Philadelphia Operators May Make New Concessions

Philadelphia—No labor troubles in Philadelphia at present, and none expected in near future. Operators have taken a reduction during the summer which will probably continue over the winter. All are working harmoniously.

No Contracts Expiring With Albany Labor

Albany—There is absolutely no labor trouble in the motion picture theatres of Albany, New York. A three-year contract between the exhibitors and the operators was signed a year ago. The contract between the exhibitors and the stage hands still has a year to run.

George Clifford Resigns

George Clifford, secretary and business manager of the Quigley Publishing Company, has resigned that position to become associated with a Chicago publishing enterprise.

Clifford's association with the Quigley Publishing Company comprises twelve years of service during which he was managing editor of the then Exhibitor's Herald and, later, business manager and assistant treasurer of the Quigley Publishing Company, in Chicago. With the acquisition of Motion Picture News and Motion Pictures Today & Exhibitors' Daily Review by the Quigley organization in December, 1930, Clifford became secretary and business manager of the new company with headquarters in New York.

He first became associated with the Quigley Publishing Company in Chicago in 1917. In the fall of 1918 he resigned the position of managing editor of Exhibitors' Herald to become assistant publicity director of Swift & Co., Chicago packers. In the fall of 1920 he returned to the Quigley organization as business manager and assistant treasurer, an office he fulfilled until becoming secretary and business manager last December.

Clifford's past residence and business and journalistic interests have always centered in Chicago, and included associations with the City News Bureau of Chicago, the Illinois Steel Co. and the Chicago Bell Telephone Co. He returns to that city with a record of high achievement to assume a position of responsibility and promise.

His resignation has been accepted with regret over the termination of a valuable and always pleasant association.

Canada Calm With Open Shop; Operators Making Concessions

Toronto—No labor difficulties are presenting themselves for theatres in Canada, other than the differences which have prevailed in Hamilton and Ottawa with various theatres. Open shop for months past, and likely to continue. Operators in Toronto show willingness to grant concessions offering to abolish charge for private screenings.

Portland Contracts Have Another Year to Run

Portland—Managers of Portland theatres are optimistic on labor conditions. Contracts have another year to run, therefore everything peaceful in this respect. First runs cooperating nicely.

Los Angeles Has No Idea What Labor Trouble Is

Los Angeles—No labor trouble in local theatres. M. J. Sands, secretary-treasurer of Operators Union, says on recommendation National Union took voluntary 5 per cent cut on June 8th and on August 1st took one of 7½ per cent for 90 days.

One Operator and Wage Cuts Make Denver Peaceful

Denver—Labor situation at theatres in this territory looks favorable. Publix contracts with stage hands and operators still holds another year, and they are negotiating with musicians, and things look good for new contract, as neither side is asking anything unreasonable. Neighborhood and small town theatres signing with operators in most instances for one operator, and at reduced salaries. No trouble in past, nor look for any in near future.

Three Galveston Theatres Dark; Operators Balk at Wage Cuts

Galveston, Tex.—Due to differences with the projectionists' union here, three theatres remain dark—Dixie and Key, Martini's theatres and the Tremont, Publix. Publix and Martini are asking a cut in scale or they will keep their houses closed.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

NOW that the lid has been blown from the seething pot of resentment against racketeering in certain Chicago union circles, operators of many key houses in that town—and owners of scores of smaller runs—hold high hopes that some one will go just a little deeper and unearth the facts which permitted a well known union official to force these houses to tear down marquee and out-front electric signs and in their places erect new ones purchased from a sign company in which the union executive holds an interest. . . .

If you ask Fox home official officials for an explanation of the word "Hokum," they will tell you that "it flows from the motion picture press agents' tongues like the proverbial milk and honey in the promised land." . . .

In other words, "The hodge podge of pretty sounding words and phrases found in the typical theatrical ad are no more than what they are: mere words." . . .

Or HOKUM! . . .

Twenty years ago friends of Ferris Hartman, then a stage idol of the West Coast, advised him to enter the new and struggling picture business if he would be assured of a career. . . . Hartman refused to desert the footlights because they offered no "economic future." . . .

This week, the grand old man of Gold Coast legit was carried to a San Francisco hospital . . . starving . . . Unable to find work because of depression on the stage. . . .

Joe, incidentally, finds many reasons for the existence of "Yesmen." . . . If you are tempted to say "No," says Joe, remember that "A negative stays in the can—it's the positive that gets the applause." . . .

Imagine the embarrassment of that Glendale, Cal. exhibitor, when his attention was called to the wording in his theatre marquee, which read:

"Edward G. Robinson Ten Children Any Time!"

The house admits kiddies for ten cents, but the "cents" was omitted when Robinson's name crowded the marquee display. . . .

Alice White arrived in town this week, and all reports to the contrary, she has not accepted one of those "oodles" of offers for legit or stage appearances. . . . Alice is still talking about the "wonderful" aid given her by Balaban & Katz in putting over her Chicago stage debut at Publix houses. . . .

Ten Cents a Seat!

St. Paul has only four first run houses, but nearly a score of second run and neighborhood theatres. Just now there is more than a fair share of 10-cent admission prices among them. Both the Garrick and the Lyceum are advertising seats at any time, any place, at 10 cents.

MARY, Mary is never contrary when she takes a peek at the Pickford bankbook, which is said to contain a nice little nest egg of $5,000,000. . . . Ruth Roland only has $4,000,000 salted away, taken from Coast real estate ventures in which the former serial queen has been more successful than most California real estate "experts." . . .

Third on the list of "movie queens with a lotta jack" is Marion Davies, $2,500,000. . . . Norma Talmadge and Marion Nixon, each hold on tightly to $2,000,000, and Colleen Moore will have her $2,000,000 shortly. . . .

Can it be true? . . . That Harold Lloyd, who still remembers those $3-a-day Roach days, can cash a check for 12 million smackers? . . . if he so wills. . . .

Charles Chaplin's bankers are holding Charlie's $7,000,000 until that rainy day. . . . Doug Fairbanks and Will Rogers run neck-and-neck in the $4,000,000 class. . . . The single-millionaires include Constance Bennett, Betty Compson, Noah Beery, Corinne Griffith, Jackie Coogan, Tom Mix, Richard Barthelmess and others. . . .

Someone told Don (RKO Coast studio) Eddy that Hollywood picture plants are collectively the largest purchasers of lumber in the world, consuming a total of 40,000,000 linear feet of timber yearly . . .

Seven days later Don came out of hiding with a sheaf of notes and the astonishing discovery that, roughly, this lumber could be converted into 2,600 five-room houses of the California type. . . .

So, if the worse happens, the Hollywood gang can salvage the timber and go in for house building. . . .

Minneapolis Mortensen tells a story about a checker who was dispatched to a small North Dakota town by a leading distributor's checking agency to closely watch the "gate" at a certain picture house. . . .

He brought back the figures. . . . But only the theatre's projectionist knows how inaccurate they are. . . . For it was he who checked (?) tickets during one whole afternoon when the official checker answered the call of other business and departed after making a "deal" with the machine operator. . . .

The Majestic at Houston, now an RKO first run, has been rebuilt three times during its lengthy career covering 24 years. . . . Since the first nickel was taken in, back in 1907, Eddie Bremer was assistant and manager . . . until the other day when a rift with the company ended in his resignation. . . .

THE procession of has-beens never ends its weary trek through Hollywood. . . .

A certain studio, Ray Coffin tells us, had the temerity to advertise for extras the other day. . . . And, as usual, the result resembled the well known army mess call. . . .

The crowd contained many former celebrities. men and women whose proud names once glowed warmly in electric lights, who rubbed elbows with the rabble, in the push to catch the supercilious eye of the assistant director. . . .

Of course, they have had their moments—their big moments—for which they now would glady trade in return for a few hours of security. . . .

A pitiful commentary upon the loyalty of the fickle public. . . .

Fame flickers as the flame. . . . and dies.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Although for the last few weeks theatre business has been on the upward trend, the current week showed a slight decrease in total grosses done by 164 theatres in 29 cities. The drop, however, was less than $6,000. For the current week the total grosses were $2,200,697, while for the previous week they were $2,206,196. Also, there were six new low grosses during the current week.

A complete survey of theatre business during the last few weeks is published on page 11, this issue.

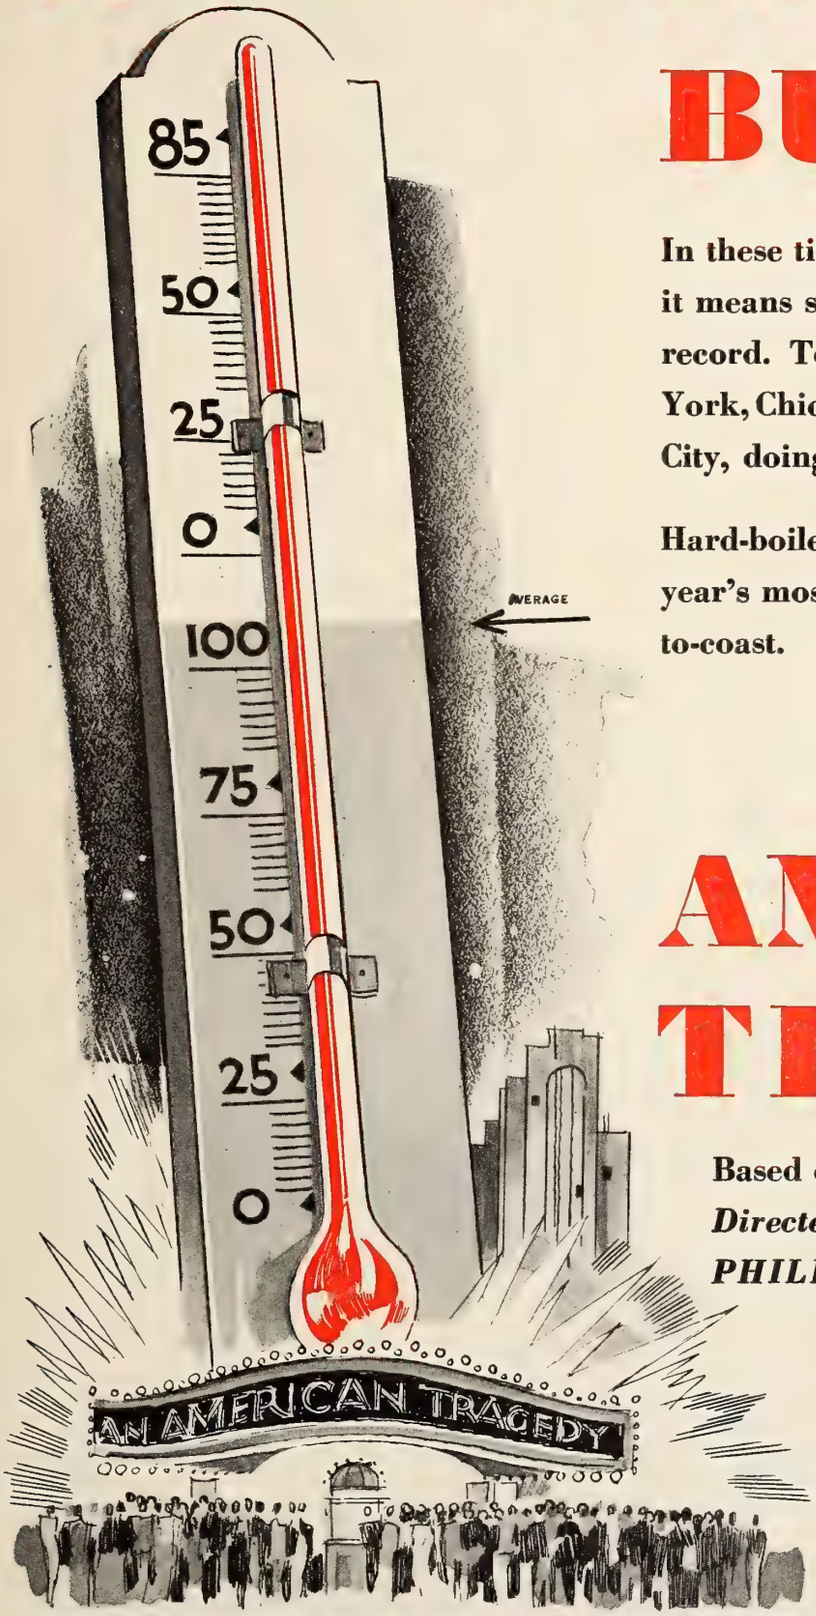
87% OVER AVERAGE BUSINESS!



In these times when only Big Pictures get Big Money, it means something for a picture to hang up such a record. Ten of the principal theatres, including New York, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles, Denver, Oklahoma City, doing record-breaking business.

Hard-boiled showmen, public and critics acclaim it the year's most important picture. A clean-up from coast-to-coast.

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"

Based on the novel by THEODORE DREISER. Directed by JOSEF VON STERNBERG with PHILLIPS HOLMES, SYLVIA SIDNEY and FRANCES DEE.

ANOTHER BIG MONEY HIT

"Reading Time 8 minutes"

EXEMPLIFIES THE PACE OF THE AGE

The trend in fiction is to short stories. They're even calling them short, short stories, and some magazines give you the reading time. It's the hit-and-run, look-and-leap, hear-and-hike era. And folks like movie entertainment that's short and sweet. Educational's varied program—made by specialists—meets the new demand. You, too, must meet it. Give them variety—and more variety—comedies, cartoons, romance, travel, novelty. Make it snappy. Seeing, hearing time, 8 to 20 minutes. Tuned to the age in showing time, diversity, quality.

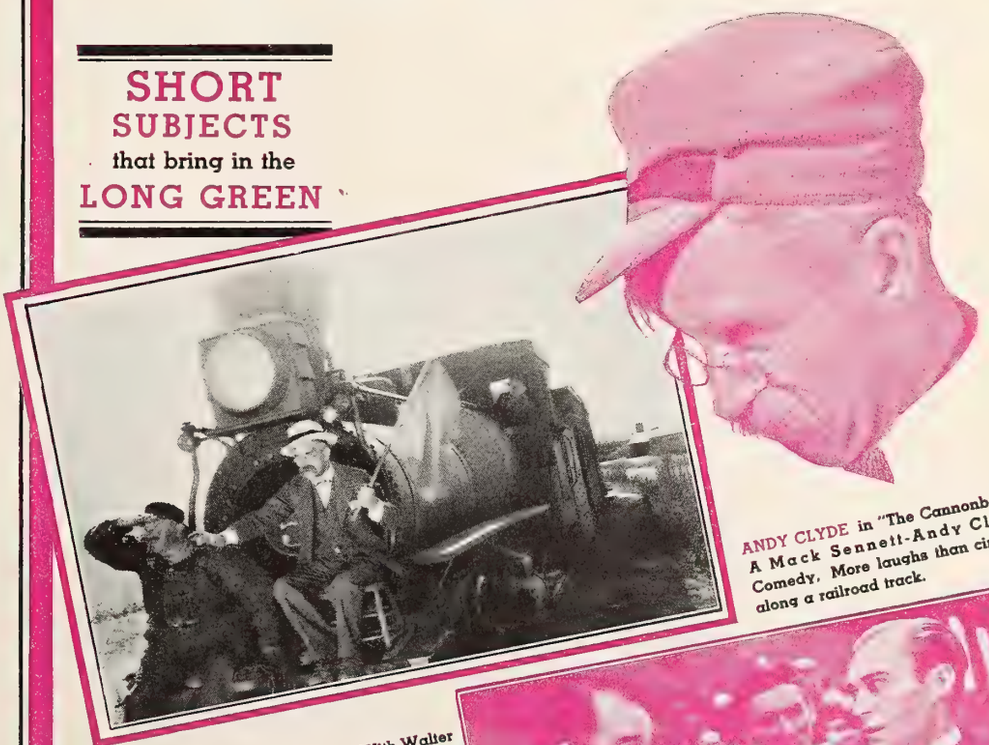
SHORT SUBJECTS that bring in the LONG GREEN



ANDY CLYDE in "The Cannonball." A Mack Sennett-Andy Clyde Comedy. More laughs than cinders along a railroad track.

"HONEYMOON TRIO." With Walter Catlett, Al St. John and Dorothy Granger. A Cameo Comedy. Three great funsters in a matrimonial mix-up that will tie the fans in knots.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

BROADWAY, New York, at eight o'clock at night is a thrilling highway even to those of us accustomed to its glitter and its raucousness. At Broadway and 45th Street when the light turns, red, traffic haults in a stream of cars so solidly strung together that one could skip along their tops. It gives one time to glance about. In every direction the great lighted signs are motion picture announcements. Where are the legitimate theatres? In the City of New York, the Mecca of the drama and its companionate arts, the theatres have been elbowed into the side streets. There is no legitimate theatre on the gay white way advertising a show.

Broadway is something more than the nation's entertainment barometer. Rather it is a clinical thermometer, recording with fractional accuracy the temperature of the public, and reflecting thereby its pulse.

At the present meeting your public is in a normal and fit condition. It is regaling itself on current motion pictures. The crowds moving down the side streets are fewer; the traffic is less. On the thin edge of the nation's business depression these crowds are loving their movies!

The Clubs Are Busy

Do not underestimate Mr. Theatre Man the moving power of the organized groups of the country that have become interested in better pictures. Their voice is rising to strident proportions. Their power, like the moving insistence of flowing lava, is pressing things before it. They are changing local conditions in many vicinities, and in most instances have proved themselves to be directly helpful to the theatre man willing to cooperate with them.

Books—And Some Pictures

Through the summer days the circulating libraries have offered some strange and exotic choices for one's hammock reading—pathological analyses of sex, abnormalities, blatant profanity, raw detail. The rotten specimens in the apple cart of our current literature seem to have tainted the whole. If this is realism, then it would be fun to have a spell of make-believe.

In the past year motion picture producers have bought a number of current books for filming. Some of them were sordid and, in many of their situations, disgusting. It is to the credit of the motion picture industry that in each of these instances the film was a cleaner, stronger product than the book from which it was made. Outstanding examples of this fact are Paramount's "An American Tragedy" and the Fox picture "Bad Girl." Both stories offered unlimited opportunities for salaciousness. But in each instance studio restraint and a willingness to cooperate with the Industry's Code of Ethics brought about a strong picture. These films are good examples to remember and to point to when critics sneer at the immorality of movies!

Two Box Office Pictures

"Huckelberry Finn" and "Merely Mary Ann" have come to town, and we are very happy to tell you that they fulfill in every detail the high hopes we had of them. Ranking with "Tom Sawyer" and "Skippy" here are two delicious studies of youth, gay with comedy, clever and amusing in their ingenuity, so instantly appealing that there will be tears close to your laughter all of the time. These are big box office products. They will receive the unqualified endorsement of all national organizations and club groups. They will win, deservedly, excellent press comments and radio reviews. This department will be glad to furnish you with the detailed analysis of each picture with suggestions for its exploitation through the School and Screen service of MOTION PICTURE HERALD which will be published the second week in September, contingent with the reopening of the schools.

San Rafael's Forward Strive

The Parent-Teacher organizations of San Rafael, California, have for the first time in the history of their city established through a Chairman of Visual Education a sound program of cooperation with their local motion picture exhibitors. The experiment which they have outlined quotes directly the School and Screen plan. Beginning the latter part of September, parents throughout the entire fourteenth district will be able to send their children to the moving picture theatres every Saturday afternoon knowing that the problem of suitable entertainment for them has been solved. The article released to the Associated Press and quoting School and Screen says, "Believing that the entertainment screen is a valuable educational factor which has been too long overlooked, a selection of pictures of outstanding importance will be shown to the children. The definite aim of this experiment is to encourage children to see the best things of the screen and to have the screen contribute directly, and constructively to their education." The article continued, "It is, therefore, up to discriminating parents to encourage these exhibitors by giving them their loyal support in this interesting and important experiment. Information regarding this unusual cooperation between exhibitors and parent-teachers will be sent to the presidents of all P. T. A. organizations for the Fourteenth District. Mrs. Ralph Young of Ross is Chairman of Visual Education."

Kentucky Lifts a Voice

Mrs. Kenneth U. Meguire of Louisville, State Chairman of Motion Pictures, Kentucky Parent-Teachers Association, was author of a letter appearing in the Point of View Column, Louisville Courier Journal, today, on the subject of Parent-Teacher approved pictures, a subject that has been discussed in some letters recently appearing in the same column. Mrs. Meguire said: "The Committee on Motion Pictures of the Kentucky Parent-Teacher Association is interested to read two recent communications to the Point of View Column regarding children and motion pictures. For many years, the Parent-Teacher Association has felt that motion pictures are a potent factor in educating and forming the character of youth and has given the study of motion pictures an important place in its programmes.

"In Child Welfare, the national Parent-Teacher monthly magazine, there is a page which displays a list of current films graded with reference to their suitability to children. This magazine is always available at the Louisville Free Public Library, all the branch libraries and on the news stands. We suggest that parents cut this page from their magazines each month and preserve it for ready reference. Our National Motion Picture Committee compiles this list after pre-viewing the films. It is possible to publish the list in Child Welfare and distribute the latter before the films are shown locally."

Ken Maynard Scores

The breezy small magazine for boys "The Open Road for Boys" with a guaranteed circulation of more than 200,000 has had some extraordinary reactions to its motion picture announcements. Two pages devoted to motion picture reviews are enlivened by stills of particular interest to boys. A month ago the magazine offered to send an autographed picture of Ken Maynard to those of its readers who would write requesting it. The editor was swamped with letters. In less than a week 4,000 boys had written their appreciation of Ken Maynard and asked for his picture. This response reflects the attitude of mind of the modern boy to his motion pictures. The clean-cut understanding hero of the plains is his idol. And for that reason all western pictures are his choice.

New Carroll Theatre To Have ERPI Public Address System

The new Earl Carroll, 3,000-seat legitimate house in New York, opening with the "Vanities" on Thursday, has installed a Western Electric public address system throughout the building for sound amplification. Six loud speakers are installed in the auditorium itself, and 20 in other parts of the house.

Loud speakers in the lobby will make possible curtain announcements before each act and in the dressing rooms will enable cast members to hear a reproduction of the stage proceedings, and make it possible for the stage manager in the wings to keep the players in their rooms advised and note their cues, eliminating call boys. Electrical Research Products made the installation, with J. J. Way and I. F. Durst supervising the installation.

March to Work on Coast

Fredric March, who has worked at Paramount's Long Island studio for more than a year, returns to the company's Hollywood plant this month to play the title role in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Arnaud Signs Lou Alter

Lou Alter, composer of "Manhattan Serenade" and "One of God's Children," has been engaged to write original scores for the "Screen Columnist Series" of shorts to be produced by Pierre Arnaud.

"DIRIGIBLE" A HIT!

BOX OFFICE HEADLINES PROVE IT!

"BUY RIGHT—BUT BUY NOW"

'Dirigible' in Second Week Leads Boston

Total $156,000 for 8 Theatres

BOSTON—"Dirigible," playing its second week at Keith's, did fully as well as in its first week, again placing the theatre at the top for the week's grosses. "Huckleberry Finn"

"Dirigible" Cincy Best In 2nd Run

Total $64,538 for 7 Theatres

CINCINNATI—"Dirigible" at the RKO Palace was the big noise in town last week from the standpoint of plussing the house average. After having been roadshown for several weeks at one of the legitimate houses last winter to good returns, the picture did $17,800 on the week at the Palace, as compared with a $14,000 average. This was the only house to cross the line. In fact, none of the others reached par, the intakes at the RKO Strand and RKO Family touching new lows.

"BUY RIGHT—BUT BUY NOW"

"Dirigible" Soars in St. Paul's Heat

Total $33,400 for 4 Theatres

ST. PAUL—"Dirigible" had things pretty much its own way in torrid St. Paul, and its figure of $15,000, which is $3,000 above average, plus the $16,800 the picture got at the RKO Orpheum, Minneapolis, came close to a Twin City summer record. Business generally was good considering the heat.

"Dirigible" Is High in K. C.: Gets $17,500

Total $55,500 for 5 Theatres

KANSAS CITY—Top honors last week went to "Dirigible," which flew high to the tune of $17,500 at the Mainstreet, whose par figure is $15,000. "Smiling Lieutenant" also beat par in a generally satisfactory week.

Estimated takings for the week ending August 15 and year-round averages:

"SMILING LIEUTENANT" (Para.)
LIBERTY—(1,200), 25c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $5,500. (Average, $5,000.)

'Dirigible' Is Omaha's Best With $15,500

Total $33,050 for 4 Theatres

OMAHA—There wasn't much to complain about in film circles, for only one theatre dropped below the normal figure. "Dirigible" topped all with a gross of $15,500 at the Orpheum, which beat par by $2,000.

"BUY RIGHT—BUT BUY NOW"

"DIRIGIBLE" (Col.)
KEITH'S—(2,800), 25c-65c, 7 days. Gross: $20,000. (Average, $20,000.)

'Frisco Business Picks Up With Three Holdovers

San Francisco—Box office receipts have jumped here with three Frisco houses holding features over for a second week. Pictures retained are: "Huckleberry Finn" at the Paramount, "Front Page" at the United Artists and "Dirigible" at the RKO Orpheum.

"BUY RIGHT—BUT BUY NOW"

"Dirigible's" $7,000 Leads In Charlotte

Total $15,500 for 2 Theatres

CHARLOTTE—Heavy advertising and a special lobby display helped "Dirigible" to get $7,000 in a full week at the Broadway. This was $1,000 better than average. "The Squaw Man"

"BUY RIGHT—BUT BUY NOW"

Penrod and Sam

(First National)

Comedy-Drama

If audience reaction at the Forum on the Coast means anything, William Beaudine has directed a juvenile film which has a great deal of appeal to any one and every one. Beaudine handled the early Ben Alexander pictures, and did "Penrod and Sam" as a silent in 1925.

There is no definite continuity, nor is any necessary. It is purely episodic, the adventure of two small boys and their pals, the scrapes they get into and sometimes get out of. Little Marjorie has her part, as she has in the life of every boy. The audience found in this juvenile slice of life, much that was amusing, and much that was moving.

There were definite tears among the audience when Penrod buried his dog, Duke. But a few moments later, the dialogue was almost unintelligible, so great was the burst of laughter as the boys staged their own hugely enjoyable circus. And that is the film throughout.

Leon Janney and Junior Coghlan play Penrod and Sam, Booth Tarkington's lovable boys, respectively, and both received rounds of applause from the audience. Also appreciatively greeted were Dorothy Peterson as the mother, Matt Moore as the father and Helen Beaudine (daughter of the director) as the sister. Zasu Pitts contributed some comedy, and others of the child cast were applauded by the patrons.

Definitely enthusiastic comment followed the screening at the theatre.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by William Beaudine. From the original Booth Tarkington story. Adaptation and dialogue by Waldemar Young. Photography by Roy Overbaugh. Release date, October 3, 1931.

The Age for Love

(United Artists)

Drama

Billie Dove astounded critics at a preview of "The Age for Love" by her sensational development of magnificent dramatic power and finished histrionic ability following several months of intensive study. Those who knew her as a beautiful star with indifferent dramatic ability are certain to be amazed at the improvement. The picture has been directed very capably by Frank Lloyd from Ernest Pascal's adaptation of his own novel.

This novel production is an intensely interesting study of that popular problem—should the bride stay home and become a housewife or continue her career? The splendid supporting cast includes Edward Everett Horton, Lois Wilson, Mary Duncan, Charles Starrett and Adrian Morris. Howard Hughes produced it with his usual disregard for expense, but he certainly got his money's worth.

Produced by Howard Hughes. Distributed by United Artists. Directed by Frank Lloyd. Adaptation by Ernest Pascal and Frank Lloyd. Dialogue by Robert E. Sherwood. Editor, W. Duncan Mansfield. Photography, John Seitz, Harry Fishbeck. Release date, September 1, 1931.

The Flying Fool

(British International)

"Penny Dreadful" Drama

Here is the kind of story little boys hide under the bed to read o' nights. Why it was ever chosen for a full length film in 1931 would make a story in itself. It is billed on pre-release as a picture with "no stunts, and no war."

That Walter Summers who directed the film has made it a passably good feature is a tribute to his ingenuity, and his nerve in taking up flying and getting his pilot's certificate just to be right with the details in this film shows him to be a serious minded person. Or was it that realizing the inherent weakness of the story, which is just cheap crook melodrama shot against "different" backgrounds, Summers decided that unless he made the most of the air stuff in the picture, there wouldn't be a picture at all?

Henry Kendal as "the flying fool" is just a private detective. He has already worked out the plot and found the master crook when the story opens. But just to give us a run for our money, he merely promises to "get him good and proper by next Monday." Wallace Geoffrey who plays the master crook with all the technique of villainy which he might have employed if the film had been made in 1910, just refuses to believe that the detective can get him at all.

Master crook and his gang make an air trip to Paris (for no good of course). They chose an air liner filled with respectacle passengers to take them over, the master crook electing to travel in a sinister looking packing case which is allowed to occupy the main gangway in the airplane saloon! Of course the detective follows; is trapped; smuggled off the plane in that very handy packing case; taken to a den in Paris, drugged and thrown into a backwash of the Seine. He is rescued through the timely aid of a girl (Benita Hume) who appears to have been mixed up with the crooks, and the two charter a private plane, which the "flying fool" pilots in pursuit of the master crook now well on the return journey to London with a girl (Ursula Jeans) who has been more or less engaged to our airworthy detective. Of course the crook gang follow in a third plane just to introduce a few quickfiring thrills. Master crook lands and taking a look over the air station overhears by wireless that he is followed. Dashing off in a speed car, he is eventually followed by "the flying fool" who swoops overhead in a plane. Master crook, busy watching overhead, drives over a cliff leaving nothing but the fade out with the "flying fool" and the suspected "crook girl," now conveniently discovered to be a detective also, taking one last flight to the Registry.

Ten or fifteen years ago when one liked to be conscious that one was really watching the cinema, this would have been a good story. Just now, like the story book under the bed, it will please little boys in every part of the world where it is shown. Henry Kendall's acting improves the lot by at least 50 per cent, but Wallace Geoffrey is far too sinister to be true, while the two girls are just to artificial even to pass for screen stars.

Produced by British International. From story by Arnold Ridley, Bernard Merivale and Walter Summers. Directed by Walter Summers. Photography by Claude Freise Greene. Running time, 85 minutes.

Pardon Us

(M-G-M)

Comedy

Laurel & Hardy's first feature length comedy, although failing to "roll them in the aisles," kept a large audience in a pleasant frame of mind from beginning to end of the picture.

The story is a satire on all of the prison pictures of a season ago and offers ample opportunity for the popular comedy team to engage in those antics for which they are best known and to introduce specialties which will be new to their present following. Among the latter are some black-face sequences in which Stan Laurel reveals himself as an agile soft-shoe dancer, and Oliver Hardy as a minstrel singer of accomplishment.

Because they mistake a policeman for a street car conductor, Stan and Ollie are committed to prison as bootleggers. Their blundering ways earn them the disfavor of the prison authorities and their cellmates. A jail break in which the comedians were to have been the "goats," results in freeing the team. Bloodhounds are put on their trail but when they overtake the fugitives—working in blackface as cotton pickers—they follow their intended captives around devotedly. Another simple blunder for which the two are famous returns them to prison. Just as simple a blunder enables them innocently to balk a prison break and they are pardoned and released as heroes.

Gag-lines are not all new nor all sparkling, but the individual merit of the performances of the two principals tends to make this defect less obvious. Particularly is this true of a prison schoolroom scene, the sequence in the prison dentist's office, and that in which the two fugitives are discovered in black-face by the prison warden.

Produced by Hal Roach. Distributed by M-G-M. Dialogue by H. M. Walker. Edited by Richard Currier. Directed by James Parrott. Running time, 55 minutes. Release date, August 15, 1931.

The Cannonball
Funny

Andy Clyde in something very nonsensical, but also quite funny, which is more important, and original in idea. Clyde is a rocket inventor who is bequeathed a would-be railroad which must beat the motor bus line in order to grab the mail contract, which is its only hope. The train is most amusing with its crazy motions and commotions. When it seems certain to lose, the rocket appears and does the trick for the old train. More than a few good laughs.

Famous Plays of 1930
(Universal)
Good

The Notre Dame team, in the third of the Rockne football series, shows in detail the manner in which various of the most famous plays of the 1930 season were carried through by the teams which executed them. Coach Anderson explains in a voice which records very well. Highly interesting, holding to the standard of the previous number.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Trap
Good

A William J. Burns Detective Mystery number, and probably better than most of that series. Starts with real action, as a prisoner uses a fast-moving train and a plane to make good his escape from the state penitentiary. The criminal attempts to make good his threat to get the man who was responsible for his sentence, but a clever contrivance, a tear-gas gun in the form of a fountain pen, stops him at the right moment. A kick for any audience. —Running time, 11 minutes.

The Tamale Vendor
Fair

Tom Patricola, dancing, playing the mandolin and singing in his own peculiar way, supplies the fairly satisfactory entertainment in this number. Involved with a senorita who is to marry a Mexican about whom she cares little or less, Patricola saves the day for her. However, he has to do some fast moving to get by with it.

Backfield Play
(Universal)
Good Stuff

Number four of the Rockne football series, in which the Notre Dame team illustrates various systems of backfield defense and offense, while the coach explains what is going on. Plenty of action and good photography enhance the value of the short from the entertainment standpoint. Slow motion is used to picture the detail of the various plays. Interesting as an insight into the fast moving game, whose fans are legion.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Dreamworld
Satisfactory

One of the Romantic Series, done by Brown-Nagel in Multicolor and released by Educational. Scenic effects in southern California are pictured, as well as various playlands of the region. Claude Fleming accompanies with the descriptive dialogue. Color is fairly effective and the theme of interest generally.

SHORTS

Notre Dame Offensive System
(Universal)
Fine

This is the second of the Knute Rockne-Notre Dame football series, wherein the Notre Dame men, forming two teams, run through a group of offensive plays, while Coach "Hunk" Anderson explains the salient features. Excellent slow motion camera work and shots from various angles illustrate the detailed manner and method in which the plays are carried through. Should be of extreme interest to football fans especially, and enjoyable enough for the perhaps disinterested picture-goer.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Trail of the Swordfish
Good

Here is number 1 of the "Cannibals of the Deep" series, with most of the photography done by Mack Sennett off the coast of Lower California. In this number the swordfish is the goal, and though the fish is not landed, the camera landed some splendid shots. Effective, interesting and well executed.

Strange As It Seems
(Universal)
Interesting

Number 12 of this series of natural and human oddities done in color, and possessed of considerable interest. Pictured are a penguin, whose pining for a dead mate is overcome by his own reflection in an ordinary mirror; the New York bootblack whose eccentricity takes the form of working in silk hat and formal morning clothes; a horse with a full grown mustache and a five year old, with a six inch chest expansion, who performs unusual feats of strength. Color adds to the effect.—Running time, 9 minutes.

One Hundred Dollars
(Universal)
Weak

Charles Lawrence in the lead of a comedy which has little in it of the substance which makes comedies amusing. Lacking subtlety and cleverness the yarn concerns the stupid chap who must earn $100 per or renounce his girl. Attempts to sell insurance to the father at a golf tournament and the irate parent chases him, tears his clothes and we see a rather unamusing rushing about in the ladies' locker room.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Arthur to Make Oceanic Feature

George K. Arthur who is again teamed with Karl Dane in a series of four two-reel comedies, completed this week at Paramount's New York studio, sails on the Ile de France, August 26, for a six-weeks' sojourn abroad.

In association with independent Hollywood personalities, Arthur is planning to produce another feature on the order of "The Salvation Hunters,"—that is, so far as small cost is concerned. The story is tentatively titled "The Crossing" and many of the scenes will be shot on shipboard while en route to Cherbourg. Arthur will be accompanied by a sound cameraman.

Hard Represents NBC at Geneva

Ruth Chatterton Turns Down Paramount Offer Definitely

Ruth Chatterton has definitely decided to reject Paramount's proposals after two weeks of negotiation, and expects Warners to fulfill all the terms of her contract with it, she revealed in an interview with The Hollywood Herald.

The Warner contract, she said, calls for a salary of $675,000 for six pictures to be made in two years, and gives Miss Chatterton unusual privileges in the matter of selection of story, cast, director and other production details. The contract is irrevocable, the star said. Privileges rather than money was the determining factor between the two companies, she declared.

Challenges Gannett Papers On Ad Picture Restrictions

Francis Lawton, Jr., president of General Business Films, Inc., in a letter to the Gannett chain of newspapers, has challenged the opposition of newspapers to advertising films.

The Gannett group was recently reported to have ruled against giving publicity to advertising pictures as well as restricting publicity given to theatres which had the ad reels on their programs.

Joe Leo Planning Circuit Of 40-50 Theatres In New York

Joe Leo is completing plans for entrance into the metropolitan New York exhibitor field, with an objective of 40 to 50 theatres, to be acquired immediately.

No deals have yet been closed, but it is understood negotiations on several are nearing completion. A deal for a number of Fox Long Island houses has failed to materialize.

Tiffany Title Changed

"Murder At Midnight" has been selected as the title for the new Tiffany murder mystery which bore the working title "Monster Kills." Frank Strayer, who directed, also collaborated with W. Scott Darling on the story. The cast includes Aileen Pringle, Hale Hamilton, Alice White, Leslie Fenton, and Kenneth Thomson.

Erle C. Kenton has been assigned the directorial job on Tiffany's "Leftover Ladies," based on an original by Ursula Parrott.

Visugraphic Films "Market"

Operations on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange are now being filmed by Visugraphic Pictures. The pictures, of an educational nature, will be distributed by the company throughout the country.

W. E. Enlarging Plant

Western Electric is enlarging its insulated wire plant, at Point Breeze, near Maryland, to turn out 1,600,000,000 feet instead of the present 1,000,000,000 feet capacity.

Defers Preferred Dividend

Union Theatres Investments, Ltd., Australia, has deferred the usual semi-annual preferred dividend, which required $70,000 for fulfillment.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Lend Me Your Ears!"

NO matter how dark or dismal the past may have been there is no denying the fact that the coming season shows a decidedly more optimistic trend . . . the product outlook seems to be a darned sight brighter than at time during the past few years . . . business conditions are improving in various parts of the country . . . (pessimists notwithstanding) . . . over-seating of certain localities has dropped due to the closing of unnecessary houses . . . and all along the line we have every indication that with the right kind of push and sensible showmanship, theatre attendance is going to start climbing. . . .

But we must have Confidence . . . that will be the only foundation upon which we can expect to build up business . . . and it must be that kind of Confidence that will dispell the fog of present-day conditions . . . backed up with a dauntless spirit and so emphatic that it will make those disbelievers believe, and make the skeptics reform. . . .

Every showman . . . in the big cities . . . in the smaller towns . . . everywhere . . . must have Confidence in this return of Prosperity . . . think that way . . . act that way . . . impress others with that same thought . . . and . . . don't let anyone talk you out of it. . . .

In response to many requests for an opinion regarding the decentralization plan of Fox eastern theatres, this writer has carefully read the several reports issued by the Fox officials and can briefly sum it up as follows:

The plan will not affect the local theatre manager in any great way. Breaking up of home office departments and centering them in the various divisions is a routine matter involving the purchasing, film buying, accounting and advertising, between the division manager and these different departments.

The house manager will continue to function in the future as in the past . . . he will be accountable to the same district or divisional supervisors . . . there will be no elimination of present detail work or reports . . . though this may come later when the divisional general managers reorganize some of the departments now calling for house reports.

The only bad feature that may come to the surface is the affiliation of stockholders and other financially interested parties who are supposed to act as a board of directors or advisors to the divisional manager . . . these esteemed gentlemen in the past have had the faculty of butting in on the local manager and in many ways making life miserable for him . . . so, we're hoping that Harry Arthur provided for this slant when he worked out the present plan . . . at any rate the idea is worth watching with much interest. . . .

Those many independent theatre owners are beginning to tell how pleased they were with our comments about them a short time ago . . and they are saying it with more of their operation and exploitation methods . . . which is cause of much rejoicing . . . these exhibitors know the business . . . they have to do if they want to stay in the race. . . .

United Artists deserve much credit for their determination to back up every one of their pictures with honest-to-goodness campaigns; not ground out like sausages, but worked out individually by showmen, men who have spent many years in and around theatres, men who understand the conditions and problems surrounding average theatre operation in average cities. . . .

We withheld comment ever since we first heard about the plan, but now we've seen enough at first hand to say that Hal Horne and his army of real showmen are making good their promise of selling campaigns and exploitation that is not ridiculous, but practical. . . . And to further serve the exhibitor, their crew of field men will make it possible, by what they do, not what they say, to put these campaigns over with the aid of the local showmen. . . .

Such cooperation deserves a big hand . . . and we're here to say that we are going to keep an eagle eye on that outfit and especially note the reaction from the field as to the way this idea is going over. . . . Who knows, maybe this will prove the solution to the sensible use of a press, or campaign book. . . . Anyway, we've always maintained that the home offices were sadly in need of more showmen and less yes-men. . . . All those in favor say aye. . . .

Believe it or . . . no . . . but Teddy McDonald of Universal City fame, has come through with a poem telling all about managers who died and went to . . . now where do you suppose managers go when they die? . . . We won't tell you the answer now . . . wait until we get a chance to publish the poem. . . .

Things worth forgetting about . . . standing around the lobby with a black cigar sticking out of your face . . . cracking wise (or smutty) in your newspaper ads . . . criticising a brother manager's methods, when your own might be much better . . . riding your hired help until they're ready to shoot you . . . letting your assistant to do all the responsible work . . . hiding away in your office when you ought to be circulating around the house . . . sending clipped press book reviews to your local paper . . . and sending an usher to the bank with the receipts. . . .

Finger Sitting In For McSweeney While Latter Recuperates

While Dave McSweeney is recuperating from a recent illness which confined him to a hospital for several weeks, Martin Finger is pinch-hitting for him at the Paramount Theatre in Needham, Mass., and has been instrumental in effecting some valuable and interesting tie-ups which can be classified under that current and popular head, "Costless."

When exploiting "Secret Six" he tied with a local hardware concern for the free distribution of 5,000 flyers one week in advance, in the theatre and from door to door. The company also mailed them out to his mailing list and inserted them in all sales. The play in the circular was made on the word "Secret," such as—"You'll Have to See the Secret Six to Find Out About Them—But There's No Secret About the New Atwater Kent Radio, etc., Distributed By," etc. The concern also gave the theatre a set to place in the lobby where it is being used for entertainment.

Three thousand circulars were similarly gotten up and distributed for the theatre on a tie with the Hoover company's local agent and "It's a Wise Child" furnished the inspiration for the catch lines, "Do You Know That the Floor Coverings in the Home Are the Children's Playground? It's a Wise Child and a Healthy Child Whose Home Is Hoover Cleaned," etc. These flyers were also distributed in theatre and from house to house one week in advance of showing. The company also sent its service men to the theatre and overhauled all machines, replacing wornout parts with new ones. And as Martin points out, here's an angle which certainly cannot be overlooked these days.

Perhaps the crowning achievement along the above lines was the first tie-up ever made in his town with the Great A. & P. Tea Co. It took some salesmanship to win over the district and division managers, but they finally came across to the tune of free distribution of 3,000 flyers on "Women of All Nations." The angle of the tie was, "Women of All Nations Use the A. & P. Coffee Service." A section of the lobby was given over for display of the merchandise and samples were handed out.

He suggests that concerns like the A. & P. be contacted for tie-ups such as outlined above and we heartily agree that they can be made valuable allies if the idea is favorably received. These stores are in practically every town of importance and there can be no doubt that the circulation of people in and out of them is very extensive. Thanks for handling this matter for Dave, Martin, and tell him we hope that he will soon be on his feet.

Jonasson Moved Up Opening Day To Get Beach Resort Trade

In order to make a bid for the patronage of week-end and holiday visitors, Robert Jonasson, manager of the Mayfair Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., moved the opening of "Women of All Nations" up one day, giving the first showing on Friday instead of Saturday. He also issued special invitations to the Marine Corps officers and enlisted men stationed at the nearby Lakehurst Naval Air Station to attend a preview at 9 o'clock, resulting in considerable word-of-mouth advertising. As a follow-up stunt the following Monday the same courtesy was extended to the American Legion Fife and Drum Corps, this local unit parading to the theatre.

Another stunt which was the cause of much favorable comment and attention was a tie-up with the local newspaper on a photograph contest over a period of several weeks. The photos are submitted to the newspaper and each week the prize winners are brought to the theatre and placed on an easel in the lobby. The display is so arranged that it can be changed weekly, appearing in the lobby simultaneously with the newspaper announcement.

Jonasson is another one of "Bunny" Bryan's boys down in South Jersey who, like his D. M., is constantly on the job with some stunt to publicize his house and boost patronage and any bid to secure the good will of local organizations is certainly one of the surefire methods tried and proven by many members of this Club.

—— Make This Our Prosperity Season! ——

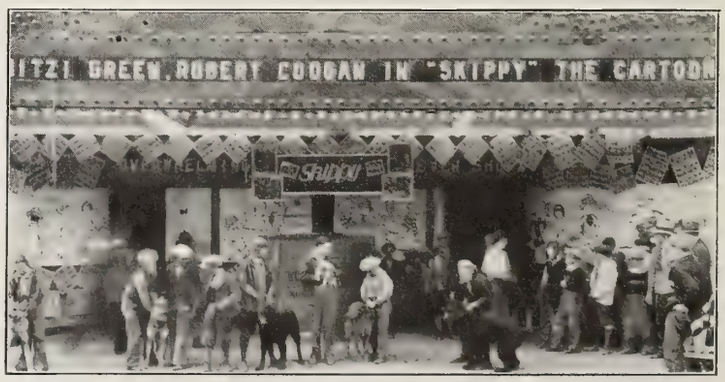
Ben Cohen Is Now Movie Editor For Two Local Papers

In addition to being the busy manager of the Capitol Theatre, Hazelton, Pa., Ben M. Cohen is serving as movie editor for both newspapers in his town. He has been editing a column for one of the papers for some little time and only recently took over the same task for the other one.

Many members of this Club are conducting columns for their local papers and this is something which this department has always been in accord with for the reason that it promotes a friendly spirit between theatre and one of the best allies a house can have. Movie notes have a wealth of reader interest and if a newspaper is not devoting any considerable portion of a page to news of this description, a few words from a theatre manager to the editor on the subject may be productive of a cooperative plan which will be beneficial to all concerned.

However, Ben is doing many other things in addition to conducting columns for newspapers. For instance, as a trade stimulator during the summer the Capitol Stock Company is offering a weekly one-act play, directed by Ben himself, as an added attraction. Then, he has a Capitol Theatre Follies scheduled for the last week in August, all players recruited from local talent and also directed by him. And, of course, he's not overlooking the promotion of trucks and double trucks with merchant and newspaper, at no cost to theatre. But between all these several activities he tries to find the time to keep his brother showmen acquainted with what's going on in his town.

EGAN HOLDS A DOG SHOW!



Pete Egan, of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, Canada, gave the local kids a great opportunity to display their idea of what was best in doggies as a part of a campaign he made on "Skippy." It was a good stunt and not only enlisted interest from the younger element and their parents but received generous mention in the papers. Note the owners and their canine entrants in front.

Bailey's Personal Letter Worked Well With Added Novelty

In order to acquaint patrons with the booking of a novelty attraction he had secured after witnessing same in another city, H. A. Bailey, manager of the Belmont Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., had typed and mailed the following letter:

DEAR FRIEND:

While in San Francisco recently I dropped into one of the theatres there and witnessed what I thought was one of the best entertaining novelties I had ever seen. It was called "Eddie's Adver Show," so I immediately got in touch with the manager and arranged with him to come to Los Angeles and bring his show to the Fox Belmont Theatre.

So, starting Thursday night, July 23, and every Thursday night thereafter, Eddie's Adver Show will appear at the Fox Belmont Theatre. It will afford the whole family a beneficial as well as an amusing time, an evening replete with merriment and surprises is promised those who attend.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) H. A. BAILEY,
Manager Fox Belmont Theatre.

We reprinted the above to bring out the fact that through the sending of this letter Bailey gave this piece of advertising a personal touch by its construction and the signing of his name. We don't know what "Eddie's Adver Show" is all about, for H. A. neglected to impart that information, but believe he will be glad to give more detail if other Club members should so desire.

Many Improvements Made To H. C. Lee's Theatre, Bath, N. Y.

By the time this appears in print we will assume that H. C. Lee, manager of the Babcock Theatre, Bath, N. Y., is taking an immense amount of pride in the fact that his theatre has a new marquee, new lighting and ventilating systems and a number of other modern improvements.

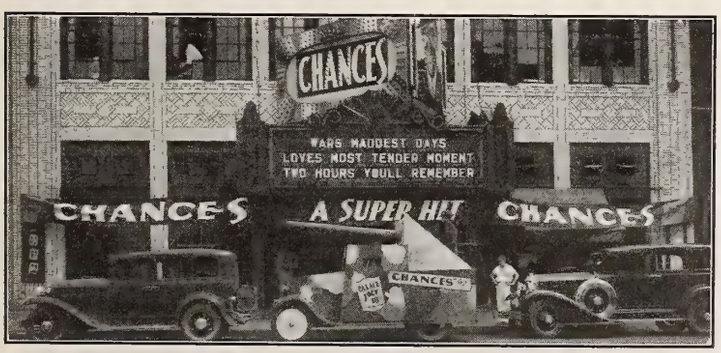
The new marquee was completed in advance of the other improvements and we see by the paper that the American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps paraded and rendered several numbers in front of the theatre for the occasion.

And just to show you all that Lee has been busy selling pictures while all this work was going on, let us state that he got out an attractive green and black herald on "Women of All Nations" and that he's still using those boxed and black-bordered ads, placed consecutively in a single column. These he alternates with larger display ads in order to break up regular run of advertising.

Glad to hear that all the above improvements are in and ready for the new season, for we know that it will be an incentive to step out and work up additional patronage for the prosperous months to come. And what a difference a glittering marquee makes in the appearance of a theatre. Perhaps this move on Lee's part will be a reminder to others that their front is beginning to look dingy and that new paint and lights are needed to spruce it up.

——No Empty Seats This Season!——

SAW GREAT CHANCES FOR "CHANCES"!



And so John Goodno, manager of the Palace Theatre, Huntington, West Va., got busy with a campaign which included the dressing of his theatre front with an immense enlargement of a telegram from Fairbanks, Jr.; a huge cutout of the star atop the marquee; the banner that you see stretched across the entire front; a street bally with auto made over to look like an armored tank, and the distribution of thousands of heralds. Gross on the showings paid a smashing tribute to the effective work done.

Seasholtz Built Up Rural Trade By Use Of A Program Mailer

As a means of building rural patronage and adding substantially to the mailing list, G. Donald Seasholtz, manager of the Capitol and Rosedale Theatres, Chambersburg, Pa., used a mailing card that brought many requests for each week's program. It won't reproduce well, so we'll attempt a description.

By personally calling on each postmaster in rural communities within a radius of 15 miles, he obtained the names and number of box-holders on each R. F. D. route. Regulation one-cent postcards, containing a list of the week's attractions, were then sent out. The card also carried a note that the theatre management would be glad to send the postcard mailer each week if the first card was signed and returned to the box office. As an additional inducement, it was also stated that if a certain mark of identification on the card agreed with a printed bulletin posted each day in the box office, the holder would be entitled to a guest ticket.

Seasholtz recommends use of the above card to bring the rural sections in closer touch with the theatre and the gag worked out so well that he's passing it along. Right now he is busily engaged with further efforts to stimulate summer trade and we'll doubtless hear some more from him in the near future.

SLAM THE DOOR ON DEPRESSION!

Now is the Time For Real Showmen To Prove Their Ability By What They Can Do!

It would seem as though everybody in showbusiness has been enveloped in a sort of fog for the last year or so. This mist has been given several different titles. Some called it depression, others, off-times, and still others, lousy business.

Before we can steer for clearer and more prosperous channels, we must first dispell the mists and let a little sunshine come through. This you can do by starting off with the determination to make this the greatest year in showbusiness.

RESOLUTIONS ARE IN ORDER

If each and every showman were to start off the season with the resolution that THIS is going to be our big year it would probably become just that. Hanging back and casting gloom, not only among your employees, but your theatre as well, will certainly not help business at all.

There is much that can be accomplished at the very start of the season which should help materially in getting things under way. Some of the slants suggested here may just fit your situation like a glove, some may require a little vamping, others may not mean a thing to you. But just the same you owe it to your theatre and to yourself to dig deep into your creative stock and try to dope out something feasible and logical to start the season off with a bang.

PRODUCT ANNOUNCEMENT

A worth-while thought at this particular time would be to make up, in some form or other that fits your own peculiar local conditions, something in the way of an announcement regarding the new product contracted for your theatre.

But frame your announcement so that it will not only attract attention but will be read right through with interest. This can be done in one of several different ways. A neat booklet, starting off with a pledge from the theatre to its patrons to give them the finest in screen entertainment. Build on this theme and lead up to the many outstanding attractions which will be shown early in the season at your theatre.

When discussing some particular pictures, tell them a little about the story, the stars, the director, the company producing it; in other words make your announcement booklet a little fan magazine all by itself. Gossip about filmfolks, as far as their connection with particular pictures being talked about, will always find interest among the movie fans. They love to read about the stars and the studios. This you can give them through the information furnished by the producers and distributors in their regular announcements as carried in past issues of Motion Picture Herald, or via the exchange work sheets, which can be secured for the asking. It is not necessary to divulge the plot of the story, merely tell them enough about the pictures to convince them that you are telling them facts when you say that your theatre will offer the finest pictures made.

Little thumb-nail cuts of the stars will also enhance the appearance of such a booklet. Line cuts or other material available at the exchanges might fit right in with your plans and layouts. Look into this angle, it has been found mighty helpful in the past and is far from an experiment.

If you so desire, one or two ads can help carry the burden of the cost of such a booklet. Wide distribution is essential. Every person in and around your town ought to receive it. The local directory, telephone book, etc., should be brought into use to make this possible.

NEWSPAPER ANNOUNCEMENTS, TOO

We can recall at this moment the story of a theatre in a town of some twenty-five thousand inhabitants, where a remodeled house, about to open, spread some malicious gossip around town that they had bought up practically every outstanding picture for the coming season. This soon brought about a lot of bad rumors affecting the other theatre of the community and they retaliated with a half-page newspaper announcement in which was listed "a few of the pictures contracted for the house.

Needless to say, the original story was spiked and left the other house in a bad light with the townsfolks, especially the merchants who were told the story first. Small towns and communities are quick to pick up gossip, especially about the theatres, and the manager who doped out that half-page announcement made a darned good move.

PEP UP THE COMMUNITY

With the outlook for future business in all lines so much brighter than at any time in the past year or two, you, as one of the representative business men in the town should start the "better times" movement going full force.

Get together with your local Chamber of Commerce, the various clubs composed of business men, and such other organizations as function in the town and might be able to help put the idea over. Start a campaign for "Prosperity Days Are Here." Your newspaper will surely get behind any move of this kind because it will help bring back lineage lost during the quiet months gone by.

A gala affair can be framed with every merchant in town participating. Your theatre is naturally in a fine spot to help put the idea across with great emphasis. Your screen should shout the keynote of "buy now," "great bargains all over town," "put idle money into circulation," etc., etc. Every merchant in on the campaign should likewise stress these slogans in their window displays, newspaper ads, etc.

Good Product is on the Way—Back it Up with Intelligent Seat Selling Stunts!

Any live showman will be quick to grasp the possibilities of such a move because it means direct returns to him and his theatre. If the public can be sold on the idea they will soon take a brighter slant at things in general. But one thing is certain; it can certainly do no harm anywhere along the line. Think this over.

PUT YOUR HOUSE IN ORDER

In all of your preparations for a smashing fine season do not overlook the fact that your theatre must be treated like something better than a step-child. There is not much sense in shouting prosperity and better times unless your theatre reflects just such an appearance.

It must be bright, inviting, comfortable, radiating a feeling of goodwill towards those who patronize it. The front ought to be the "bright spot" of the community. The signs and displays should be of such a calibre so as to build up interest in what they were made for.

The projection and sound should be the last word in their respective fields. Economy in these two departments means "cheating" on the perfect presentation of your shows and will hurt you far more than mere words can describe.

Those of your staff who must come in contact with the public should be drilled in the manner of greeting and making the patron feel at home while they are in the theatre. Stiff and starched ushers and doormen breed coldness and aloftness. Don't permit it in your house. A smile will help a poor show many a time and will send them home feeling that, at least, they were well treated while at the theatre.

ABOUT YOUR SHOWS

Every change of bill can hardly be an "outstanding" show. If you were ever to try and sell such an idea to your customers it would be a case of crying wolf too often. When it is really so they won't believe you.

But great care and judgment can be used in booking your show so that a poor feature can be surrounded with fine enough short subjects to more than make up for the entertainment lacking in the main picture. Never before in the history of the industry have there been as many series of fine shorts as there are today.

Don't close your eyes on ideas used by others. If you insist on doing only new and original stunts to stimulate business; God help your business. But revamping some of the other fellow's activities to suit your own individual situation is just as good, and perhaps better, than making them up yourself. You, at least, get the benefit of their experiences and a chance to cash in on tried and proven campaigns. No experimenting, no taking chances, and no growing stale while waiting for that new and novel idea to present itself.

Be sure that your newspaper advertising is getting you the most for your money. Excellent results can come of sensible use of your local papers. Try to avoid jamming up your copy. White space makes type and cut material stand out all the more.

If you have the advantage of a daily paper, concentrate on your current show. Crowding one or more coming attractions into an ad will leave a confusing impression without selling any one of the group you are buying the space for.

THIS IS OUR PROSPERITY SEASON!

Diversified Activity In Every Theatre Is Bound to Result in Box Office Reaction!

If sound ever accomplished anything in the way of improving the screen presentations, it certainly manifested itself in the short subject.

Extreme care should be exercised when surrounding a feature to have every possible variety of entertainment. An interesting travelogue; one of those side-splitting cartoon reels; possibly a song cartoon; a good two-reel comedy; musical numbers, etc. They are all available to you, make good use of them.

SPECIALTY WEEKS

Another way of holding patron-interest when campaign after campaign on outstanding pictures has grown stale, is to create some sort of specialty week. A Blue Ribbon Week. An Old Home Week. A Comedy Week. These are just suggestions, perhaps you can work one out with better angles and more apt to produce the desired results. Great. Go to it.

Revival nights, revival weeks, etc., are also worthwhile experiments if you have never tried them before. Presentation of good foreign subjects may also solve the problem of those one or two off-nights. After all, we must play around a bit with these things until we learn what is best for our theatres and communities.

Selecting certain pictures for a midnight premiere may send out the preview audience broadcasting the merits of your show. Word-of-mouth advertising is great stuff for the box office.

INVITATION SHOWS

Certain pictures lend themselves admirably to invitation showings. "Disraeli" was one, the coming "Alexander Hamilton" is another, and no doubt there are many others. The angle here is to invite that class of outstanding people in the community to witness a private showing of the picture at some time convenient and in advance of the opening date and let them write their reactions and opinions on forms furnished to them for the purpose.

These expressions can be incorporated in your newspaper campaign or used to good advantage for a broadside throwaway to be distributed by hand from house to house or through the mails. Besides, if those at the invitation showing are educators they may feel justified in making the picture the subject of a talk at school assembly or chapel.

Cooperative tie-ups involving merchants or local organizations are worth-while for any theatre, BUT be sure that you are getting the proper breaks for your house.

If you are behind the idea, the theatre ought to get their share of the space or publicity without any cost whatsoever. "Selling" the paper and the merchants a cooperative idea and then spending a pile of money on it yourself is hardly profitable. And then again, it gives the newspaper advertising manager funny ideas about charging the theatre for such space. Get yourself set in the preliminary arrangements and avoid arguments later on.

To make this a great year you must tackle it the right way. Just talking about it won't get you to first base.

If your house has been in a slump, it stands to reason that radical changes are in order. Changes involving your operation methods, publicity, advertising, exploitation and, perhaps, even your house staff.

Your community will have to be educated all over again to develop the theatre-going habit. This you can successfully accomplish by means of intelligent activity aimed in that direction.

These slants open up so many avenues to added interest-building in your theatre and its attractions that some method along these lines should certainly be worked out.

INSTITUTIONAL ADVERTISING

Here is one part of a theatre's advertising which is overlooked by thousands of theatres all over the country. Telling the patrons something about the theatre they are patronizing.

There is much of real interest in your house that lends itself to such institutional advertising, via the newspapers, your programs, the screen and the lobby. Give it more than a passing thought.

Suppose you work out your budget on newspaper advertising so that it leaves you a two-column by five or six inches once a week when you can carry an ad telling about your theatre and leaving the attractions for the regular ads? Don't you think this would help build up interest in the house?

In warm weather you could stress the efficiency of your cooling plant, during the regular season you can talk about your heating plant; about the fine projection and sound; tell them about the keen desire of your ushers to render extra service to your patrons; let them know that you are anxious for suggestions to improve your shows and the operation of your theatre.

Trailers along this same line, but not overdone, will assist materially in getting this institutional idea across. Or possibly you may want them to know that your theatre will gladly co-operate on the staging of local dramatic club presentations, or help them raise money via a benefit at the theatre.

Your newspaper, your screen, your program, your lobby, etc., etc. You have many valuable weapons to work with. Use them.

EXPLOITATION AND BALLYHOO

These two angles have always been associated with theatre operation and, especially in the smaller communities and cities, have reacted favorably for the house.

However, the two words have been much abused in recent months and great care should be exercised in the selection of the exploitation or ballyhoo to be used for your house.

It need not lower the standard or dignity of the theatre in any way if you work out your ideas on what type of signs and displays a the-this respect these two angles are no different than the signs or displays you use in front of your theatre. You make them up to meet your ideas on what kind of signs and displays a theatre of your kind should go in for. That is exactly what you should do when working out anything in the line of exploitation or ballyhoo.

Showmanship Will Prove Determining Factor in the Success Of Your Efforts!

Many a picture lends itself to some particular form of such activity. It builds up interest, attracts attention, starts the patrons talking, and never can do you the slightest bit of harm providing you exercise judgment in the selection of the stunt you are going to put across.

What is perfect for one type of theatre may be thumbs down for another. What brings in money for one class of theatre may chase it away from another. And vice versa. But no one can tell you what's right or what is wrong. That's why you're the manager. You must be the last word in what goes on in or out of your theatre. Work these things out to suit your local conditions and the type of theatre you are running and you will soon strike the happy medium of what is best.

NOW IT'S UP TO YOU

We've attempted to pep you up so that you can start off this new season with a "bang." We have tried to point out some ways to do so, but after all is said on the subject, we have wasted both time and space if these suggestions are greeted with a mind, already made up, that "nothing can be done."

If that's your frame of mind, we're sorry we said anything at all. Because what your theatre needs more than anything else, is a manager, a showman, someone capable of grasping the helm of the boat and steering it into prosperous channels.

But, on the other hand, if you have been riding along in a rut, a rut created by reason of past conditions, and these suggestions have helped you out and onto smoother roads, then we are tickled pink. We'll be happy and you will have ample cause to rejoice, because the truth will show itself in the form of brisk business and better times for the new season.

This cry for "bring better times" may have been aired before, in fact we recall hearing it ourselves, but the question is; are we going to make it a fact instead of a fancy?

Here is a glorious chance for many showmen to prove their claim to that title. Show-business needs men of guts for big jobs. You may be the man they are looking for. Prove it by what you do, not by what you say.

LET'S ALL PULL TOGETHER TO MAKE THIS THE GREATEST YEAR IN SHOW-BUSINESS!

One point regarding trailers which we would like to get across and, this is from actual experience, is to be extremely careful not to give them too many trailers at any one time. On coming attractions, no more than two or three (for the ordinary three to four change houses) ought to be shown.

Institutional trailers can sell your local benefit idea, theatre parties, etc. They can also emphasize your theatre's many service features, such as the lounge rooms, the mailing list, cooling and heating plants, and so on. Use them, but, use them with discretion.

ASSISTANTS ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THIS CLUB!

With the approval of the house manager, assistant managers are eligible for membership.

We started taking assistants into the Club about a year ago and subsequent surveys have proven that it provides the necessary "push" to make them real showmen. It increases their interest in the business and makes them try all the harder to gain promotion. For the six months period, ending June 30th of this year, Club records show that over three hundred assistant managers were promoted to handle their own houses.

Only accredited assistants are accepted. Those not rating this title should not apply as their managers will be asked to certify to the position they now hold.

The Round Table Club will welcome members in this class and we urge every bonafide assistant manager to send in the application now.

Town's First Stage Wedding Smash Hit For "Bill" Preston

Among the returns from stage weddings come to our notice is one pulled off by Bill Preston, manager of the Merchant Theatre, Quincy, Mass. In this case it was the first event of this kind that was ever staged in this city and the press and public literally ate it up.

He arranged a tie-up between the newspaper and local merchants that resulted in a double truck, the entire cost of the theatre's part amounting to only $7.50. He let the paper "scoop" the story and it came through in a big way. The house only seats between 700 and 800 and the stunt played to 2,000 admissions; 5,000 natives blocked the street from sidewalk to sidewalk for two blocks and the cops had to turn them away.

One of the most enthusiastic merchants in the tie-up was a jewelry concern which has national representation. It is Bill's suggestion that if any Club member is interested in contacting this firm a line to him will bring the desired information. Even if the stunt is not pulled off this season, the store-management can be contacted for the future, and on behalf of all Round Tablers we want to thank him for passing along the idea.

Whatley Promoted; Captures Attention With Wild Man Stunt

The last time we heard from D. N. Whatley he was the assistant manager of the Capitol Theatre in Shreveport, La., but since then he won a promotion and his present title is manager of the Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas.

One of the first stunts he put over at the Lyric was a campaign that netted fine business on "Trader Horn." For jungle atmosphere he secured a lot of the native Spanish moss that is so plentiful in certain sections of the South and hung it in profusion across the theatre front and in the lobby. For a bally he hired the services of a local colored man, put him in a cage and passed him off as a wild man of the jungle. The negro wore nothing but a pair of trunks and to add to the effect made a gutteral noise and beat on a tom-tom.

Additional advertising included the distribution of 1,000 stickers in homes and rural mail boxes; 1,000 heralds in the same locations; and 100 window cards and a raft of one-sheets.

In spite of the very hot weather Whatley states that business was great and that his "wild man" attracted more attention than any stunt he ever pulled. So if you have not played "Trader" and can get your wild man, go right to it if you think your community would like the idea that your fellow Club member is passing along. We also add congratulations regarding his promotion to the post of manager.

Newspaper Donated Valuable Space To Laby's Golf Shorts

A number of fine publicity breaks were accorded George Laby, manager of the Washington St. Olympic Theatre, Boston, Mass., during the showings of the Bobby Jones series of golf shorts, in addition to receiving gratis a 400-line ad from an exclusive Brookline newspaper.

We note that one of the leading Boston papers has come around to publishing the starting time of features in tabular form and George also convinced the editor that the Jones shorts were important enough to be included. So instead of the usual two or three lines allotted other houses in the table, the Olympia received six lines; or as Laby figures at 60 cents per line, an equivalent of $12.60 per week, or a total of $151.20 on the three extra lines during the run of the shorts. This was, of course, in addition to regular run of stories that broke on both sporting and amusement pages.

He also managed to obtain 250 street car dashers gratis for three days, Boston cars traveling from the various suburbs into the heart of the city. And last but not least, live wire usher Stanley Rudnick succeeded in placing over 200 especially designed 14 x 22 cards in every section of the city, including boards of legit houses that were closed.

That's great George! However, we've one criticism to offer—you neglected to state just how that gratis ad of 400 lines was pried from that exclusive newspaper, and why. Nor do you explain why the street car outfit let you use their equipment for a three-day ad campaign without kicking in. But maybe you'll let us know next time you write—and in the meantime, keep up the good work. And by the way, the timetable gag is a reminder to others that insertion of same may be accomplished by making a call on the managing editor.

Bloomberg's Truck Bally Is Yielding Results At No Cost

A truck ballyhoo, promoted from a local dealer, is being used to boost an August "Jubilee" month campaign by P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Salem, Mass., and we are publishing a photo of it so you can see how the sign artist dressed up the sides. The display was made so as to allow an easy change of copy, without actually changing the display itself. Use of the truck was granted periodically over the period of a month and you will note that the theatre certainly captured a generous portion of the space.

He also managed to promote a loudspeaker system by agreeing to replace some wornout B batteries. With this added equipment phonograph records were played and verbal announcements made during tours through the summer resorts and congested districts of Salem and nearby towns.

A truck is a handy article to have at one's disposal, as Broomberg recently demonstrated when ballyhooing "Women of All Nations" with a bevy of girls dressed in national costumes. We gather this one was promoted from the same dealer. Since he has found this bally so successful he's passing along the suggestion that other members contact local truck dealers with a view toward making a tie-up which will be beneficial to all concerned.

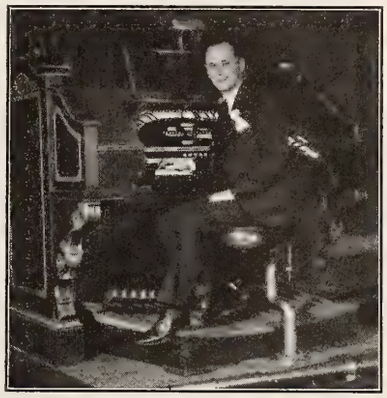
Fred Johnson Made Theatre Side Wall A City Attraction

There's many a homely looking brick side wall of a theatre which could be transformed into something pleasing to look at, at the same time securing additional advertising and good will for a theatre, if one were to carry out an idea of Fred Johnson's, manager of the Latonia Theatre, Oil City, Pa.

Adjacent to his theatre is a plot known as Monument Plaza, on which are several relics of the late war. The monument, cannon, etc., are surrounded by a number of well-kept flower beds. The whole length of the theatre, about 175 feet, runs parallel with this park, and in order to remedy the jarring note caused by the side wall, he engaged the services of the city horticulturist to build rock gardens and more flower beds along the entire depth of the house.



Jack Wolcott

Another local enterprise sponsored by the Latonia and the community business men's association is a ball team, uniforms for the players donated by 15 of the merchants and the theatre. For its share of the expense the theatre was granted the privilege of naming the team "Latonia." As the aggregation belongs to the city league, composed of eight teams, it will be seen that the theatre's name receives extensive publicity throughout the city during the baseball season.

An organist and his organ also plays an important part in entertaining his public, so we are going to say a few words for Jack Wolcott, the man who is responsible for this end of the program. Jack has been with the Latonia ever since the house opened in 1928 and started playing the organ when he was 12 years of age. He's now in his third year at this theatre and has firmly established himself in the hearts of its patrons. One important thing he has found out is that it doesn't pay to exert too much pressure getting an audience to sing. He thinks they have to be in the proper mood for this sort of thing and therefore closely watches for contrary reactions. However, the kiddies like to test their voices and they do it at every Saturday matinee. One number which has received a great many requests is Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue," and he's used this three times in the past two years. Local vocalists and musicians are also encouraged to assist during the organ's time on the program and this stunt has scored a hit with audiences. It is interesting to note that the Latonia is the only theatre in this section of Pennsylvania using an organist at the present time.

Fred Johnson is always doing something interesting down in his neck of the woods and it's likewise a pleasure to record some of his activities. He's a great believer in the constant creation of good will for the theatre, as you will note by the flower bed and baseball stunts. He is, of course, fortunate in having the services of such a versatile organist as Wolcott; but may we also point out that he took advantage of the fact that no other house was playing up this end of the program. If a house can afford the services of one, many showmen are of the opinion that this one-time popular instrument is again in the ascendancy and can be made to pay.

ABOUT REVIVAL NIGHTS!

While there still remains some difference of opinion regarding the revival night for former big pictures, the weight seems to be with those voting favorably.

Many outstanding productions have been released in the past 12 months or so that would find your patrons in a mood to see again. Other houses have tried the experiment with all kinds of success. Some even claim it brought sell-out business on these revival nights.

In justice to the idea and your theatre, you should at least give this angle some serious consideration and be guided according to your best judgment. Try one or two and get your audience reaction. If it clicks, there is no reason why you cannot designate one night a week as revival night and play it up strong.

Of course, the majority using these reissues make them an added feature of their regular programs. We would hesitate to advise any one to make a revival the lone attraction for any house. But here again, the manager is the best judge.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

At the age of twenty years, J. Warren Sever is not only managing the Hamptonian Theatre, New Hampton, Mass., but is devoting his spare time to a course in a local preparatory school in an effort to improve his future in show business.

J. Warren Sever

But now to tell you a word or two about what one of the youngest managers in the New England states did prior to taking over the above named theatre.

He started his theatre career in stock as a child player, switching from the footlights to the intricacies of stage lighting and later taking up the design of scenery. Then he tried Columbia Burlesque for awhile, leaving that for a fling at the projection end of the game. By this time, having a fair knowledge of several departments of the theatre, he decided that in order to attain the goal he'd set for himself, more education was in order. And that's why he is where he is right now—managing a motion picture theatre and making it pay his way through college.

When Sever took over the Hamptonian he tells us the house was on the "rocks"; however, he went to work, cleaned it up and has made it pay by giving SERVICE—which, in his estimation means a whole lot in theatre management.

He states that he would rather remain a porter in a theatre than ever go into any other game and with that remark we'll gamble on his success.

Kite Kontest Used By Dennis Scaling Made Hit With Kids

Some of you Club members might want to try a stunt which stirred up a lot of interest among the younger element in Enid, Okla., where Dennis Scaling manages the Criterion Theatre, so we'll present the Scaling Kite Contest:

Application blanks, obtainable at the box office after being properly filled out, were turned over to Boy Scout headquarters. Only boys under 18 years of age, with exception of registered active Scouts, even though they were over 18, were allowed to enter the contest.

It was stated that kites must be made by the boy entering, but that he might council with others over plan of construction. Seven events were listed, with two prizes offered for each event.

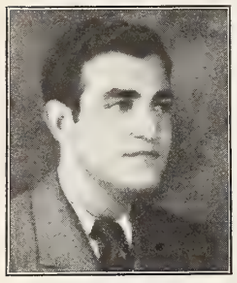
The first event was an "Endurance Flight," the kite flying continuously day and night. The one remaining aloft the longest time won. The second was "Novelty Flying," points being design, originality, flight, with color and unusual trimmings, also considered. The third was for "Altitude" and the fourth for "Distance," and the fifth for the "Smallest kite" of any type. The latter had to fly for at least three minutes from a stationary point. The sixth event was for the "Largest Kite," size determined by square inches of paper surface. Five minutes of flying was required. The seventh was the grand finale of a "Dog Fight," an aerial battle in which the kite bringing down the most "enemies" and still remained aloft won. Contestants drew for positions.

Another stunt he recently pulled was directed at still a younger element than kite flyers. As a good-will act he staged a benefit to provide milk and ice for needy babies, turning over the theatre to the Milk Fund committee. A film was obtained free of charge and the entire theatre personnel and many talented local people donated their services. The show took place at 11 o'clock Saturday night immediately following the regular show. Both newspapers cooperated with newsy stories two weeks in advance, nine of them making the front page.

The kite contest of yours certainly was a corking means of waking up a lot of interest from both kid and adult sources, Dennis, and the Club wants to thank you for sending it along; and we're going to take it for granted that the good-will stunt earned a lot of valuable publicity for your theatre. Citizens will surely remember you next time they want to raise funds to carry out new plans. Keep up the excellent work and don't forget to let your brother showmen in on it.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES!

The medical profession may have lost a valued member when Robert Martin Weitman came to the conclusion that show business held a tremendous future in store for him, for prior to facing this decision he was a student at the Cornell Medical School, Cornell University. However, we can still classify him as a doctor—a doctor of happiness for he's keeping people in good health by furnishing them with a good grade of amusement at the Paramount Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.



R. M. Weitman

He's the managing director of the Paramount but began his theatre career by attending the Publix Managers' Training School, later being assigned to the New York Rialto. When the Brooklyn Paramount was opened he had charge of that important affair and was then assigned to the post of City Manager, which he held up until the appointment to his present position.

Many members of this Club will be interested to learn how Weitman handles this big Publix house. The competitive situation is exceptionally keen in his section of the city and therefore productive of keen ideas about selling shows. If he can spare the time we feel sure that he will prepare a little story which will tell us all about methods used to keep his business up to par.

Walter Tooley And Gang Are Breaking Red Bluff Records

Walt Tooley and his staff of the State Theatre, Red Bluff, Calif., are always up to something interesting in the show-selling line, and while this city only boasts a population of 3,600 it is the gateway to the Mt. Lassen Volcanic National Park and sees considerable transient traffic. Another point of interest concerning Red Bluff is that Walt has the choice of 14 churches. Now for what he's been doing since we last heard. We understanding some house records have been smashed to smithereens.

Some one is always asking how to rig up a model dirigible atop a theatre or marquee sign and his plan of construction for one built for "Hell's Angels" seems a good one to file away. Round discs were first cut for the form and over these were placed light strips of lumber. A pipe line was then run through the middle to keep the form rigid. For the covering, canvas was stretched over the frame and then painted. The accompanying photo will show how the balloon was attached to the top of the sign and anchored to a building across the street. At night two flood lights were played on it and the display was very attractive. The entire length overall was 22 feet.

The "Big Trail" set was placed in the foyer 15 days before playdate and with a spot playing on it attracted a great deal of attention. The background was painted by a local artist and this was placed on a long table covered with sand. The wagons were regular exchange issue, with wheels stiffened to make them stand. Oxen and men were cut from compo board and then painted. A black cloth was hung in front with the lettering and date. Along with the effort made this picture broke the house record previously held by "Gold Diggers."

Tooley's striking lobby display set for "Big Trail"

When playing "Big House" a set of canvas was stretched on wood frames, and, as illustrated here, covered the entrance to the lobby. The local painter was responsible for both rock appearance and lettering. From the sheriff's office was secured a lot of "wanted" circulars and finger-print cards and these were mounted on the wall board around the tack card. As additional atmosphere one week in advance the ushers were dressed in real convict suits, also obtained from the sheriff. Each usher had a number and on their backs carried title and playdate of picture. This one broke the one-day record (Sunday) and missed the two-day record by a few dollars.

Well, there's a couple of records for other members to shoot at, providing these pictures have not been played off; or, it is possible that the above stunts may furnish ideas for some other show. Tooley has several other gags in line and we will hope to hear about them soon. We see by the papers that July heat broke some other records out his way—average temperature 104 over the month; so Club members will get an idea of what kind of a town this Red Bluff is. Nothing much on us over this way, Walt. You could have fried eggs on the pavement down in Times Square most any day this season.

A Special Preview Yielded Excellent Results For Ackery

A special preview held for certain people whom he considered sources for good publicity turned out to be an excellent plug for "Father's Son" when this picture was played by I. Ackery, manager of the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver.

With the start of his newspaper campaign he issued invitations to newspaper reviewers, members of the Kiwanis Club and leaders of the Boy Scout troops in the city to attend a special showing, and the boost given the picture by these people was nicely reflected at the box office.

Window cards and heralds were also used in his campaign, but his faith in this particular picture proved the best drawing card. He sold it to a few and they, in turn, got behind it. The preview also had the additional value of bringing in some people who had been absenting themselves from the theatre for some time. The special invitation brought them back.

WELCOME BACK "TIM"!

After a long rest, due to the unfortunate fire which destroyed the well-known Madison Theatre in Mansfield, Ohio, "Tim" Roberts, one of the best known showmen in the mid-west returns to the active field with the reopening of the newly built Madison early in September.

It would be a tough job to try and list the many friends of "Tim" whom we know join us in extending to him every good wish for a success he so well deserves by reason of his marvelous showmanship and clean fighting spirit.

We can well remember the summer of 1928 when we stepped up to his office in the old Madison and asked to speak to the manager. We were told, politely, but firmly, that they needed no disinfectant or toilet paper, had a good supply of janitor's supplies and were were not interested in promotion schemes. After all these facts were made known to us we told the speaker of the moment that we had nothing to sell but happened to be just an exhibitor touring through Ohio.

What a glad hand we got from "Tim"! And that's not all. We spent the following two days with him, and about a hundred other great exhibitors, up at Cedar Point, outside of Sandusky, where the now almost extinct organization of Gus Sun Managers were conventioning.

Do you recall those visits in the different hotel rooms, Tim? And the night we spent with good friend Sennett of Tiffiny, trying to sleep and entertain at the same time? Who can forget that party? Wuz sure tough that "sqweekies" had to come along and break up the annual meeting of that outfit. Maybe they'll get together once more and you can bet your bottom dollar that "Tim" and "Chick" will be there, too.

I'm pulling for you "Tim" and I know you'll make more theatrical history for Mansfield when you get moving again.

Phillip Engel Going Great With His New Job Over In Jersey

The effects of a promotion are being demonstrated at the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., a house managed by Phillip Engel. Prior to taking over the reins of this house he was the assistant manager, and now that the title of Boss has been bestowed upon him, he's stepping along at even a faster rate.

During the showing of "Dance, Fools, Dance," he secured a tie-up with the city's largest department store which netted him a front-window display of perfume endorsed by Joan Crawford, dominated by stills and tie-up copy. In addition, the store ran a three-column by eight-inch ad, illustrated with a large cut of the star and mentioning that the picture was at the Strand. Copy also called attention that lady theatre patrons might receive a certificate entitling them to generous samples upon presentation of same at store.

When playing "Front Page" he prepared a novel lobby display at practically no cost which undoubtedly helped sell tickets. Old compo board was used for the background, on which was pasted sheets torn from old tabloids and front pages from old New York newspapers. The artists then lettered the title across these pages in bold type, 11 by 14, still were also spotted over the described background. A large display was built around the box office, leaving only the window open for sale of tickets. Special invitations were also issued to newspaper men to gain their good will.

Not long ago we mentioned that Engel's Kiddie Klub had been started at the Strand and we are glad to inform his brother members that it is coming along in great shape. One of his first moves was to take down names of every youngster who attended the theatre, explaining to them the policy of the organization and immediate results were noticed during the showing of "Young Donovan's Kid," more than 150 kids attending and breaking the house record for kid admissions. This week was called "Big Brother Week" and letters were mailed to heads of schools, churches, Boy Scouts, local institutions and organizations and leading merchants, stating that any member would be permitted to bring along one youngster as a guest of the theatre.

Engel has only been at the Strand for a few months, but he's going along at a rapid rate and his able efforts are already being reflected at the box office. We'll be interested to hear how the Kid Club develops and hope he will keep this Club posted on this and other stunts.

Coppock Pulled A Neat Little Stunt On Recent Feature

To further cement his good standing with the local newspaper, E. S. C. Coppock, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Staten Island, N. Y., recently pulled off a neat little stunt on "Front Page" that made all the newspaper boys, including the circulation manager, wear a broad smile.

A Brenkert effect slide was made to represent the front page of the Staten Island newspaper, cost of same being paid for by the paper. The slide was then used as a background for the presentation of the feature picture.

The above appears to us a corking move on the part of Coppock to further the good will existing between him and the newspaper management and it's just another example of what this manager is doing for the Paramount Theatre. It furnished an ideal setting and certainly no one could accuse the theatre of resorting to out-and-out advertising on account of the nature of the picture. We've published a lot of interesting yarns about what this man has done and if we can keep up with him you may expect to hear some more in future issues.

Merchants Tie With Buchanan To Stage A Theatre Wedding

With the cooperation of the evening newspaper, H. C. Buchanan, manager of the Palace Theatre, Superior, Wis., recently pulled off a stage wedding that resulted in a whale of a lot of publicity for his theatre.

About 35 merchants tied-up with the stunt, donating to the bridegroom and bride wedding presents ranging from a diamond ring to permanent wave. The day before the event they also took space in the paper for congratulatory ads which filled three full pages. Pictures of the couple taken while on their shopping tours were run in advance of the ceremony.

Summing up the whole procedure from a box-office standpoint, the affair was a pronounced success, so much so that Buchanan has the same stunt scheduled for the first week in June next year. His audience got a big kick out of witnessing the staged ceremony and much favorable comment was heard. The newspaper helped him locate the couple and in return reaped a profitable harvest of ads from the merchants who tied in with the idea. As he admits, it's an old stunt, but if not overdone is one which always returns a lot of newspaper publicity and materially helps box-office receipts. True, it's a little late for a regular June affair, but then these things are apt to happen most any time of the year. The chief obstacle is locating a couple who will go through with the scheme. In this instance his newspaper furnished the necessary cooperation.

LEVEY GOES VACATIONING!

This picture, gentle readers (and unfortunates who didn't rate—or get—vacations), will serve to show you how Bill Levey of the Century-Beacon Theatre of Port Washington, N. Y., spent a large slice of his vacation.

He, and a friend, wended (we have a better word for it) their way down to Atlantic City and walked the board-walk until, as we've been told, they were most blue in the face.

When their leave was over, and they were just about exhausted, they came back home and to work where they had a nice chance of resting up.

Of course, being theatremen, they probably spent oodles of time walking in and out off theatres. But that merely added to the exercises and put the finishing touches to their parade activities.

They are now resting up for the next fifty weeks and should be in good health again by the time vacationing is again in order next year. Ah, well. It's good they get so much time (?) to rest up between vacations.

YOUR ENTERTAINING ATMOSPHERE!

You Have Something to Sell, Besides Pictures!

By BERNARD BUCHANAN
Colonial Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.

We rather like the sentiment expressed in this timely article from Manager Buchanan, so we pass it along to our many other members and readers.

It's application, together with those other essentials of theatre-operation, is certainly important and if more attention were paid to these small details, business might be better by reason of it.

We are constantly on the lookout for articles of this nature because it deals with "operation" and so we want to assure others that if they want to pass along some much needed suggestions, they will be welcomed with open arms.

You have painted up your marquee, overhauled your illumination effects, renovated your showcases, redecorated your interior, added new attractive settings, made improvements to your projection room, and cleaned your screen; all this to the tune of many dollars, the usual annual expenditure, written down as, "Summer housecleaning and decorating expenses."

Your theatre exterior bright with new paint, and the flash of new illumination effects, is inviting; your interior, clean, fresh and comfortable, is appealing; guaranteeing approval, from the most critical of patrons, and why not; artists in their line of work, have been busy, and they have done a good job, you have seen to that; and your house check book indicates that you were satisfied for services rendered.

Now you await the "Advent," of the theatrical season, but why wait and do nothing else? True your theatre is in all respects ready for "Big Business," that is, the building itself.

What Is It?

What have you done to improve your "Entertaining Atmosphere," and by the way, what is this "Entertaining Atmosphere"? So little seems to be said about it, it is never visible, but manifests itself in individual feeling, appeal and satisfaction; that is, if it is there, an unseen, unheard, yet omnipotent essential, for the welfare of your theatre, and a factor to be reckoned with, in the accumulation of your "Box Office" receipts. Again I say, What this integral part of the theatre, I call "The Entertaining Atmosphere"?

The answer is simple, it is the predominating feeling that makes the patron feel that he or she is welcome; that they are there to be entertained, and that no effort has been spared to make their entertainment an enjoyable one. Remember, entertaining does not begin and end with the feature on the screen, or the stage presentation; if the mind of the patron is otherwise occupied, they will not be entertained, to their satisfaction, no matter how unusual the program is.

Therefore, an established desire for entertainment, and that alone, must be created in their minds, the moment they enter the theatre, and so strongly entrenched there, that they will be reluctant to leave and always certain to come back.

In order to secure this desirable condition and develop it, to its highest intensity, requires considerable thinking, and unceasing study, on the part of the manager, of those that patronize his theatre. He must get educated to their ideals and principles, their likes and dislikes, and having ascertained this, set to work to adjust his theatre and its personnel to meet these requirements accordingly, not omitting himself. None of us are infallible, and it is possible that he himself may be at fault, a little indifference on his part may subsequently mean an undesirable "Entertaining Atmosphere." It may be humiliating, but everybody makes individual mistakes, and such errors are easily corrected and remedied, and he will soon see the wisdom of a "Condescending Attitude."

Are You Offering That Invisible Service As Well?

After he has reviewed himself, he should review his staff, from the assistant manager down to the maids, drilling and instructing them to meet the requirements, he is sure his patrons will expect. Such employees who fail to meet such requirements, must be eliminated. The public has no consideration for those that serve them, that cannot measure up to their standards, and if he still persists in having employees in the theatre that offend, there will be something amiss in the "Entertaining Atmosphere" and the theatre will be the subsequent sufferer.

Do It Now!

Now is the time to bring the personnel of the theatre up to a standard of efficiency, whereby they can establish an "ENTERTAINING ATMOSPHERE," THAT IS CRITIC PROOF, AND BEYOND REPROACH; ONE THAT IS INVITING AND APPEALING, THAT WILL MAKE THE PATRONS FEEL THAT THEY ARE WELCOME, AND ARE BEING SHOWN EVERY CONSIDERATION.

You have done everything else to make the theatre attractive, and it has cost money; now complete the job, by doing the most important thing of all, yet that which will not cost you a cent; on the contrary, may, if successfully executed, increase your "Box Office" revenue, bringing in a substantial increase that may more than pay for the expenses incurred in redecorating the building.

Rouda Now Selling Shows At Maryland; Is After Kid Trade

We haven't had a line on the work of H. M. Rouda since he was manager of the Lane Court Theatre, but some information at hand discloses that he's very much alive and on the job—this time at the Maryland Theatre, Chicago, where he has been putting over some worth-while stunts.

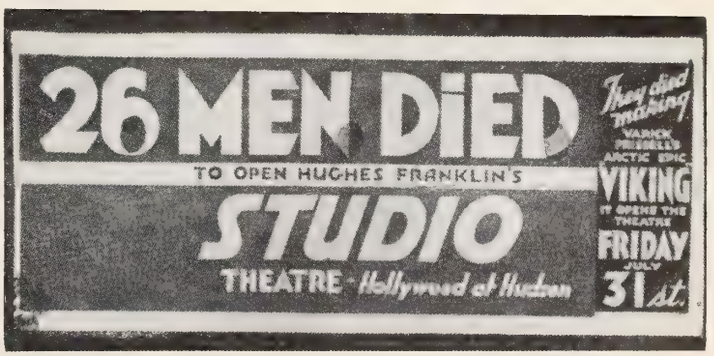
One of the first things he did at the Maryland was to make a drive for more Kiddie business. The kids had already been sold on "Skippy" in a large way, so he organized a Skippy Club, outlining the by-laws on a special herald. This was extensively distributed all through the community. Membership buttons were given to applicants and the herald stated that members would be admitted free on birthdays.

It was also announced that during the month of August a big picnic would be held, with such interesting trimmings as ice cream, candies, games and other surprises dear to youngsters' hearts. There followed rules governing the kids' actions in the theatre. misbehaviors such as hair-pulling, whistling, loud-talking and waltzing up and down the aisles calling for immediate suspension. It was further pointed out that in order to be a good Skippy, obedience, application to studies and Sunday school, truthfulness and cleanliness were all to be considered in the matter of ratings.

A special mimeographed letter is mailed regularly to the members of the club to inform them as to coming attractions at their matinees. Whenever a picture cast contains the names of players familiar to the youngsters, this fact is made known along with other selling copy. For further appeal, the mimeograph carries a background cut of a wild horse, a little gag calculated to catch the kid's eye, and from our observations, it does the trick.

It's good to hear that Rouda is going along so nicely in his new theatre and we don't blame him for going after that kiddie trade. From our observations it not only builds to future patronage, but adds a substantial amount to earnings through increase of patronage from both youngster and adult. Anyway, most every manager has his head turned in this direction these days and there must be some good reason for so doing.

JEFF LAZARUS' SMASH 24 SHEET!



Here is the twenty-four sheet which had Los Angeles and the whole Pacific Coast talking. It was part of Jeff's campaign to give the Hughes-Franklin Studio Theatre something different for an opening. Of course we should add that the 26 men who died to open the Studio Theatre were part of the expedition making the picture, "The Viking." But, who cares about that, the important slant was the unusual make-up and text of this poster.

McCoy Is Busy Down In Miami; Makes A Fine Foyer Display

It's pretty hot down in Florida during the summer months, hot enough to slow a good man down, but there are no indications that J. H. McCoy, manager of the Olympia Theatre, Miami, has been disturbed in his excellent work connected with a number of June and July attractions.

He worked out a striking display as a feature of his campaign on "Free Soul," converting the inside foyer into a roof garden set with a four-foot backing of beaverboard. Two large cut-out iron gates, typical reed roof furniture and other accessories further enhanced the desired effect. In the center of the display was a large sofa on which appeared the cutout figure of Norma Shearer and Clark Gable. In front of these was a table set for dinner, with the first course of fruit cocktail ready. As you will note in the accompanying illustration, cutout letters in the foreground announced the opening of the picture.

He also found an effective means of using 100 large bumper cards. These were placed on cars assembled at two house parties on the beach, from which he received extensive and effective circulation due to the fact that no advertising is allowed on local beaches except on private cars. Additional tie-ups with a pharmacy and department store for window display of stills also resulted in a lot more valuable publicity. The small photo shows the arrangement of stills, etc., in the drug store.

A political upheaval in Miami proved a natural for advertising "Politics," for this picture happened to be booked right at the time local papers were screaming in headlines that "Police Chief and Six Others" had been fired.

Here is a sample of a series of teaser ads he ran, the managing editor of the paper stating that it was one of the best stunts he'd seen pulled in a long time: "If I were former Mayor ——— I'd cancel every engagement I had made for next Saturday. Then I'd go to bed early every night this week and rest up in preparation for a strenuous day. And Saturday morning I'd get up bright and early . . . rush downtown . . . and try to get into the Olympia Theatre to see Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in their latest laugh panic, 'Politics.'"

He also took advantage of the local situation by playing up a reproduction of the newspaper's front page. A cutout of Marie Dressler was placed by a desk, on which was a sign, "Temperance Director." A cutout of Polly Moran was placed in a position approaching the desk, holding a large sign which was lettered, "Dear Marie: This is to inform you that you are fired. Lovingly, Polly. City Manager." Other cards in the lobby gave credit to stores who furnished the furniture and other equipment.

Other recent activities on pictures include the arrangement of a dance contest at a country club in connection with "Just a Gigolo," the winners receiving guest tickets to see the picture; the giveaway of a number of small rubber novelty devil heads at a private dance party to arouse interest in "Up Pops the Devil"; a tie-up with a local photographer for a display of prominent local babies when playing "Born to Love"; and the distribution of 6,000 facsimile paper bills in connection with his campaign on "Smart Money." An old plate that he used a year ago on "Caught Short," with different copy, was again used.

Of course, every city department isn't going to be accommodating enough to come across with a scandal just when all our members are getting ready to show "Politics," but the above at least illustrates that McCoy did some quick thinking and took advantage of a piece of publicity that played right into his hands. But we're not worrying about lack of material to exploit this picture, for it has plenty of corking angles. As to his lobby displays and features of other campaigns we believe that he's passing along some suggestions which will be beneficial to many other members of this Club.

——No Empty Seats This Season!——

"LOBBY LAFF SERIES"

In the course of your day's work you probably encounter many humorous angles which would be a peach of a Lobby Laff for our pages.

Why not tell us about it and let Dick Kirschbaum turn them out for his popular cartoons?

The original is always sent to the man who gives us the idea. And Dick gives him proper credit on the cartoon too.

Come on boys, send us some Lobby Laffs.

Caldwell Waged A Big Campaign When Selling 'Politics'

All Toledo knew that "Politics" was scheduled for Loew's Valentine when Wally Caldwell waged his advance campaign on this picture, extensive newspaper and theatre advertising and heavy exploitation featuring his work.

One stunt that Toledo witnessed for the first time was the placarding of portable voting booths with 11 by 14 cards. This was also done on public trucks and both were given wide circulation throughout the city.

Additional effort consisted of 300 window streamers in regular locations; 3,000 hand heralds distributed to theatre patrons; 5,000 campaign cards (business size) distributed at night at political rallies and in parked cars; 125 taxi streamers on all cabs of two big companies; 18 special downtown windows with 14 by 17 de luxe photos, carrying theatre copy; 15 awning streamers pinned to store awnings; advance stories with one and two-column pictures in all papers; 8-inch ad with two-column story in 18 suburban papers covering radius of 45 miles; extra newspaper campaign with five columns, 250 lines and four columns, 160 lines day before opening; teaser cards in all parts of theatre three weeks in advance; advance trailer, and a valanced marquee with 100-foot streamers and garlands to the roof.

Quite an extensive campaign, you'll admit; and applicable, of course, to the larger theatres. Still, from the above, campaigns on a smaller scale can be patterned and the detailed information is given for the reason that Wally's efforts did bring home the bacon.

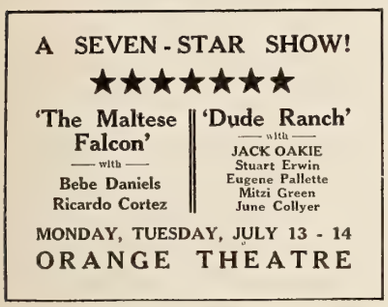
Dick Moss Is Setting A Great Pace With Exploitation

By tackling each new picture in a different way, and taking particular pains not to duplicate any type of material or stunt too soon, Dick Moss manages to keep things humming at the Orange Theatre out in Orange, Cal. To back up this statement we have several examples of his recent activities before us and to say that we admire Dick's style of exploitation would be putting it mildly.

Every town has it's individual slants. Some are good for big newspaper splurges; some like ballyhoo gags, some like throwaways, and still others may have a hankering for any old thing that may come to the mind of the showman running the local theatre. Dick's town seems to go strong for intimate little printed matter. And one of the neatest examples of this type of material is reproduced here because it is not only nicely made up but carried a "little different" slant at the same time.



Double feature bills have been plugged from so many odd angles that it would seem impossible to sell another twin-program without resorting to time-worn and ragged methods. But Moss tackled his latest double-feature show as a "seven-star" affair. A glance at the wording of his little throwaway (we use the expression "little" because it measured only 2½ by 3 inches) will reveal what we are driving at. Like it? We did!

In addition to using this type of throwaway for house to house distribution, Moss had them clipped to the menu of every restaurant in and around the city and included them in his mailing list. Proving that there are many worth-while outlets for smart showmen if they want to use them.

As an anti-hot gag, this wide-awake manager issued a bulletin captioned: "Hints On Keeping Cool," under the title he listed four pointers, as follows: 1—Wear light clothing. 2—Eat plenty of green vegetables. 3—Don't over-exercise. 4—Enjoy the cool and comfort of the Orange Theatre and see the finest motion picture entertainment.

Still another of his recent gags was the use of a check worth one cent and made up to look like the real thing. Possibly he was able to do this through the cooperation of his local bank. But the point of this idea was conveyed on the reverse side of the check which informed the reader that the check and twenty-four cents would entitle the bearer to one admission to the Orange Theatre.

The reason we dwell as we do on this group of activities is because they all were used during the hot days when most other managers sat by and waited for the weather to change. Moss is not that type. He believes in going out after business regardless, and that his efforts have been meeting with real success makes it all the more worth while telling.

Ever since this young manager joined the Club his various letters and exploitation activities have been a source of pleasure to us here at Headquarters and many is the note of thanks we've received from other showmen who have found Moss' ideas worth using. Keep this up Dick and we'll feel safe in predicting a fine future for you in show-business.

THE QUESTION OF BILLPOSTING!

This topic has been a subject for much discussion between your chairman and many of the visiting showmen during this summer and apparently it is very much in the minds of others throughout the country. Quite a few of our members have mentioned it in their letters for a long time now, but we never tackled it in a big way.

First, the question of cost must be considered. By cost we mean the printing of the posters and then the posting of them; either on rented space or on the theatre's own boards and sniped on fences, etc. If your budget will permit giving a serious thought to this method of outdoor advertising, then you must weigh, carefully, the advantages to be derived from billposting.

For the average city of twenty-five to fifty thousand inhabitants, with a fair drawing population from surrounding communities, it would seem a mighty valuable medium to sell the theatre and its attractions.

This can be done via 24-sheet stands of sensible spotting of three sheet boards along the road where they will best serve your purpose. The latter will be cheaper in the long run, especially if you can use enough of them to give the theatre's advertising a good representation.

Placing them at gas stations on all roads leading into town is one of the best suggestions we can offer from actual experience. Around the edge of the town itself, you ought to be able to get some fine locations, too.

It must be kept in mind that those three sheet boards along the roadside will hardly be read from top to bottom. Few motorists will stop their cars to read them, so it must be used to sell one attraction at a time. Those located on thoroughfares where pedestrians can read them, could carry two or even three changes.

One sheet, because of its limited space, can hardly be counted on for more than one attraction. But if they are of any value, this should not be counted against them. The spots selected are of major importance. What the possibilities are for sniping in your locality is best known to you alone Therefore, make your own decision. But for the threes and twenty-fours sheets, they should certainly be included in your plans for next season if at all possible.

We have great faith in the use of this medium, especially in the average town and city and feel that their elimination would be a serious mistake. Some mighty successful showmen, whom we have talked to, are in the same frame of mind.

In response to many requests we have asked several poster printing companies to submit samples of attractive three sheets. These will be reproduced on the Club pages as a guide to showmen who want help in the layout of such copy. It should also aid them in overcoming the evil of crowing too much copy on one poster.

PARDON US, WALTER!

And this time it was called to our attention by Walter Smith, manager of the Fox West Coast Theatre in Santa Ana, Calif. Walter states we got all balled up in crediting the above tug-o'-war stunt to R. E. Archibald, Fox manager in Pocatello, Idaho; that it's really his house for there he is standing at the extreme right. And Norman Sproul, city manager, can also be seen right below the third tugger on the left. Alright, Walter, you win! "Pays to Advertise" was the picture and this stunt doubled average matinee business.

——Let's All Pull For Prosperity!——

Madden Can Step When He's Out To Grab Free Space

When it comes to grabbing off a whole lot of free advertising space we'll have to admit that J. J. Madden, veteran showman with Wilmer & Vincent Theatres in Norfolk, Va., isn't playing second fiddle to any of the boys in this business. For instance, the net result of a half-dozen tie-ups made on "Skippy" yield exactly 543¼ inches of the much desired matter. Not so bad, eh what?

This was divided among four newspapers, a baseball score card and one issue of a weekly magazine published by a hotel association. In one of the tie-ups made with an auto dealer, a contest was run which turned out very satisfactorily. The remainder of the newspaper tie consisted of classified and subscription gags, on all of which detailed information is lacking at this writing.

In addition to the above, "Skippy" was broadcast gratis over a local radio station two weeks in advance and during the week's run. A kiddie club matinee was staged on a Saturday morning. the closing day, to which all orphans of the city were invited. A furniture store paid for the distribution of 10,000 roto heralds.

So you will gather from the above that J. J. got away with a whole lot of valuable advertising at no cost beyond time spent contacting several business institutions.

MEET SOME MORE GLOOM CHASERS!

LEE NAIFY is now wearing one of the Club pins. Lee is one of the new members and is manager of the State Theatre, Martinez, Calif. His theatre is one in the T. & D., Jr. Enterprises. He writes the Club that Club pages have been the source of many a useful show tip and that he now proposes to reciprocate by contributing some of his own ideas. Send them along, Lee. The Club will be glad to hear from you.

DOUGLAS GEORGE is at the helm of the Columbia Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, and also takes care of advertising for the La Roy Theatre in the same city. In a recent issue we set forth some views of his on the subject of advertising and will hope to publish other articles concerning his activities. George is a seasoned theatre man and we can safely predict that his contributions to these pages will be of interest to every member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK P. FARRELL manages the Orpheum Theatre in Wilkesbarre, Pa., and we are glad to add his name to the large number of Round Tablers in his city and state. There's a live lot of showmen down his way and we know it keeps Frank hustling to stay up in the front ranks. But this means that he's selling his shows and we'll tell you how he puts them over in other issues of this department. We haven't received that photo yet, Farrell, so you might shoot it along next time you write.

PAUL O. BRAKE manages the Strand Theatre in Battle Creek, Mich., and is a member of the W. S. Butterfield organization. He is now a full fledged Round Tabler and others in this Club may look forward to reading accounts of what he is doing to sell shows in his town. He admits the "gang" has contributed many helpful show tips in the past and now he proposes to take up his share of the good work. You're right, Paul, when you state that every idea counts in these days of costless selling.

HARMON THOMPSON is the assistant manager of the Criterion Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma, and we are indebted to Wesley Trout for sending in his membership application. He has been following the activities of other members for some time and now he wants to do what he can to further the Club cooperative spirit. With a Boss like Dennis Scaling to coach him in the art of showmanship, we predict he will soon be managing a house of his own. Welcome to this organization, Harmon.

RICHARD DARST is in charge of the Granada Theatre in Wilmington, Calif., and we are glad to acknowledge his application for membership. He is one of the large Fox-West Coast theatre organization and judging from the calibre of material sent in by his fellow managers we can look forward to receiving some worthwhile show tips to pass along to the other boys. Now that you are in the "gang," Dick, let us hear about that last good stunt you put over. If you have one of your photos to spare, shoot it along with your next letter.

JOHN PORTER is the publicity manager of the Princess Theatre in far off Melbourne, Australia, and a "hands across the sea" gesture is in order for this new member of our Club. If that big break he received in one of the town's newspapers is a fair sample of what he's getting away with, we'll say that John is very much on the job. He gets a great kick from reading about publicity stunts in this department but states that regulations in his city forbid the use of many good exploitation gags. He extends a cordial invitation to any member to write him regarding any desired information from his neck of the woods.

MUSIC AND TALENT

GREATER MUSICIAN EMPLOYMENT SEEN

Joseph Weber, Federation Head, Is Optimistic

Due to Increase in Stage Shows; Says Chief; Ads on "Canned" Music to Continue

The re-introduction of vaudeville and stage shows in situations which have not recently used the added attractions, together with the cessation last year of studio production of musicals, will bring about the employment of a greater number of musicians this year than have been engaged in theatres for the past several years, in the opinion of Joseph N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Moreover, Weber declared, musicians' wage scales this year will be on a highly favorable basis as compared with other years. This is indicated, he said, by the progress of contract negotiations now under way throughout the country.

Weber also attributed the prospect for increased employment of musicians to a reawakened appetite for music created by the American Federation's advertisements denouncing the use of "canned" music in theatres.

"Increased employment of musicians this year," Weber said, "is definitely indicated by the presence of contract negotiations in cities where none were employed a year ago. Re-employment on a favorable basis is also progressing rapidly. Wage scale, according to all indications, will be favorable. The American Federation of Musicians will not agree to any reduction of the basic wage scale."

The American Federation will continue its advertising campaign against the use of "canned" music in the theatres, Weber said; and recently completed arrangements for two months of additional insertions, after which a new campaign will be inaugurated.

More than 6,000,000 responses to the advertisements have been received at musicians' headquarters to date, Weber reported. All registered the writers' opposition to "canned" music.

F & M Ideas To Be Revised In Milwaukee For Tour East

Fanchon & Marco Ideas will in future appear at the Wisconsin in Milwaukee as revised productions making their debut preparatory to eastern tours, according to Harry Singer, Eastern production manager,

The staff there is being augmented to take care of revisions. The change is due to the option of artists' contracts which end in Milwaukee, and to the divergence of audience taste in the East.

JIMMY CLARK

After many successful years on Broadway, working and learning all there is to know about the music business, and incidentally making a host of friends, not only here but all over the country, Jimmy Clark, eastern contact manager for M. Witmark & Sons is being transferred to Chicago, where he will assume full managership of the Chicago and entire middle-west territory.

As a music man, Clark has had varied experiences, having had charge of distribution of musical material for out-of-town bands and orchestras, song slides, contacts with organists from coast to coast, publicity and sales all along the east coast.

Jesse Crawford Will Broadcast for N B C

Jesse Crawford, organist, has signed with National Broadcasting for nightly broadcasts over a coast-to-coast network from the Paramount theatre, New York, where he will soon play his 250th weekly Broadway program.

Weber and Fields Signed

Weber and Fields, who recently returned from Hollywood, where they made a picture, have been signed with B. A. Rolfe and his orchestra over an NBC-WEAF network three nights weekly.

May Move Acts On Sunday

Warners may route stage acts or entire bills, from the Stanley, Pittsburgh to Steubenville, Ohio, for Sunday performances, since presentation is now legal in Ohio and Pittsburgh houses play only six-day weeks.

Warners Initiate Local Stage Units

Warner ace theatres—the Stanley, Jersey City; Mastbaum, Philadelphia; and Stanley, Pittsburgh—are shifting to a local unit stage show policy, following elimination of Publix units in these houses. Change was initiated by Dan Michalove, general manager of theatres.

In Jersey City, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, Larry Conley, Al Kaye and Harry Marx, production managers respectively, will build their own units.

All talent units will be engaged through the Warner artists' bureau, headed by Walter Myers, at the New York office.

Making Personal Appearance

Dorothy Sebastian will appear at the Ritz theater in Sheffield, Ala., Friday night of this week. This appearance will be in connection with the showing of her latest picture, "Ladies Must Play" and will be under the auspices of the local post of American Legion. Miss Sebastian is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Sebastian in Sheffield, after spending a few days in Birmingham, her childhood home.

Witmark Promotes Two

Jimmy Clark has been appointed manager of the M. Witmark & Sons Chicago office, by E. H. Morris, president of Music Publishers' Holding Corp. Clark succeeds Clarence Parrish, who moves to the managership of the "Black and White" series department in New York.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Capitol

Week ending August 28

Chester Hale's and Louis K. Sidney's "Miniature Revue" is a well balanced, fast moving stage production which maintained audience enthusiasm from first to last.

Stadler & Rose, acrobatic dancers, open with a brief turn that is well received, and are followed by Marietta, a classical dancer, whose swift-moving, difficult routine obviously won her audience. Effective stage settings contributed to the act; a huge, colored backdrop, with an ornate, rearing elephant at centre, gave the turn an Oriental atmosphere in keeping with Marietta's interpretations.

Arthur Ball, vocalist, with capable assistance from a company of three, and the Chester Hale girls, staged a song review featuring "Ole Man River," "Three O'Clock in the Morning," and others. Southern plantation stage settings for the former, and a moonlight pavilion dancing scene for the latter, contribute noticeably to the effectiveness of these renditions.

Fields, Smith & Fields, comic dancers, win their audience completely with a routine that features considerable physical punishment in the way of falls, face-slapping and kicking, all of which is achieved naturally enough not to divorce it entirely from the dance idea of the turn.

Chester Hale Girls contribute their precisely drilled appearance at regular intervals throughout the presentation. Particularly colorful is their Ghost dance, Dutch Water girl turn, and a routine in which they appear in a maze of feet with boots worn on arms as well as on the natural pedal members.

The Capitol Grand Orchestra, conducted by Yasha Bunchuk, is vociferously applauded in an overture staged in a naval setting, with orchestral members costumed in sailors' uniforms and with a battleship backdrop. The "Musical Cruise" overture is also augmented by military action scenes flashed on the screen.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending August 28

With no Publix unit as a background the Saenger orchestra under direction of Lou Forbes presents an operatic novelty on the musical program. This includes a group of vocalists singing the Anvil Chorus from Il Trovatore, as well as orchestra selections from Carmen, Rigoletto, Faust and Cavalleria Rusticana. "Farewell Blues" is the popular feature number on the show bill. The Herbies (Mr. and Mrs.) present a little family argument on the two organ consoles.

Current film is "Bought" with Constance Bennett as the featured player.

Baltimore Century

Week ending August 22

"Hi Ho Presto," Loew-Capital stage unit devised and staged by Arthur Knorr, opened with orchestra in pit and Fred Keating coming through curtains introduced by man in orchestra with megaphone. Keating goes into chatter about show and does thimble trick, while orchestra plays "Two Hearts in ¾ Time." Curtains part revealing orange back and girls on in two, who do toe routine. Georgie Hayes also does a toe dance. Keating on in one against curtains doing bird in cage disappearing trick. Finishes as curtains part revealing full stage with practicable flight of blue steps up stage center with blue and white back drop, girls pose either side as Georgie Hayes comes on from left and does toe work up and down steps finishing to big applause.

Keating then on with chatter about assuring humane society bird was not injured in trick. Has cage again. Gets boy from audience to hold it while he makes it disappear. Comedy throughout. Keating introduces the Great Alexander (his assistant) with comedy of razzes between him and drummer also assisted by Georgie Hayes. Keating does gauze cutting act and burning edges, then showing it whole again with comedy of asking for scissors from Georgie who lifts her skirt high, showing purple stepins and getting long shears from garter. Then curtains part full stage, black velvet back drop, trunk lowered from flies, Keating puts Georgie in trunk, shoots at it, it falls open, Georgie gone, skirt and shirtwaist left. Next the Chester Hale girls in a modernistic number with special colored lightning. This finished, Keating on saying "I'm about to commit suicide," with cheer from musicians. Then finale.

Denver Denver

Week ending August 27

The Fanchon & Marco stage show at the Denver—fair entertainment—seemed to register well with the audience—but then this town is stage show hungry, the Denver being the only first run house that has one.

The line is a lively bunch, but they look awkward in the first lineup, dancing in long skirts and fur trimmed jackets. They are better in other routines, wearing clothes that are easy to dance in—blue, black and white dancing costumes in the second, filmy creations in the third, and beautiful pastel shade dresses for the finale, which, by the way, was a poor ending.

O'Donnell, Blair & Co. brought the house down—a trick house, with all sorts of fool contraptions that would smack them on the head, in the face, etc. The old tumbledown wagon, that fell apart when the boss tried to get in it, was drawn by a "prop" horse made up of two men.

"Peg Leg" Bates, colored one legged boy, stopped the show with his fast and fancy stepping.

Masters & Gauthier, comedians, entertained with slow chatter and low comedy. They were on and off the stage all through the show.

Loise Glenn danced.

Fred Schmitt and his orchestra played "The Desert Song," accompanying chorus of 20.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending Aug. 20

The orchestra under direction of Glen Welty offers "Friml Hits" as a prelude to Fanchon & Marco's "Three Big Figures." Numbers included are "Only a Rose" and "Song of the Vagabonds," Orville Rennie singing.

The Idea is opened with a comedy introductory number by Haline Frances, mistress of ceremonies. "The Peanut Vendor" is offered as the first episode, background being that of a large cut-out of the vendor, while the chorus in green and red costumes dances about in an engaging style.

Next episode is representative of the gay 90's with Miss Frances and Harold Stanton in period dress. The chorus is likewise attired and musical numbers include "Just a Memory," and Would You Like to Take a Walk."

Miss Frances next stages her imitation of a young lady delightfully "plastered," to the tune of "Three o'Clock in the Morning." She gives way to Louis Barrison who steps high atop a pair of stilts. The young man handles himself with ability.

Finale presents a background of a cut-out of a beautiful lady smoking a cigarette. The chorus, represented as a bunch of orchids on her shoulder, suddenly comes to life, and dances while Stanton sings "Have You Forgotten."

Irving Aaronson and his Commanders, one of the greatest entertaining orchestras in the country opened at the Dells Road House last Monday evening. Irving is a great fellow and a marvelous musician, and is ably assisted by the one and only Phil Sax, who besides playing "sax" sings a great song, does an MC like a veteran, and is full of that certain thing called "it." Sax-o-peal is what I would call it. Phil tells me that the boys in the band are very fine ball players and asked me to use my column to challenge any other band to a game of baseball, for marbles, pins or old dance orchestrations.

Matt Malnick, violin virtuoso with the Whiteman band, and composer of the big song hit of the day "I'm Thru With Love," has written another beautiful melody entitled "Old Playmate," which is being published by the Robbins Music Company. And according to Willie Horowitz, Chicago manager, looks to be a very big number. The lyrics of both the above songs were written by one of America's foremost lyric writers, Gus Kahn. Matt is also the possessor of a sustaining program over the NBC, which features Jane Frohman, and from all reports this program is already sold to an advertiser.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Valley City, N. D.

DEAR HERALD:

Conditions seem to be getting worse and worse for both Dakotas. The crops in many sections are entirely gone, especially all that territory west of the Missouri river, where the grasshoppers have destroyed every vestige of vegetation. Many sections east of the river have been burned out by the excessive heat and dry weather, and what little there was left has been eaten up by the hoppers, so that large areas present the appearance of utter desolation.

Many sections are going to require aid from some source; otherwise there will be a lot of suffering the coming winter.

Within the past 30 days it is reported that 37 theatres have been closed and we have called on a number of others the past week that will no doubt have to close unless they are given some concessions by the film companies.

One who never has gone over a grasshopper infested district can't appreciate the damage these pests can do. They will light down on a corn field at night and by morning nothing will remain but the short stubs of the stalks, and even those are often eaten clear to the ground. It is said that a hopper will eat three times his weight every day. They seem to have an appetite like a politician.

We hear some great stories sometimes about the ravages of these pests. We heard a fellow in the hotel last night telling what he had seen out in the hopper district, and from his description of conditions it would look like things were pretty bad. He was talking to a bunch of fellows in the lobby and he said: "You'd be surprised, gentlemen, to know just what those hoppers will do. I have just returned from a district where they have been working and I never saw anything like it. They have eaten every particle of vegetation except the tobacco plants, but they won't touch those, and they are so thick on the highways that cars have crushed them by the billions until the road is so greasy and slippery that they now have to wear chains to stay on the road, and they have eaten up the telephone poles, and they ate the tin roof off of one man's house. I saw the house myself."

Then he turned to us and said, "You can believe it or not, stranger, but they have actually eaten up every barbed wire fence in that country." Since he seemed to have addressed his remarks directly to us we said, "Well, brother, we haven't the slightest doubt of the truthfulness of what you say but you are in error in one particular regarding those hoppers. You say they won't touch tobacco plants, you are wrong there, for a hopper just dotes on tobacco, it's the choicest delicacy he can get, he chews and smokes both, and, while it may seem unreasonable to you, yet when we drove through the hopper district yesterday we will betcha we saw more than twenty-five thousand old hoppers sitting along the highway and all smoking corncob pipes, it was the strangest sight we ever saw."

At this point this guy broke in and said,

"Say, stranger, I don't want you to misunderstand me, but you have a talent that any man ought to be proud of, and you should cash in on it, and far be it from me to harbor the slightest suspicion as to your truth and veracity, but what I want to know is, whereinhell did the hoppers get those corncob pipes?"

To this question we replied, "Brother, you have not only grieved us very deeply, but you have wounded our pride, unconsciously no doubt, but you have, for you will recall that we never asked you a single question and why should you be so durned inquisitive about a few corncob pipes, it's very unprofessional." He regarded us for a moment. Then, with his voice shaking and with tears in his eyes, he shook hands with us and said, "Old pal, I beg your pardon, you win." Then as he turned away he said, "The first man never has a show anyhow."

(NOTE: Whenever a North Dakota guy can get the best of us we are going to send for Elmer Gailey or Crockett Brown.)

We had a very delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. Jorgenson, who operate the theatre at Salem. They invited us up to their house and Mrs. Jorgenson served us about the finest cheese sandwiches etc., with foam on it that it has been our privilege to enjoy in many a day. We have put Salem on our visiting list and our mouth will begin to water for some more of those sandwiches as soon as we cross the Missouri River. Mr. Jorgenson has refurnished his theatre with new upholstered chairs and with sound equipment, and now Salem won't need to go away to find beauty and comfort in a theatre, they have it right at home.

After leaving Salem we called at another town. The manager was at home and when we called him on the phone he asked us what we wanted. We told him we only wanted to meet him, that we were going through his town and would like to visit him, and he replied, "Well, keep going right straight through," and we did, except that we turned two blocks to the left and then went "right straight through."

Occasionally we run onto one of 'em. We find about one in every 1,000 and that isn't enough to worry about. We'll betcha he's a pleasant guy to have around a theatre.

We came within an ace of going into the ditch several times yesterday. The heat was so intense that we became sorta "groggy" and we went to sleep in spite of all we could do, but fortunately we woke up before we could go over the bank or ram into some other car. The indication right now is that this heat is going to continue, no relief is in sight, and there's another indication, and that is that at about four o'clock in the morning we are going to head April Shower for the Elkhorn valley and the old homestead, and if these two Dakotas want us to visit 'em they will have to put up a different brand of weather. We have lost our rabbits foot up here, for it hasn't rained a drop since we came up here. Usually they have a flood.

We would again suggest to the producers the necessity of extending aid to the theatremen in both Dakotas in order to help them keep their houses open. A live, active theatre, no matter how small, is better than a hundred dead ones.

We have traveled these two states enough to know that unless some substantial aid is given them to assist them through this crop disaster, there will be but few theatres in operation by 1932, for where there is no money there can be no activity. A showman's ability, no matter how great, won't count for much in a graveyard.

These two states have paid a lot of money to the film companies, they stand to pay a lot more if they can weather this terrible calamity, and it's now up to the film companies to reciprocate by doing something substantial. We are going to watch and see if they do it.

We had a delightful visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gillis at Wahpeton, we always do, and, like every other theatreman throughout these two states, they report business terrible, and when business is bad in Wahpeton what must it be in hundreds of the smaller communities.

Ma Piller is still receiving the nickels at the Piller Grand here in Valley City. When we called she shook hands with us and said, "Oh, I'm glad you came to see us again, you look younger every day, why, you look younger than Pa." And we replied. "Of course we do, you didn't suppose we were as old as that old guy, did you?" Pa Piller said, "Well, if you had been fighting to keep this theatre open and pay film expenses as Ma and I have you'd look like you were 150." Pa Piller is 56, and he and Ma are about the two best scouts we know of, and the Piller Grand is one of the best theatres in North Dakota.

Our next port of call will be Neiligh, Nebraska, U. S. A., by gosh, for we are not going to drive in this heat at 110 in the shade when we have to drive in the sun with the windows closed to keep the hoppers out. These hoppers are like the hitch-hikers, they all want to ride with us, and we are getting pretty particular about our company. It is over six hundred miles to the GARDEN SPOT of the Universe and we hope we make it.

to direct a Rudyard Kipling story, "The Light That Failed" for Paramount at Elstree), with a Swedish version by John Brunius; and "Nothing But the Truth," which Karel Anton is making in German.

Shorts Under Committee

"The Nights of Port Said" is another international picture, to be directed by Leo Myttler. The cosmopolitan nature of this Suez port obviously offers scope for multinational characteristics. Harry Lachman is to make a tri-lingual version of "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," Alfred Savoir's stage success.

Among the number of short subjects which are being made are stories allocated to Louis Mercanton and Messrs. Guissart, Capellenani and Marguenat. A production committee has been organized under the control of Robert T. Kane, who is general manager of European productions for Paramount. On this committee are some of the best known writers and directors associated with French and American drama and screencraft. These include Saint Granier, Alfred Savoir, Lao Biro, Alexander Korda and Cladio de la Torre. There is also a literary committee composed of Sascha Guitry, Pierre Bonoit, Marcel Pagnol, Edouard Bourdat, Paul Mourand and Paul Branch. Realization of these productions will be under the following executives serving under Mr. Kane's general control: S. E. Fitzgibbon (stage manager), Dick Blumenthan (in charge of Spanish productions), Fred Bacoe (business manager), Jakob Karol (in charge of German productions), St. Granier (supervising all French productions), and Woulf Henius (secretary general of the studios).

It is intended that the Joinville output will secure general release throughout France, Belgium, Switzerland, Northern America, Canada, parts of America, Poland, Roumania, China, Spain, Central and South America and the French Colonies. Two hundred million francs have been budgeted to carry out the present production plans.

The present state of organization of the Joinville studio is amazing, if only because of the short time in which it has been accomplished, for it was only in December 1929, that the first Western Electric engineers arrived to plan the sound proofing and equipping of the two original stages, to which have since been added the four new large studios already referred to.

Pathe Natan Developing

But a very short distance from the Joinville lot are the extensive studios of Pathe Natan, also first sound-proofed in 1929, and installed with RCA-Photophone equipment. Here are a further seven stages varying in size from 21½x16x11½ meters, to 48x21x8½ meters. Three of these stages are equipped with large sunken swimming baths. An imposing roster of French and German directors is attacking the long list of productions in prospect.

Films just completed included "Departure," directed by Maurice Tourneur; "Faubourg Montmartre" and "Wooden Crosses," directed by Raymond Bernard; "Monsieur le Marshal," produced by Carl Lamac; "The Ace of Hearts," which Henri Roussell directed; "The Boot Polish King," made by P. Colombier (who directed the successful French comedy "Le Roi de Resquillers); "The Stray Beast," which Marco de Gastyne directed; "Gloria," with Brigette Helm the star, directed by Hans Behreud, and "A Woman's Day," made by Robert Land.

At present in production are "His Majesty Love," under the direction of Erich Schmidt; "An Old Bachelor," which Jack Tournier, son of the well-known Maurice Tournier, is directing; and another subject at present untitled on which Joe May, the well-known German producer, is working.

Pathe Natan are producing in French, German, Spanish, English, and occasionally other Continental languages.

The original studios of the Societe des Cine Romans have been added to by the completion of several new sound stages, while up-to-date laboratories, cutting room and workshops have also been added, the layout of the studios being specially designed to ensure, as far as possible, a rotational system of working. To the executives of Pathe Natan is due the credit of being among the earliest of native companies to commence production of French and other Continental language films. These executives include M. Natan, president; Emil Natan, production chief; A. Gargour, production supervisor, and F. Ellis, assistant supervisor. The company also owns a smaller studio in Paris which is at present being used for experimental film work and has a special synchronizing studio.

Among other French studios now working at full pressure in the production of French talkies, of which there is till a pronounced shortage, are the Haik Company at Courbevoie (RCA); the Braunberger, with a three-stage studio (Western Electric) at Billiancourt; Gaumont, with studios in Paris and Nice, both working on the Gaumont-Petersen-Poulsen recording system; and two further studios at Epinay, each with three stages. One of these is owned by Tobis, and the other by Eclair. Both are fitted with Tobis-Klangfilm recorders.

A Fast One

Right in the heat of one of the hottest primary campaigns for nomination of a Tampa, Fla., mayor, the Tampa theatre is working a teaser that is making 'em ask questions.

For the past ten days ads have been appearing in the papers calling on the voters to nominate "Hattie Burns" for mayor. The ads are getting larger and tack cards are now being displayed. Everybody is asking about Hattie, and "it won't be long now" for Manager J. L. Cartwright will tell 'em all about Hattie when the time comes to play "Politics."

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 93.—(A) Just what attention should the sound gate aperture have and how often? (B) In event you find you have begun projection without having closed the sound gate, what would you do? (C) Just what attention should you give the pick-up optical system each day?

Answer to Question No. 91

Answer to Question No. 91. The question was: "(A) Using Western Electric Equipment, explain how you set the loops at exactly the correct length or size. (B) Where would or did you secure instructions for the correct threading of any type of sound projection apparatus? (C) Will a slight error, say of one or two sprocket holes, in loop setting set up sufficient error to be noticeable?

The following answered correctly: Lester Borst, C. Rau and S. Evans, who also answered correctly question No. 89, but through error were not given credit; Joseph E. Bliven, Lester VanBuskirk, Herman Billings, Leroy Macklin, L. D. Daniels, T. Van Vaulkenburg, G. E. Doe, Tom Avery, Lemuel I. Iler, Edward Allord, James McGuire, Alex Lodi, Richard Singleton, Peter Rogers, Dave Toller, Henry Edwards, Geo. Richards, H. D. Cole, H. D. Schofield, Jack Billings, Robert Cressman, Bob Danning, Wm. D. Hotaling, S. Evans, F. D. Bates, Dan Garrison, Robert Lester, Bill Doe, Gene Harrison, Dan Graves, Pat O'Brien, Evers Stanton, Robert Banning, A. Dexter, Arthur Quick, W. D. Peck, D. Fauusett, T. Rallston, Mike Devoy, F. T. Leroy, Phillip Matteson, David Moses, Robert Peterson, Frank Oleson, Alexander Tilson, Dick Edwards, John Williams, R. Dodson, Wm. Bogert, Stanley Dickson, Dan L. Graves, Frank Samuels, Abe Sewards and Phil Granning.

Lester Borst, Joe Bliven, Evans and Rau, VanBuskirk and Kroll, F. D. Bates, Henry Edwards, Herman Blivens, G. E. Doe and W. D. Peck all gave answers of approximately equal value. I have selected different sections from different answers for publication. With regard to section (A), Messrs. Evans and Rau say: "Using Western Electric sound on Simplex projector, in order to have the loop of correct size to effect perfect synchronization between sound and motion, the film is threaded down to the intermittent sprocket in the ordinary way, with that the start frame is set in place over the aperture. It then is necessary to so set the loop between the sprocket and the next one that its outer or back edge will come approximately in line with the side of the projector head when the intermittent sprocket has just ceased moving.

The loop between the lower sprocket of the projector mechanism and the sound sprocket must be a 2-hole loop. That is to say the film must be stretched down through the sound gate tightly and then slacked off two sprocket holes before attaching to the sound sprocket.

Using a Powers projector, the loop between the intermittent and lower sprockets is what is known as a two-finger loop. Between the lower sprocket and sound sprocket the loop is set the same as for Simplex.

That is not put as plainly as might be on some points, but it is the best out of several hundreds of answers, and I believe what Messrs. Evans and Rau mean is quite correct. They just did not know how to express their ideas in words as well as might be. I have altered their wording in some places, but not what seemed to be their meaning.

As to (B), Lester Borst says: "Instructions for the correct threading of any type of sound equipment is always supplied by the manufacturer thereof, or may be obtained from the manufacturer at any time. If any uncertainty remains, an excellent procedure is to mark one frame of a five foot strip of film and then count ahead 19 frames and in the center of the twentieth frame make second mark. This will always serve as an excellent guide for ascertaining the correct thread-up for any type of sound installation. (What friend Borst means is that if, on a strip of film, a space of 20 frames are counted off and a mark made on the frame at each end of the count, then if we place one marked frame over the projector aperture and the other over the sound gate, closing the apertures, and then thread the film through the lower sprocket so as to make proper size loops, we may observe them and thereafter be able to duplicate them in threading. It seems to me to be a very practical suggestion.—Ed.)

As to (C) I find it answered very differently by various men. Van Buskirk and Kroll say: "Two sprocket holes out will not be noticeable to either the eye or ear. We do not say the sync will be perfect, but that the listener cannot detect it." Brother Billings, on the other hand, says: "An error of one or two holes sets up exactly that amount of out-of-sync. There are times when it is not noticeable, such as when a band or orchestra is playing, but I find whenever a single person speaks and the view of the face is close and good, the effect is very noticeable. Bliven, on the other hand, says: "There is but one right way to do things and that is the right way. That applies to threading as much as to anything else. However, as a matter of fact a wrong loop setting of one hole will make no appreciable difference in effect, because of the fact that at 90 feet of film per minute there are 24 frames of film passing the sound and picture apertures each second of time, and as there are 96 sprocket holes to each 24 frames (96 on each side of course), one sprocket hole would make only a very, very slight difference. Now as pantomime of vision is the basic structure of motion pictures, a difference so very small could not possibly be detected by the human eye. I have for my own satisfaction set both film and record "out" one full frame—four sprocket holes—and have been unable to detect the difference, except I listened very intently."

Your editor is of the opinion that it depends very much, as friend Billings has said, what sort of sound it is. A considerable out-of-sync effect might do no appreciable harm in some cases, while in others in which the audience may compare sound with motion closely, it might be pretty bad.

ONE-SIDED COOPERATION

In a letter received from the Middle West, the following appears: "Now the projectionist is not given even the consideration shown the janitor. We are expected to give full cooperation to the management, and are expected to look for absolutely no cooperation from said management in return. And, Rich, you yourself know how successful a thing is that is run that way."

In my 'umble opinion, a theatre which treats its projection staff in that way is rather sadly in need of a new manager. I might say I received this letter from progressive, wide awake, very capable motion picture sound projectionists. They are not of the "dumbbell" type. They are not of the type who stand around talking, letting the motor run the show. They are men who, if given reasonable encouragement, will do the very best they are able to do to give audiences the very best possible, which even the most dense theatre manager must know means money at the box office. On the other hand, while the "dumbbell" won't particularly care whether he gets cooperation or not, and it won't make much difference whether he does or not, men like the kind I am talking about have brains. They respect both themselves and their profession. Men of this type will not and cannot really give their best efforts to their work when working under an unappreciative management which, while demanding cooperation from the projection staff, is unwilling to give cooperation in return.

The theatre manager or management which doesn't realize and recognize the importance of high-grade work in the projection room is not, in any true sense of the word, a theatre manager. He is in charge of a business which is selling amusement and entertainment to the public. He knows, or should know, that poor or mediocre work in the projection room must, in the very nature of things, tend to lower the amusement value of the screen image. It cannot possibly be otherwise. That fact is recognized by all successful theatre managers.

One of the most important items of the business of the theatre manager is to do his best to obtain photoplays that will please his particular clientele, and to see to it that these photoplays are placed before his audiences at their highest possible entertainment value. If he fails in either of these two things he most certainly will not receive maximum returns at the box office. That is as self-evident as is the statement that one plus one equals two.

In order to obtain the best results on the screen and through the horns, certain things are vitally essential. First, the management must get men of real ability for the work of projection. Second, he must get men who not only have the necessary knowledge and experience but also have the energy to apply their knowledge and experience in the best possible way.

Dissatisfied men never give the best possible service, and projectionists who receive no cooperation from the management may be automatically classed as dissatisfied.

Third, while it is not the purpose of this article to take up too many things, still, if the best results are to be obtained, the projection staff must be provided not only with good equipment, but must be enabled to keep that equipment in a first-class state of repair. That items, however, may be listed under the head of and as one of the important items of cooperation from the theatre manager or managements.

RCA District Manager Moved

LIGHT WASTE

Leroy Manning, Little Rock, Ark., raises an old but interesting question. Says he:

"Last night I engaged in argument with a local projectionist. The question was what percentage of light is wasted in motion picture projection. Our views were widely apart and I have decided to ask you to favor us with the facts.

"I might add that I have been visiting in Little Rock for two weeks, during which time I have sat through at least one full show in each of its theatres. I am glad to say that motion picture projection work seems to be very good throughout the city, but in some theatres it seemed to me that sound might be considerably improved. Volume is not universally well handled. In some theatres the sound is not as clear as it might be."

Friend Manning was for several years a projectionist. He now is a theatre manager, hence his praise and criticism may be assumed to have foundation in fact. Pep up that sound, men! Glad to know that motion picture projection in Little Rock is commended, but the sound should also be of a quality calling forth praise.

And now as to light waste. I don't know of any official estimates available, but the waste is very high. In the first place, the condenser or reflector, as the case may be, is able to pick up only that portion of the light embraced in a circle equal to its diameter. This is considerably greater in the case of reflector lamps than with old-style condensers, because the larger diameter of the reflector as compared with the condenser, the distance of the two from the light source being not widely different.

In the case of the old-style condenser the loss is high. In the case of the reflector it is low. In neither case would I dare hazard an estimate in percentages.

Passing on to the projector cooling plate, we again find a very large waste, the exact percentage being in proportion to the spot diameter. With a spot one and one-half inches in diameter the loss is 57 per cent, but if the spot diameter be 2.25 inches, then the loss mounts to 81 per cent. That is to say, a spot 1.50 inches in diameter has only $100 - 57 = 43$ per cent of its total area of 1.76 square inches covered by the aperture, while the 2.25-inch diameter spot has only 19 per cent of its 3.7 square inches covered by the aperture.

In considering this, however, we must remember that the highest light intensity, if such a term be permissible, is concentrated at the central zone of the spot, hence we may assume the actual loss to be somewhat less than the foregoing figures indicate. Exact measurements of the spot light loss have never, so far as I know, been made.

Passing on again, we may or may not find light loss at the rear end of the projection lens, depending upon whether or not the lens diameter will admit the entire beam.

And now we arrive at a problem, namely, the reflective loss at each lens surface. I say problematical for the reason that, first, the loss will vary widely with the cleanliness of the lenses. Reflection losses will vary with the angle of incidence. It will be slight at the center of a clean lens and greater at its edges, which latter loss will be increased very decidedly if the light beam meet the surface as a diverging instead of a parallel beam. In other words, the amount of loss at a clean surface will depend almost entirely upon the angle at which the ray meets the surface. That is what I have been trying to say.

This is one reason why the reflector is more efficient than the condenser. The old bi-convex condenser had a total of four surfaces, which, being exposed to the open air, seldom were perfectly clean. Its reflection loss was, of course, heavy. The reflector usually is at least as clean as were the lenses, and with the direct reflector arc there is no loss from reflector to spot. With the condenser type of reflector arc there are but two surfaces which the light reaches in the form of a parallel beam; hence, if it be kept reasonably clean, the loss by reflection is low.

Then, too, there are six open surfaces in the projection lens, each one of which causes light loss, though since all but two are in an air-tight compartment, the loss here is not high. Professor Gage placed the loss per surface of clean glass, presumably with a parallel beams, at from 4 to 5 per cent, but this seems difficult to reconcile with the old condenser system with its total of 10 open lens surfaces, two of which received rather widely diverging beams by "open surfaces." I mean merely to differentiate as between the exposed surfaces and the two which are cemented together in most projection lenses.

By accepting a compromise of 4.5 per cent loss per surface we would have a total loss from reflection alone, using clean lenses, of 4.5 per cent multiplied by 10 (surfaces), equaling 45 per cent. If all the surfaces were more or less dirty, it would seem there would be a very small percentage of the light getting through.

The foregoing sounds rather impossible. Taking the total light emitted by the arc as our basis, if we eliminate all but the light striking the collector lens of a plano-convex condenser having a free opening of not to exceed 4.25 inches, then lose at least 45 per cent through reflection from the various lens surfaces, and in addition lose more than 50 per cent at the cooling plate, we surely do lose a lot of light, but we must not overlook the fact that the rotating shutter cuts out at least 50 per cent of what remains, so there you are. Doesn't sound quite reasonable, does it? Yet aside from the reflection losses from lens surfaces it seems pretty evident that the losses are not much exaggerated.

From what has been set forth, friend Manning may see that a relatively small percentage of the total light emitted by the light source reaches the screen in any event. Oh, yes! By the way, I failed to make note of the considerable percentage of light cut off by the film itself.

I am of the opinion that the Practical Projection Committee might well consider this matter and try to determine exactly what the average light loss is, in percentages; also what, if anything, can be done to lower this loss.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

Now You Can Have Excellent Sound-On-Film Reproduction at Low Cost

The Operadio Sound-On-Film Amplifier can be easily mounted between projectors due to its compact size.

You need no longer be handicapped by inadequate sound reproducing equipment. The Operadio Sound-On-Film Amplifier brings excellent reproduction within the reach of the smallest theatre.

With this equipment you can have the latest Sound-On-Film features with reproduction so excellent that it is certain to attract business for you and hold it.

The Operadio Sound-On-Film Amplifier is especially suitable for theatres ranging from 250 to 800 seat capacity. This unit is meeting with unusually great success wherever installed. Theatre owners are especially well pleased with the performance.

You can't afford to be tied to silent films or Sound-on-Disc films when the Operadio Sound-On-Film Amplifier makes it so economical to equip for Sound-On-Film features.

You should know all about the Operadio Sound-On-Film Amplifier. Mail the coupon.

Consider These Points:

1. Designed to meet every need of theatres having 250 to 800 seats.
2. The Operadio Amplifier has characteristics necessary for best reproduction of both Sound-On-Film and Sound-On-Disc. The most successful reproduction of Sound-On-Film is not possible with amplifiers designed only for Sound-On-Disc.
3. The unit is complete—takes the place of all the apparatus and associated accessories from the output of the photo-electric cell to the input of the stage speakers.
4. Completely A. C. operated—furnishes all the necessary power for the associated apparatus. No batteries, chargers, or complicated wiring required.
5. Can be used with practically any standard sound head using Caesium type photoelectric cell.
6. Specially designed Monitor speaker does not affect output of stage speakers.
7. Sold by leading motion picture supply houses.
8. Sold outright—not leased.

Specially designed Monitor Speaker that mounts on amplifier cabinet and does not affect output to stage speaker can be supplied.

The Show . . . . MUST Go On

FROM the beginning of the motion picture industry, on through the many stages of rapid development, National Carbon Company research engineers have kept in mind that unwritten law of the theatre—the show must go on. That is why National Projector Carbons are dependable.

Larger theatres, longer throw, sound, color and wide film have each, in turn, made their demands. Each new development has called for greater volume of illumination, for higher current through these slender pencils of carbon, for more intense crater brilliancy.

Extensive research and constant improvement in manufacturing methods have enabled National Projector Carbons to meet each new demand. Their brilliant white light provides a quality of projection that pleases the most critical patron. Their steady burning is a source of satisfaction to the projectionist. Their uniform quality gives assurance that the show WILL go on.

UNIFORM EFFICIENCY

IS MOST IMPORTANT

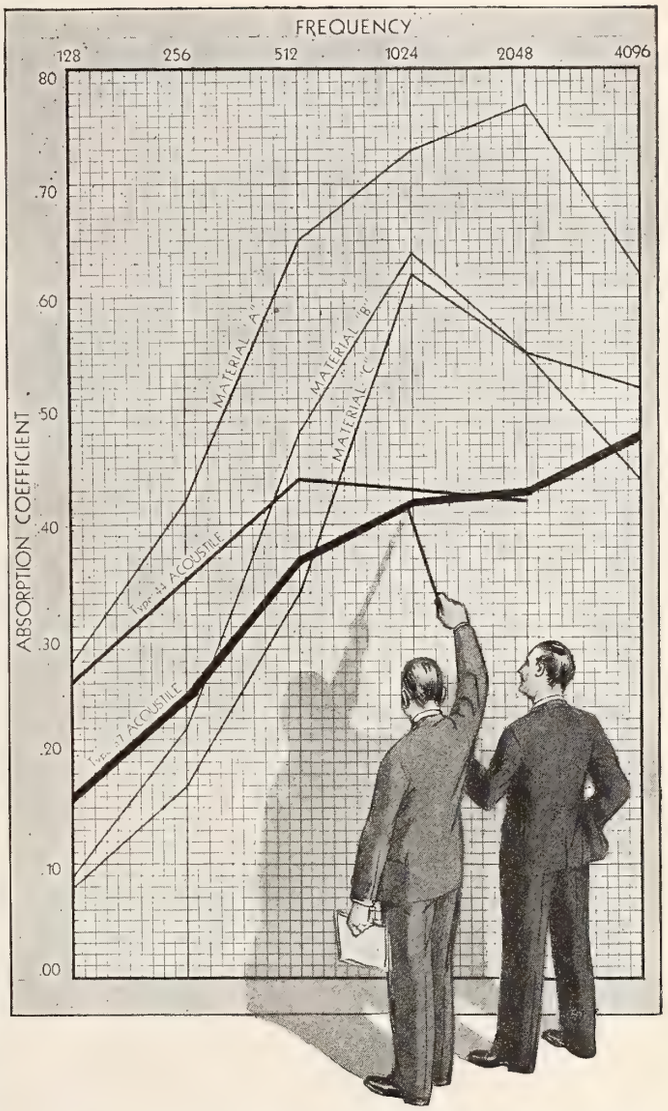
IN THE MATERIAL USED FOR ACOUSTICAL CORRECTION IN THE THEATRES SHOWING SOUND PICTURES . . . . . .

YOU wouldn't think of installing a Projector that worked only part of the time. Be just as particular about the material you use to correct the acoustics in your theatre. Select one that you know is efficient in properly absorbing the full range of sounds.

There are acoustical correction materials which are highly efficient at a few points in the frequency, or sound range, but are of little value at others. Insulite Acoustile is effective at all points in the range. It is the ideal material for correcting the hearing conditions in the theatre showing sound pictures, because it has a more uniform sound absorbent coefficient throughout the entire frequency range than any other material. This uniformity is clearly shown in the graph pictured on this page, and means that in the theatre treated with Acoustile the voice in any pitch, or the high notes of the violin and the low notes of the bass viol, will travel clear and true to every part of the house.

The use of Insulite Acoustile is the economical method of correcting acoustics. Expensive remodeling is not necessary nor is it necessary to close the house for an extended period. Insulite Acoustile can be easily and quickly applied to the existing surface in new or old buildings.

Insulite Acoustile will improve the appearance of your theatre. It can be beautifully decorated to harmonize with any color scheme or architectural plan.



This Graph shows the results of a scientific test of the comparative absorption coefficients of Insulite Acoustile and three other well advertised acoustical materials over the sound range found under average conditions. Note the uniform absorption of Acoustile.

May we send you a copy of this booklet? It's free, and it gives you the facts about the efficiency and economy of treating your theatre with Insulite Acoustile.

The Acoustical Department of The Insulite Co. will gladly assist you in analyzing and solving your acoustical problems. May we tell you how you can take advantage of this Free Service. Write today.

THE chair shown above typifies the class, comfort, and box-office appeal of the new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Seating. From every angle the new H-W Chairs have that class, comfort, and style which lend prestige and build profits for any theatre, regardless of size.

Most of the new H-W Chairs have been designed for use in sound houses. Several of them were developed in cooperation with Publix engineers who have made exhaustive studies of acoustical requirements in theatre equipment. The chair shown above is particularly adapted to sound use. Its soft, luxurious, sound absorbing upholstery; its custom type of tailoring on the seat and back; and its refreshingly modern aisle standard make this seat one of the most beautiful and practical designs ever built.

Publix has installed more than a quarter million H-W Theatre Seats. Many other leading chains and independents have also specified H-W Seats because of their fine workmanship, smart design, unusual comfort, and long wear. If you are planning to seat a new house or reseat an old one, it will pay you to get all the facts on H-W Theatre Seating. A note to the nearest H-W Sales Office will bring complete information.

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD

¶ We know of at least two projects, one of them involving a group of theatres, in which dynamic illumination is to play a role of first importance in the combined aesthetic and functional character of the theatres involved. After some years of hypothesis, dynamic illumination is thus to be given a public demonstration of proportions somewhere commensurate with the talking that has gone on about it. On this side such demonstrations have been practically confined to such ventures as the little Studio theatre in Los Angeles--and there obvious limitations in scale and investment have imposed further restrictions. But such ventures do represent an interest in an advanced utilization of illumination, and the promise of larger projects in which lighting is to get even more fundamental consideration, point to an acceleration of activity in the direction that today's developments in illumination technique have been for some time pointing. Quite probably it was our American interest in the advertising arts that allowed us to throw off our established attitudes toward the beautification of buildings in favor of flood-lighting, and we have gone some distance in realizing the practicability of modern ideas in exterior illumination. But even yet, despite a similar exploitation value in the practice, cove illumination of exteriors encounters resistance—on the ground that the building as a whole is blacked out and therefore it is changed from its true architectural character. Then, in coming to the interior, only a few, somewhat faltering, experiments have been tried at all—for example, the ballroom of the St. George hotel in Brooklyn, which some assert does not present dynamic illumination in its true sense, but merely a kind of flexible means of "papering" the walls and ceiling. Although one may discount the validity of the objection that the public would find too bizarre the theatre interiors serving largely as a screen for light (since new things cease to be bizarre when they cease to be new), Francis M. Falge in The Meaning of Modernism in Lighting, does consider the objection and endeavors to point out optional deletion possibilities in dynamic illumination that he believes could be regarded as a safe for immediate adoption. It will be remembered that Mr. Falge had an article in the August 1st issue of BETTER THEATRES, in which his subject was screens. His first training, however, was in lighting itself, and in that field he has been on the engineering staffs of the National Lamp Works and of Paramount Publix. Born in Wisconsin, Mr. Falge has spent most of his time since youth in the East, and he now resides in New York.

¶ Overworked as the word unique probably is, few things in this world deserve it more than the Studio theatre in Los Angeles, one of the latest additions to the rapidly expanding Hughes-Franklin circuit headed by the producer, Howard Hughes, and the former president of the Fox-West Coast circuit, Harold B. Franklin. The Studio is "automatic"—and how! Modernistic architecturally, it is probably as complete an expression of modern mechanicalism as a theatre, at least on that scale, may be. And that is what brings up the query: How many theatres of this kind (and we are promised a number of them) can the public stand without feeling a surfeit of novelty that is really extraneous to the show? At any rate, the Studio has already aroused great interest, and to the fascination that lies in its uniqueness, we may add its value as an experimental laboratory worth watching. In the August 1st issue of BETTER THEATRES was published, besides a sketch of the entrance reproduced photographically in this issue (The Studio Theatre: A Machine Age Cinema), a descriptive article on the Studio and floor plans. The theatre opened subsequently, and the photographs of the finished house have just become available.

¶ We believe that the rare opportunity for direct comparison represented in the material on the recently remodeled Coliseum theatre in San Francisco (How the Aged Coliseum Was Made Young Again) is worthy of comment here. Usually no adequate pictures whatever of the house as it was before remodeling, are available, but by some strange circumstance, excellent photographs of the Coliseum were available, and following completion of the remodeling, those who had new pictures taken had the foresight of looking up the old ones first and "shooting" the new ones at precisely the same points and from the same camera angles. The result is a group of photographic comparisons which tell much more than words—but important, too are the words, since they are by the architect himself, S. Charles Lee of Los Angeles.

¶ P. T. Sheridan, who closes his series of three articles on The Prevention of Interfering Noises, is a member of the engineering staff of Electrical Research Products, Inc., sales and service subsidiary of Western Electric. The other series in the Modern Projection department, What the Manager Should Know About Sound, continues, the sixth article being promised for the next issue of BETTER THEATRES.

¶ Leo T. Parker, regular contributor, is a Cincinnati attorney.

BARELY GETTING BY

an editorial

FOLLOWERS of the projection department of Better Theatres well know how frequent are complaints from projectionists that they have difficulty in getting managements to authorize them to purchase needed repairs.

Not long ago we chanced to be present in a projector repair department when an order came in for a new part enclosing the worn part. It was a sprocket cylinder, teeth gone.

"They try to get by with equipment in that condition," we were told. "We get old parts like this in here all the time—they think they are saving money by using equipment right up to the point it is ready to break down, just so long as they think they can get by with it."

We spoke of it later to F. H. Richardson, and he smiled confirmatively. "Sure they do. In my trips all over this country I have had plenty of visual evidence of this. I have examined many equipments which were in a disgraceful state of disrepair. I have made protests to projectionists, who invariably—and I think truthfully—replied that exhibitors or managers refused to supply parts or have the projector overhauled."

Yet projection is so fundamental to the success of motion picture entertainment. There are points in the theatre where economy can be rigidly pursued. But surely not in projection and its allied processes. Indeed, it really cannot be economy at all to save a dollar on a worn part at the cost of many dollars worth of sound and screen image value. And the motion picture being, physically, nothing more or less than the direct product of an extremely delicate mechanism, any fault in that mechanism, no matter how small, is translated as a fault in the picture itself.

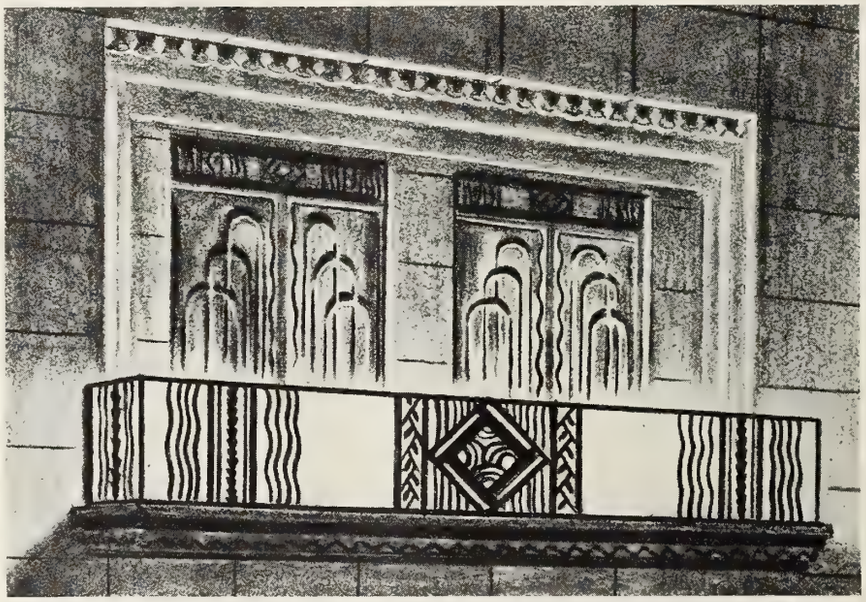
THE MEANING OF MODERNISM IN LIGHTING

is it a thing for the future—or for today?

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

MODERNISM is the keynote of the day. Blazoning forth, as never before, our thoughts and ideas, our actions and possessions exude the "expressionism" of our age. Time, in its very endlessness, however, has decreed that, although today it is new and modern, tomorrow it will take its place as one of the "periods" in cultural development, for men to ape or to ignore.

Symbolized by a breaking of restraint and freeing from tradition which was moved into being by the war, it has brought about an impatient urge to change—to simplify—to remove the fetters that have surrounded us like cobwebs, and which were represented by our adoration of a now dull past. Modernism gives to the creative arts a new beauty founded on simplicity and modern invention—it provides art with the life and expression of music. It is all so refreshing and inspiring, and, in its better moments, beautiful and clean in its simplicity.



The ugly fire-escape that modern conditions require, under compulsion of law. Here's a modern way of making it decorative as well as useful with illumination.

Before a wrong impression may be revived, I wish to make clear that "modern art" is not always—in fact, often is not—the result I have ideally extolled above. Futurism, cubism and "ludacrism" are rampant and are causing many false impressions. By "modern" is meant the new creative art which has been so widely accepted and applied in the design of our day.

Flexible modern electric illumination is the foundation from which this new idea sends forth its simplicity and inspiration. It affords the artist and architect tools and a palette such as their contemporaries never dreamed of. Every possible color of the spectrum is provided, with an infinite number of shades, and with directive facilities and flexibility of control which allow the artist a field infinitely greater than that possible with a brush and a limited range of lifeless pigments. No longer need there be any damper on expressionism; creativeness is dominant in the new mode.

The motion picture theatre? Yes, one surely would expect to find modernism rampant in every niche and corner where "theatricalism" is synonymous with "display." Store fronts, show windows and other display media have profited greatly because of the attractiveness of modern design. But the theatre, usually overly forward in rushing in where "angels fear to tread," has changed its colors. It is now the utmost of caution and conservatism, with any attempt at modernism being made with fear and trembling.

YET IT IS THE best potential exponent of modern ideas. The motion picture is completely modern and the theatre must satisfy modern desires. It is certain to follow that the theatre must soon awaken from its lethargy and capitalize on this made-to-order opportunity. "Legitimate" theatres could well afford to benefit from the experiences of their more fortunate and forward half-brother, the motion picture theatre, which, in the past, "showed" itself to great advantage. (Just now, Earl Carroll's project promises something new and ultra-modern in legitimate theatres).

Lighting is such an integral part of the theatre architecture and artistry that it deserves the wholehearted attention of the architect and assisting or consulting artists. The illumination of a modern theatre is not in the slightest manner a standardized disposition of sockets and wire, to be disposed of by a simple formula. The modern theatre does not coincide with standardized theory—there is no sunshine illuminating the carefully planned details at a 45° angle. Instead, it will be artificial electric light, and the architectural forms must be moulded with a complete realization of the lighting that is to illuminate it. The illumination of the theatre must therefore be planned from the start, so that every detail will contribute to the proper mass and proportion to form a harmonious whole.

It was indeed amazing to read, at this advanced date, an account of one of our large amusement enterprises where all plans had been completed "with the exception of the lighting." In another large amusement venture recently completed, the finished plans were turned over to the lighting specialists for the addition of lamps, the result being a completely disjointed affair. A striking example of constructive planning, however, is Severance Hall, Cleveland's contribution to music and the arts. Here the architect is consulted freely with competent lighting specialists, and the result is a distinct advance in the field of aesthetic lighting.

Now Europe, in quite a few of its recent modern installations, has exhibited a marked leaning to the new ideas, and a strong desire to venture into the field of the "unknown." Although, in many cases the results achieved have provoked much prejudiced acclaim, or very violent censure, progress is prominently displayed. Throughout, there is an adherence to unity that many older structures sadly lack. Unusual and novel indirectly lighted paneled fronts of theatres compel the attention of passersby and lead them to the box-office. Once inside there is a concerted effort to cater to the comfort of the patron, especially through the eyes. In addition, the lighting is kept to the business in hand —that of presenting pictures.

NEW IDEAS are asserting themselves in this country. Trans-Lux has contributed in the tiny "turnstile" theatres with rear projection. The fronts of the Trans-Lux houses especially are of unusual nature. Other theatres of this type are following on the heels of these forerunners. Then recently Ben Schlanger, New York architect, proposed in a paper read before the convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Hollywood, the novel idea of reversing the slope of the auditorium floor, so that one looks up at the picture instead of from a plane on a level with it. He also proposed some unusual ideas for coordinating and unifying the theatre treatment so that the result would be better for the purpose.

The utmost use must eventually be made of our flexible electric illumination to sell the show, to replace the gayety which departed with stage shows, to enhance the presentation, to provide new comforts and new fascinations. It is inevitable that the desire for modernism will lead to much remodeling. An old theatre may easily take on a new appearance and thus take a new lease on life. The use of modern lighting ideas in remodeling is not only desirable to satisfy this new craving, but is actually cheaper and easier to accomplish, and it is so flexible that by this one change an innumerable variety of effects is possible. Simple control of the lighting assures special effects for the auditorium for all occasions, and a complete release from monotony.

What, then, is to be done so that the theatre of tomorrow, or, the one that was yesterday's, may assume its logical place in the exploitation of the pictures of today, to enhance the value of the screen presentations, and to sell tickets at the box-office? Here are a few suggestions:

A unified theatre front that attracts and sells more forcefully is certainly due soon. Disjointed signs with spotty and unbeautiful lighting must give way to the modern thought of an electrical advertising display forming a harmonious part of the building. It will advertise, yet be a creation that will do credit to any neighborhood. It will be more generally based on known scientific facts, with proper directioning, proper size and proper lighting to furnish the most advertising for the money which may be expended for the particular theatre. Neon and lamps will be used for best effect from the standpoint of selling tickets and with an eye to the advantages and disadvantages of these two media. Advertising displays (because they should be a unified part of the building) will probably be under the close supervision of the architect, as well as a person well versed in electrical advertising procedure.

Comfort and satisfaction should be the guides to the makeup of theatre interiors. From the standpoint of comfort, to the eyes alone, the intensities of light should be reduced gradually from street to auditorium, so that the eyes may accommodate themseves to the difference in intensities.

Lobbies should be bright and cheerful, with preferably a play of colorful light or other display to keep the "standees" contented. The lobby offers a splendid opportunity to change from the conventional "fixtured" and "marbled" type to a "showplace" of itself, using elaborate mobile color lighting effects and designs as a basis of decoration. Illustrative of the possibilities is the "Mobile Color" unit of Dr. M. Luckiesh, Nela Park's famous scientist. People stand fascinated before its gorgeous and intricate colored designs. Silent visual entertainment might well replace the more expensive entertainment which is now in vogue and which is sometimes a distinct annoyance to the patrons "hearing" the pictures.

Just as we enter the auditorium, or even before, a well-conceived system of directional signs should clearly and unmistakably indicate the course to pursue to locate

At the right side of the box office counter (which in this view has been slid out of sight) is the remotely controlled change machine. To the right of the box office itself is the turnstile vestibule. The floor of the latter is composed of rubber tile, laid over a voltage mat which actuates automatically the entrance door at one side of the vestibule, opening the door for the patron merely upon his approach. The rear wall of the vestibule has a sand-blasted modernistic design panel with a directional sign above it. The front of the theatre is faced with alternate bands of black and gray structural glass, with highly polished white metal bars over the joints. All metal parts of the front are of the same highly polished metal. The floor at the entrance lobby, and the sidewalk at the street front, is of smooth cement finish with machine-ground joints, while over this surface has been acid-stained a modernistic decorative pattern.

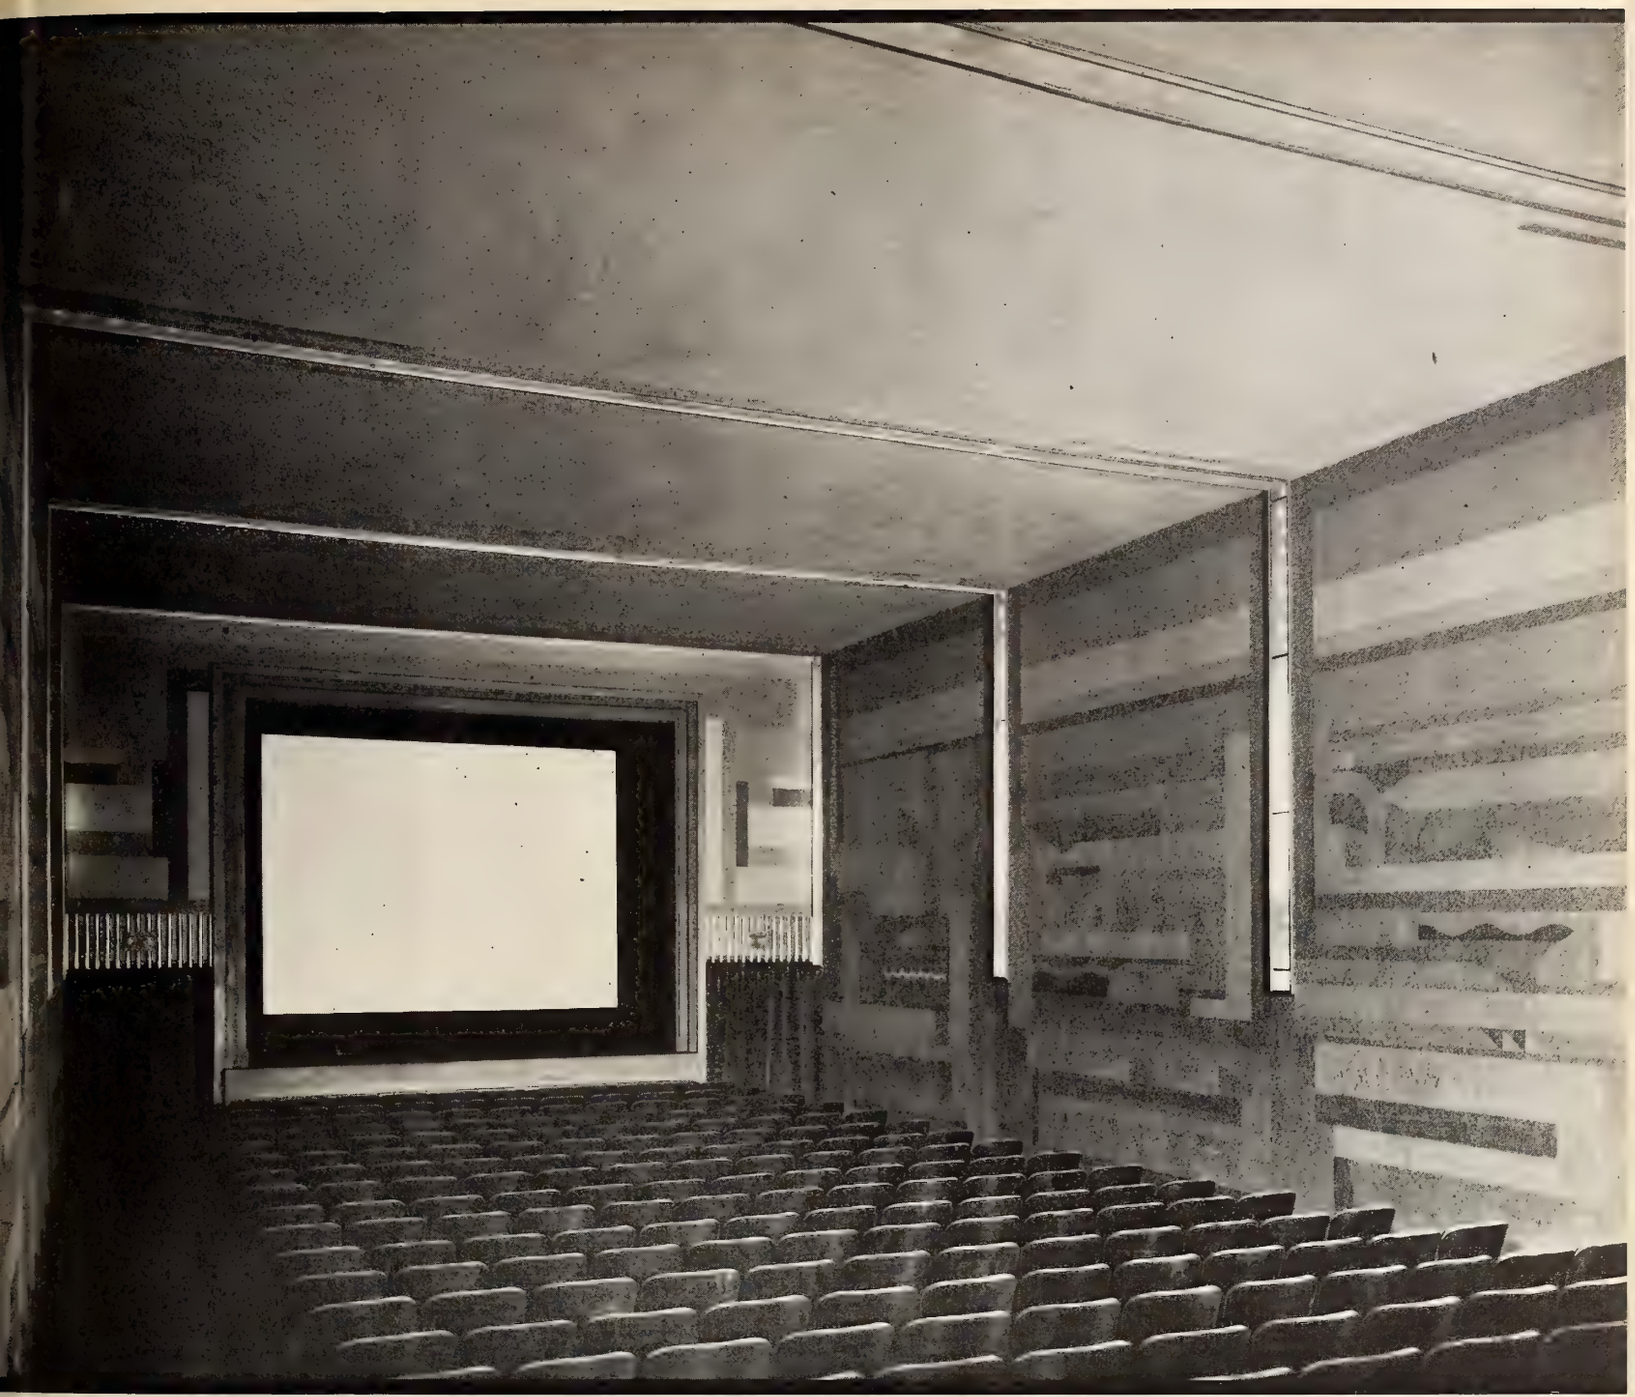
● Interior view of the foyer, showing much of the automatic accessory equipment. At the center is the automatic drinking fountain, at either side of which is a candy-vending machine. The drinking fountain is a novel adaptation of the recently discovered powers of Today's little machine-god, the photoelectric cell. The valve at the fountain basin is operated by a solenoid, which in turn is actuated by a photoelectric cell. The patron, leaning over the fountain to drink, intercepts a ray of light, to which the cell is sensitive, and this interception permits the mechanism to operate the valve that turns on the water. The fountain niche is lined with a sand-blasted design of marine theme finished in two colors. A sign in the recess describes the operation of the fountain. The vending machines are of modernistic design, treated with etched white metal and having sand-blasted mirrors. The walls of the foyer are in coral red with black trimmings, while the floor is carpeted in the same colors. The ceiling has three lines of strip lighting down the center.

● The lounge, which is located on the second floor. Notable are the directional signs, which carry symbolic patterns, instead of words, indicating the men's and women's rooms. These sketches were achieved by sand-blasting. Also to be noted is an automatic self-photographing machine, and here too are telephone booths. The floor of the lounge is carpeted similarly to that of the foyer downstairs. The walls are papered in gold, the paper being figured modernistically. Wall trim is in lacquer. The lounge ceiling has a strip of indirect lighting down the center, and metallic paper over the balance of it.

● Exalting with not only candor, but pride, the mechanisms by which the theatre of today attains new standards of comfort. Necessarily out of the way is the air conditioning machinery, but the Studio theatre displays it to the patron through this glass panel placed in the sidewalk directly over the equipment located in the basement. While thus paying tribute to the Machine Age which the entire establishment so uniquely represents, the management has doubtless not overlooked the exploitation value of this novel arrangement. The sidewalk sign says "Studio Weather Factory."



● The theatre proper—a simply treated auditorium seating 300 in chairs entirely of the loge type. The auditorium has been laid out with aisles along the walls only, there being a continuous bank of seats between the aisles. The walls and ceiling have been treated acoustically, the medium being acoustic plaster, which has been painted in a multi-colored modernistic pattern. Illumination of the auditorium is by means of a series of indirect lighting strips placed at equidistant intervals across the ceiling and down the walls. The lighting is graduated in tone from dark at the bottom to bright at the ceiling. The floor of the auditorium is bowl-shaped. The entire theatre, of which the auditorium, of course, occupies approximately two-thirds, is located in a former store space 30 feet wide and 100 feet long.

The entrance to the Coliseum as it appears today, with its original nickelodeon type exterior transformed by a few deft touches, chiefly in the application of black and silver tile and the addition of a modern, brightly lighted marquee.

HOW THE AGED COLISEUM WAS MADE YOUNG AGAIN

The modernization of an 18-year-old house, described on this page by the architect, and in the following four pages by pictures showing it before and after treatment. The Coliseum is one of a chain operated by San Francisco Theatres, Inc.

By S. CHARLES LEE

THE SUCCESSFUL "face-lifting" operation performed on the Coliseum theatre in San Francisco, is particularly interesting to the average theatre owner because it is so nearly a typical situation.

The Coliseum theatre was built about 18 years ago and is in a district that is well populated. It has done rather a consistent business during its career. The encroachment of competition was not in films, but in comfort, modern conveniences and appearance.

One of the prime considerations in making the Coliseum alteration is one that confronts the average theatre owner—that of cost. Therefore the effort was made at the outset to resort to as few structural changes as possible. However, it was recognized that the entire character of the theatre must be changed, for it is a well known axiom to those in the show business that not one semblance of the same face must be visible, else the public immediately condemns the entire alteration.

The theatre had been built in the old-time Greek Doric style, with its stock mouldings and Doric column proportions. The accompanying reproductions of the lobby show the treatment in which the old wood panels were decorated in the modernistic manner. To the columns, fluting was applied, with decoration in black and gold. An old combination mirror and drinking fountain were revised in a simple interpretation that involved but small cost. Even the ticket chopper was re-ornamented in the black and gold theme, while the door heads had a cast plaster ornament applied. By comparing the two pictures of the lobby, "before and after" alteration, one can readily see what a totally different atmosphere has been achieved. It is also obvious that this has been accomplished in a relatively inexpensive manner. At the staircase, the lighting has been improved so as to lessen possibility of accidents, while the hand-rails have been chromium-plated. A center of interest has also been applied at the ends of the stairs.

Going up the stairs, one lands at the lounge level, from which a ramp enters the lower balcony. The dingy old classic ensemble, with its peculiar fireplace, has been transformed into a veritable show place. The toilets were completely renovated by replacement of the stained and broken fixtures and the installation of modern wainscoting and decoration. (It is remarkable the difference in use that the patrons make of these rooms since their refinishing. The management has reported a very noticeable reaction in the public's good will in connection with this small but important item in comfort alone.)

The floors of the Coliseum auditorium were repaired, the good chairs being placed in the balcony, while the main floor was entirely reseated with comfortable, modern seating. This new type chair not only added to the comfort and appearance, but of course improved the sound conditions of the auditorium.

The side walls were treated in a very simple manner, in which an all-over pattern with a modernistic reeding goes to the ceiling. The cheap-looking staff work was removed and the moulding simplified, while a modern treatment was applied in an all-over pattern on the ceiling. By changing the lighting fixtures and providing high lights in the decoration, an entirely different feeling resulted.

The exterior was formerly of the nickelodeon type, with practically no lighting. Here black and silver tile was applied to all the surfaces, and a marquee installed.

late cases analyzed for theatre owner and manager

By LEO T. PARKER

A COURT will not allow damages for breach of a contract unless the person who files suit introduces conclusive testimony showing that he actually sustained such damages. In other words, the courts will not permit a person to recover damages for breach of a contract simply because he proves that he may have been damaged.

For instance, in Stinnett vs. Paramount - Famous Lasky Corporation (37 S. W. [2d] 145), it was disclosed that a theatre owner entered into a contract with a film company whereby the latter agreed to supply certain films for exhibition purposes in the theatre.

Subsequently the theatre owner and the manager of the film distributing company became engaged in an argument and the latter threatened that he would see that the theatre owner could not obtain desirable pictures to exhibit in his theatre. The theatre owner testified that he became alarmed at this threat and sold his theatre. He filed suit against the film company to recover damages based upon the net profits the theatre was earning before he sold it. The lower court held the theatre owner not entitled to a recovery, and the higher court sustained this verdict, saying:

"To authorize the introduction of book accounts in evidence, it must be proved: (1) That the book or books contain original entries of transactions pertinent to the business in question. (2) It must appear that the entries were made in the regular course of business at or near to the time the transactions were had. (3) That the entries must be such as to indicate what the charge is for; that is, what the transaction was. (4) That the entries were made by one who was unauthorized to do so, and that he did the acts so recorded himself, or that he made the record upon information derived from one who was authorized to do so. (5) That the transactions were regularly entered, and that the books were correctly kept."

Sunday Closing Law Validity

FREQUENTLY theatre owners and proprietors of various other kinds of businesses contest the validity of state and city laws which prohibit conduction of the businesses on Sunday. Occasionally such laws are held void because the provisions violate some constitutional clause, or for the reason that the law is discriminatory in that only certain classes of businesses are affected. However, when laws of this nature are non-discriminatory and not in violation to a constitutional provision, the same invariably are held valid and enforceable.

For example, in the late case of Stewart Company vs. City of Omaha (235 N. W. 332), it was shown that a city enacted an ordinance prohibiting the keeping open on Sunday of any place of business. In holding the law valid and enforceable, the higher court said:

"If the question were new, we might feel more inclined to draw the lines a little more closely than they have been drawn, but our court seems to be committed to a liberal construction of the application of the Constitution to ordinances of this nature. The legislature of the state has delegated to the city the power to legislate by ordinance on the subject of Sunday closing in any way not in conflict with the federal or state Constitution or with the statute. So long as the ordinances enacted are not violative of the powers given, they are to be overruled or nullified, not by the courts, but by repeal at the hands of those representing the people of the city in their legislative council. We are of the opinion that the ordinance in question is not invalid under the federal or state Constitution nor contrary to the laws of the state."

Also, various other courts have held laws of this nature valid which prohibit the operation of certain businesses on Sunday, providing the businesses specified are not of the nature of public necessities.

For illustration, in the leading case of Liberman vs. State (26 Neb. 464), a city ordinance prohibited opening named kinds of business. In holding the law valid, the court said:

"An ordinance prohibiting persons from engaging in certain specified kinds of businesses on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, is not void by reason of such discrimination; the prohibited business not being of public necessity."

Valid Exercise of Power

GENERALLY SPEAKING, an ordinance is not oppressive, discriminatory

REVERSING THE SLOPE OF . . . THE MAIN FLOOR

At the convention last May of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Los Angeles, a paper was read by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, presenting a plan by which the present slope of the main floor toward the stage would be reversed so that the inclination was toward the rear of the auditorium, the purpose being primarily to improve vision. This plan was the subject of a critical examination in the July 4th issue of Better Theatres. Now, as the result of its release by the S. M. P. E., Mr. Schlanger's original paper is presented in this issue. Also presented is a complete stenographic report of the discussion of the scheme that took place on the floor of the convention. The paper begins on Page 60, and the discussion immediately follows it.

MODERN CEILING DESIGNS

A group of treatments selected from the new Warner theatre in Beverly Hills, Cal., patterned in a modern interpretation of Mexican motifs

ARCHITECT: B. MARCUS PRITECA
INTERIOR DECORATOR: ROBERT E. POWER

(Above)

The under-side of the balcony, which, of course, forms the immediate ceiling for the rear portion of the auditorium. Almost a third of the seats are in the balcony, thus creating a surface both broad and deep enough to require a secondary ceiling treatment in the auditorium of major importance. It differs from the general auditorium ceiling pattern in both style and degree of elaboration, although both employ a floral motif. Worked out in materials of aluminum and silver composition and silver and gold leaf, bands of floral and leafy ornamentation provide a background for sand-blasted glass lighting fixtures which cast a soft glow upon the delicate colors of the painted scroll work above.

(On Opposite Page)

Detail of the main ceiling of the auditorium. The general design of the auditorium is dominated by a series of columns entirely encircling the auditorium until reaching the ante-proscenium features flanking the proscenium arch, and the ceiling similarly sweeps downward toward this portion, making the proscenium continuous with the rest of the auditorium architecturally. The ceiling is as a whole of the shape of broad, shallow dome, and its relief decoration, executed in composition and silver and gold leaf, has the appearance of being deeply and intricately carved. From an ornamental square in the center, bands of floral and leafy ornamentation, richly colored, radiate toward the walls.

Ceilings in the Warner Theatre Beverly Hills, Cal.

Section of the mezzanine lounge, showing the ceiling treatment, which is in delicate contrast to the heavier appointments of the rest of the room. This lounge, and its adjoining promenade, overlook the lobby and in furniture and drapes employs such strong colors as green, red and deep blue, and such materials as glass and leather. Furniture is upholstered in leather, while there are also leather drapes, in some cases hanging from a glass valance having a design of an old peon standing in the desert. There are also wall hangings of natural russet leather with designs of Indians and Mexican women appliqued in suede. Even the pictures are made of leather and parchment and framed in old silver. Plants, including cactus, are arranged in pots held by wrought iron brackets on the walls. The ceiling of the adjoining promenade is worked out in metallics and pastel colors in a modern pattern of shaded bands running behind a long spray of leaves, flowers and similar scrolls. Another lounge ceiling in this theatre may be cited here for its interesting contrast—that of the women's lounge, which has a Spanish feminine nude at each corner, in a position of graceful repose and half-hidden by a lace shawl

Ceilings in the Warner Theatre Beverly Hills, Cal.

Detail of the ceiling treatment in the lobby. This is in association with a wall treatment of stippled pastel shades, and a decorative theme featuring a gilded fountain and, above it, a golden plaque set in a black marble alcove. Inscribed within this frame is a modernistic modeling of a golden bird flying in front of a large, leafy branch (serving as a background). This feature (rendered in the water-gilding process) has the function of drawing the eye toward the elaborate ceiling above. The essential theme of the ceiling pattern is based on the sun-burst, which plays in a continuous design around a series of beams. Here the water-gilding process is again introduced, each beam being individually decorated with intricate ornamentation. Between the beams are panels laid entirely in silver leaf, executing a pattern in modern interpretation of Mexican flora growing out of two huge leaves on a coral glazed background. This pattern is free-hand and runs behind the beams, only to reappear on the other side. Practically a secondary lobby ceiling is that of the mezzanine, which is visible from the loby at the sides to patrons on entering or waiting in the lobby for seats.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

THE PREVENTION OF INTERFERING NOISES

III.—Steady Noises and Hums

By P. T. SHERIDAN

IN THE TWO previous articles we discussed (1) noises that reached the audience by direct transmission through the air from the booth, and (2) "intermittent" or "recurrent" noises originating within the Sound System. This concluding article will contain a discussion of "steady noises and hums," which may be classified briefly as follows:

(1) "Ground" or "rush" noise.

(2) A.C. Pickup from light or power circuits.

(3) A.C Pickup from light leaks into photoelectric cells.

(4) Sprocket hole noise.

(5) Frame line noise.

(6) Electrical disturbances due to mechanical vibration.

It is well to point out that no sound system is absolutely quiet when energized. The batteries, amplifier tubes, exciting lamp, and photoelectric cell all contribute a small amount of noise to the system, due to their inherent characteristics. This so-called "ground" noise is always present, but is, of course, most noticeable during those portions of the picture when there is no sound accompanying the action on the screen. All photoelectric cells contribute a characteristic noise which sounds like the rush of the wind, therefore commonly called "rush" noise. This noise is usually not objectionable unless the photoelectric cell is defective.

One of the most common sources of noise, especially in a.c.-operated equipments, is that which is caused when, due to some electrical irregularity, the power supply voltage is introduced into, or superimposed upon, the sound circuits. The seriousness of the resulting him will be dependent upon its loudness compared to the reproduced sound, but in any case it is likely to be noticeable during the more quiet sections of the film.

By the exercising of reasonable care in installation to make certain that a suitable "ground" is made on the water system, most trouble from this source will be avoided. However, any subsequent changes in the power system wiring may change the "ground" conditions and possibly result in an objectionable hum. If such wiring changes are made in the theatre, a test should be made to determine its effect on the sound system. It is advisable occasionally to inspect the main cold-water ground connection to make sure it is securely fastened and not corroded.

Improperly installed framing light devices are a frequent source of hums. The flexible "BX" cable, fittings, and switch should be inspected occasionally for looseness and insecure connections. The metal "BX" should be well grounded.

Another common source of steady noise is the misalignment of the film as it passes the sound gate. This noise may be either of two kinds, depending on which direction the sound track is out of alignment with respect to the light beam.

If the film guide rollers are so adjusted that the light beam from the exciting lamp falls on the sprocket holes instead of the sound track, the resulting hum will have a frequency of 96 cycles (equal to $4 \times 16 \times \frac{(90)}{60}$ and may be mistaken for pickup from a.c. power or light circuits.

Another variety of noise resulting from improper adjustment of the film has a lower frequency (24 cycles) and results from the film being out of adjustment sufficiently to cause the frame lines between pictures to pass in front of the light gate.

One common cause of these troubles is the accumulation of wax deposits on the film guide roller. Unless such wax deposits are frequently removed, they tend to collect more wax and the cumulative effect is likely to throw the film out of alignment causing either sprocket hole noise or frame line noise.

The method of checking the adjustment of the film guide roller is by means of a series of exposures of the light slit image on negative film. Should this check indicate that it is necessary, the film guide roller should be adjusted to give the correct alignment.

Mechanical vibration of exciting lamps or amplifier tubes may under some conditions cause steady noise or hums. The projectionist will recall that the approved method of adjusting exciting lamps is to hold a small white card or piece of paper in front of the aperture and adjust the exciting lamp until the oval spot of white light is clear, bright and uniform. Because the ear is more critical than the eye a further check should be made by listening for machine noise, using a headset connected to the monitor horn circuit in order to exclude booth noises from the ear while testing. It is often possible in this way to further reduce the noise by slightly adjusting the exciting lamp until the noise is reduced to a minimum. If the white card is now again inserted and a final recheck made it will usually be found that there has been no noticeable change in the appearance of the light spot. By thus combining the two tests the best overall adjustment is obtained.

"Microphonic" vacuum tubes may also cause noise if subjected to mechanical vibration. This is especially true of the first stages in an amplifier since each succeeding stage magnifies the disturbance. The service engineer will assist the projectionist in selecting the least microphonic tubes for the first stages of the amplifiers.

It is hoped that this series of articles has been of value to projectionists, managers and others interested in getting the best possible results from their equipment.

Follow Through . . .

In the world of sport, there is a physical requirement for successful scoring, known as "Follow Through." A rhythmic smoothness of body action, the result of perfected coordination and synchronization of mind and muscle. The "follow through" makes par golf possible; it is reflected in the box scores as base hits. You'll find it on the tennis courts and in the roped arena. It's vital to successful performance.

In business—and particularly in the business of equipping and supplying theatres—"follow through" is equally vital to satisfactory performance of duty.

When National Service "starts a swing" in your behalf it can be depended on to follow through. It doesn't top the ball at that opening stage of the game when you rely on its competency in the selection of your equipment. When the crucial period arrives—after sale—and you are feverishly getting ready for the opening, it doesn't slice you into the rough. National Service is on the job to see that everything is shipshape, or to make it so if it isn't.

Read the advertisement of Reliable Manufacturers in the following pages. They, too, rely on the "follow through" of National Service.

Is your Screen a funny Mirror to side-seated Patrons?

FROM the patron's point of view, nothing is more exasperating than to be compelled to sit in a side seat or down close in front—perhaps in your theatre—and see your program as an elongated spectacle of grotesque figures moving on and off the screen. Visionary distortion is prevalent in many theatres. It spoils everything for the patron who is forced to accept front row or off center seats. Sound distortion—"pockets"—may also exist to annoy and displease the customers who may be unfortunately mis-seated and who might not wish to come again. . . . Why not make every seat in your theatre a good one? Visibestone, a perfect fireproof sound screen, will effectively banish distortion of sight or sound in any theatre. An ideal sound screen from every angle. It is approved by E.R.P.I., for use with Western Electric Sound Equipment. Its salient features are listed at the right. NEW COUPLING CABLE

● The G-M Laboratories, Inc., Chicago manufacturers, has developed a new cell coupling cable for use in sound reproducing equipment. It is said to have five times the capacity reactance of standard microphone cable.

Further claims anent the value of the new cable are, reduction of the attenuation of high frequencies, elimination (to an extent), of frequency discrimination, and increased fidelity of human voice and musical reproduction.

THREE AMPLIFIER MODELS

● Webster Electric Company, Racine, Wis., is announcing to the trade three new Webster electric power amplifiers. They call them Models 6039-R, 6040-R and 6041-R.

The first, a three stage pentode amplifier, is designed to work directly from the photo-electric cell and has suitable volume for houses having a seating capacity of from 300 to 400. If still greater output is required, Webster suggests that the A-350 power stage amplifier may be coupled to the 6039-R with a resulting power output of 15 watts.

The two latter amplifiers are designed for use with d.c. dynamic speakers and may be used most effectively in phonograph reproduction, commercial phonographs, recording, for portable and home sound motion pictures, and the like.

P.E. CONTROL RELAY

The operation is accomplished by variations in the intensity of light falling on a photoelectric tube. The variations produce proportional changes in the amount of current passing through the tube. This changing current, amplified in a special amplifier tube, energizes a primary relay controlling an auxiliary contactor, which, in turn, operates the main contactor controlling the lighting installation.

Several of the numerous possible applications of the new device pointed out include use in office buildings, show windows,

N. Y. GARDEN ACOUSTICS

● Electrical Research Products, Inc., which handles Western Electric sound systems, was recently called upon by President William F. Carey of the Madison Square Garden Corporation to find the cause and remedy of complaints to the effect that amplified announcements from the center of the arena were for the most part unintelligible. The diagnosis was too much reverberation, and acoustic reflections from some of the surfaces which caused echoes, and the treatment has more or less direct interest to theatre people.

Erpi's acoustic consulting service, under the direction of Sidney K. Wolf, went to work with its instruments for the measurement of sound quantitatively and qualitatively: The reverberation meter, noise meter and level recorder. As an Erpi engineer describes it:

"Analysis revealed that instead of absorbing sound the ceiling reflected it into the seating areas. Since the ceiling is very high, these reflections came back to the audience as echoes and continued to circulate around the arena as reverberation. In addition, the large amount of noise which entered the arena through the windows and from the entrances and lobby space reflected around the auditorium so that its volume was greatly intensified.

"Two alternates were suggested by the Acoustic Consulting Service to remedy this condition. First, covering the present ceiling with material having a very high absorbing value, or, secondly, constructing a suspended ceiling beneath the sockets of the existing trusses, the suspended ceiling to be composed of sound absorbing materials.

"The second course of treatment offered a somewhat greater improvement since in addition to introducing a large amount of acoustic absorption of the auditorium, it reduced the effected volume by several million cubic feet. The second alternative was decided upon and plans were drawn up to erect a ceiling framework consisting of structural angles, which was hung from the trusses. Sections of sound absorbing rock wool blanket having an absorption of more than 50%, and which were self-supporting, were made up and laid into place on the steel framework. This makes it possible to remove sections whenever necessary in order to replace lights or hang lines for special events."

The job required 10 days and some $35,000, and tests following the installation of the new "ceiling" proved the accuracy of the tests and the value of the remedy.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● The French Line seems to have been satisfied with the results of the installation of Royal Zenith film projectors and sound equipment on the Line's flag ship, the Ile de France, since the S.S. Paris of the same line, has acquired similar apparatus. J. V. Cremonim, vice president of the Pulverman Corporation of Duluth and New York, manufacturers of the Zenith equipment, has made arrangements with the line to supply the S.S. France with another portable talking film outfit.

Workmen engaged in erecting the new acoustic ceiling in Madison Square Garden, New York indoor arena used not only for boxing contests, but many types of expositions and indoor spectacles. The picture shows how the acoustic material was fastened to steel beams and then laid on a steel net work to form the ceiling.

Recent shipments of Hall & Connolly, of New York, include six pieces of equipment traveling the Atlantic. Four HC-4 projection lamps went to the International Projector Corporation for export, while the remaining pair, consisting of FR-10 lamps, ordered by Arco Electric Company of New York, are destined for Rohlig & Company, Bremerhaven, Germany. Other sales lately included two EF-4 spotlights, one each to the Wilshire-Western theatres, Los Angeles; and to the Stanley, Pittsburgh. Dayton, O., the National Cash Register Company and Newport, Ky., and the Donaldson Litho Company, were other destinations of the FR-10 lamps.

RCA Victor Company, Inc., has transferred to Camden, N. J., the entire facilities for the manufacture and sale of mica condensers and other industrial radio products, formerly maintained by the Wireless Specialty Apparatus Company at Boston. Dr. W. R. G. Baker, vice president in charge of manufacturing and engineering, says the transfer was made to centralize all manufacturing, research and engineering resources of the RCA Victor Company at radio headquarters in Camden. A new sales section, within the engineering products division, has been formed to handle the marketing of the industrial radio products formerly manufactured at the Boston plant.

On September 8, McGraw-Hill, New York publishers, will issue a new technical volume for motion picture projectionists, exhibitors and film people in general, entitled "Projecting Sound Pictures" It is by Aaron Nadell, sound engineer for Paramount-Publix.

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

By A THEATRE SOUND ENGINEER*

MANY THEATRES and theatre chains are endeavoring to effect striking economies in the purchase of vacuum tubes. Tubes being replaceable items, their cost bulks large in the expense of running a sound system. The savings achieved by some exhibitors have been correspondingly impressive.

In the early days of sound nearly all theatres obtained their tubes from the manufacturers of their sound installation. The change in policy which has now led many of them to seek such supplies in the open market has taken place only recently, and is spreading. The question of whether the new policy is altogether advisable is still hotly debated, and is not one to be settled in these columns. The facts alone can be given here. They are as follows:

A few years ago the patent situation with respect to vacuum tubes limited the number of manufacturers offering this article to less than half a dozen. The expiration of certain patents and the enormous demand of the radio market brought many new manufacturers into the field. Most of these had hardly more than started when the depression blanketed America. No activity was more thoroughly smothered than the radio industries. Many of the new manufacturers, and some of the older ones, were glad to welcome talking pictures as a partial outlet for their product. It must be borne in mind, however, that pictures offer only a small market for tubes, as compared with the radio industries. Some of the manufacturers now making tubes for theatre use do not expect to do more than sell them at cost. Some few are even willing to sell at a loss. To the latter especially, theatre tubes are no more than a stop-gap, something to keep their factories running until radio business improves and they can get back into full production.

The result of this situation is that the theatre manager can buy tubes today at a cost which seems ridiculously low compared with the prices of a year or two back. Those electrical companies which formerly supplied nearly all the tubes used in theatre work have reduced their own prices, perhaps in order to meet the new competition—though they themselves say the reduction is due to internal economies and is regardless of outside activities.

Because of his professional affiliations, the author of this series prefers that his name be held in confidence.

This is the fifth of a series of articles prepared for the theatre manager (as well, of course, as his managerial and technical assistants) in order that those in charge of theatre's actual operation may be better equipped to judge the quality of the sound, to judge the requirements of the projection department, and to judge the sound and projection equipment and supplies that they may be called upon to purchase. The sixth article will appear in the September 26th issue of Better Theatres.

The manager whose sound system uses tubes identical with those employed in radio receivers is in an even more favorable position as a result of the distress of the radio industry. In large cities, and in many smaller ones, radio equipment is actually selling at prices far below cost, owing to the bankruptcy of merchants and distributors. Exhibitors who are in a position to know what they are doing—that is, to distinguish the spurious from the real one—are taking advantage of this situation to their own profit.

Tube Testers

METER PANELS for testing tubes are used by some theatres and chains as a help in distinguishing the spurious from the real. These testers are also of value in rechecking discarded tubes, to prevent the loss of any which may be fit for further service. It happens not infrequently that a tube is unjustly blamed for some erratic trouble in a sound system. Later, after the innocent tube has been broken up, it may be found that the real source of the trouble lay elsewhere. Such a tube is saved when a tester is used. The total savings credited to a tester sometimes bulk large on the books of a theatre chain.

However, it is still an open question whether these savings are as large and dramatic as they sometimes seem. The cost of the tester and of the technician who operates it being subtracted from them, there may remain some doubt as to whether the tester does anything that could not be achieved by a proper routine in the projection room, as described later in this article. For the tester cannot predict the future life of any tube. No test equipment now commercially available does that. Some of the more expensive outfits do give certain hints and indications. Aside from these, the purchaser is still dependent, in the matter of prospective life of a tube, on such guarantees as the vendor may be willing to offer.

However, there is another type of tube tester, one which has a double use, and is very often a desirable acquisition. This is the portable type. It contains a socket for the tube to be tested. The tube is removed from the regular panel, and placed in the test socket. A prong similar to a tube base, connected with the tester by a cable, is then placed in the socket of the sound system from which the tube undergoing test was removed.

Meters on the test panel do more than indicate the operation of the tube. They also reveal defects or troubles in the sound system panel. A tester of this kind is available in case of emergency, above and beyond its usefulness in routine checking.

Such testers are not yet available for all types of tubes, but they can be obtained for any type commonly used in radio receivers, and for some others. In most cases only one tester is required. Switches and dials adapt it to the type of tube and the conditions under which it is to be used.

Reliability of Tubes

No tube that gives trouble can be regarded as economical for theatre work, no matter how little it costs. The easiest way of insuring the reliability of tubes used is to purchase them from the maker of the sound system. In most cases this manufacturer will be much more interested in the reputation of his product for good sound and reliable operation than he will be in any small profit he might turn by selling an inferior article of supply. The manager who buys his tubes from the company that made his sound system may feel sure that these tubes will be the most reliable that company knows how to make or buy.

However, that does not mean that all other tubes are unreliable. In at least one instance well known to the writer, a manufacturer who had had no previous connection with the theatre field brought out one of the finest tubes it is possible to make, and the enterprise of that maker, and the intelligent self-interest of the first exhibitors to support his efforts, resulted in a general improvement in this class of tube, and in a substantial reduction in its cost, as well.

In purchasing tubes of "outside" make, then, the intelligent exhibitor need not always feel that he is venturing on a hazardous enterprise. He need only consider certain obvious precautions:

1. Will the tube function satisfactorily? A tube tester will help answer this question, but the simpler procedure of putting the tube in use and observing the results will answer it quite as well. But one precaution is not necessary. The tube should not be placed in use in any sound system until after question No. 2 has been answered.

2. Will the tube be likely to damage any other portion of the system? This is an important question, because amplifier repairs are likely to cost more than a large number of tubes. A good tube tester in the hands of a competent technician, will answer the question, but it is not necessary that the theatre possess such a tester. The vendor will nearly always supply the constants of his tube, and his figures, in the case of any reputable manufacturer, can be relied upon.

There are normally only three ways in which a tube is likely to damage any other portion of the equipment. These are (a) excessive plate current, (b) excessive filament current and (c) internal short circuit. If the manufacturer's constants for a and b are the same as those of the tubes previously used, c can be checked with a battery and buzzer. There is only one exception to this test for c. In the larger tubes, an internal short circuit may develop after they have been lighted, due to expansion of the filament. Tubes in which this may happen are equipped with springs, which operate to prevent any slack from appearing in the filament. The action of these springs should be observed at the time the filament current is turned on. If the springs do not act, the tube should not be used.

The experience of other theatres is of course an invaluable guide to the reliability of any "outside" make of tube which may be under consideration. The reputation of the manufacturer or distributor, and such guarantees as he may offer, are obviously entitled to proper weight in any consideration of this subject.

3. How long will this tube last in service? The only possible answers to that question are the guarantees of the vendor, and the experience of other theatres.

4. How large is the saving in purchase price? This question should not even be asked until the first three have been answered, and answered satisfactorily. The savings in purchase price of any article used in a theatre must be extraordinarily large to offset the loss occasioned by even one short stoppage of the show.

Bargain Tubes

THE EXHIBITOR considering the purchase of radio-type tubes, taking advantage of dealer bankruptcies and the like, has a somewhat different problem than that outlined above. For, in the preceding discussion, it was taken for granted that the "outside" tubes under consideration were the standard product of some manufacturer intent on supplying the theatre field. The question to be decided, therefore, was not the suitability of every individual tube, but only that of a given make and type. It was assumed (it is possible, somewhat hastily) that all tubes of the same make and type would be roughly equal in characteristics.

But that assumption (perhaps only doubtfully permissible) is totally out of order in the case of an exhibitor buying distress merchandise. To some extent, misrepresentation is not unknown in the radio field today. The exhibitor who plans to buy standard radio tubes at cut prices had better write on his calendar in large capitals, that old motto: "Let the buyer beware." There can be no question, in that case, of the suitability of make or type. Each individual tube is its own problem. Second-hand tubes, "rejuvenated" tubes, plain forgeries of the names of reputable manufacturers, use of old bases carrying such names, upon which new and inferior tubes are built—such practices are unfortunately far from being unknown. In the hands of some unscrupulous dealers the "sealed carton" of a reliable maker may mean no more than a sealed bottle of Haig and Haig in the hands of a bootlegger.

This is not to say that there are no gems hidden in the rubbish heap, for there are, very decidedly, but the problem of today is to pick out the gems and reject the rubbish. It is a problem almost insoluble, for no known tests will pick out the used or "rejuvenated" article of comparatively short life, to say nothing of the outright forgery.

The intelligent manager will perhaps do best if he determines to profit by such tubes only indirectly. That is, he may leave them to the radio market. They will do less harm in someone's radio than in a theatre, but their very existence forces down the price of all competing radio tubes. At a very small additional cost the manager may buy his tubes of radio type from some reliable manufacturer or distributor, applying the precautions outlined above, and avoid an impossible problem. For it is chiefly in keeping down the cost of the reliable product, rather than in use in a theatre, that the cut-rate or bankruptcy article is of real and reliable service to theatre men.

Contractual Relations and the Attitude of Electrical Companies

MANY THEATRES possess their sound systems by virtue of a contract with some electrical company, which contracts are occasionally held to limit the exhibitor in the matter of purchasing supplies. The exact extent or virtue of such contracts are not matters for discussion in these pages. They are questions to be referred by each exhibitor to his legal advisor. The only reference that can properly be made here concerning them is one of unquestioned fact: namely, that the largest theatre chains are today buying their sound supplies wherever they please, and presumably consider that they are within their legal rights in so doing. Whether or not they actually are, or whether this practice, regardless of its legal status, is one that is wholly advisable, may be more or less questions of doubt.

But there can be no doubt that any small group, or any individual theatre that may be in competition with the larger chains, cannot afford to forego any advantage that its stronger competitor enjoys. It would seem, therefore, that the law of self-preservation requires the "little fellow" to look into this question of buying supplies in the open market, to see whether or not that policy contains any advantages in his own case.

The attitude of those large electrical companies which service their sound installations seems to be somewhat as follows: That the exhibitor will serve his own best interests by leaving his engineering and replacement problems entirely in their hands. That they are the best judges of the necessities involved, and have themselves a large stake in the success of the motion picture industry.

This series of articles is intended to offer practical advice to theatre managers, and not to enter into controversial questions. Here is a piece of good practical advice, but it is hoped that few, if any, readers will ever have any use for it. Some sound engineers are sometimes a bit overzealous in this matter of using supplies from "outside" sources. Therefore apply to the headquarters of such engineers for an official confirmation of any statements they may make upon the subject.

Projection Room Procedure

Regardless of how or where tubes are purchased, there may be a bad one in any shipment. There may always be an odd tube that has become damaged in transit.

In the event of emergency, any tube inserted in the equipment should be definitely known to be good. Otherwise the process of running down trouble may be immensely confused. Any small cost in overtime that may be involved in testing tubes just received, to make sure they are fit for use, would seem amply justified on grounds of insurance alone.

But there are other justifications for such practice. It is ordinary good economy to test all articles purchased before paying for them. Any factory, where delays are normally far less expensive than in a theatre, does that much. The following procedure is simple and inexpensive, and should work out satisfactorily in almost any projection room:

When a shipment of tubes is received, they may be left in their original packing until a time appointed for tests. The tubes should be tested one by one. This prevents confusion and mistakes, and in the long run saves time, rather than the reverse. The tube to be tested is placed in its appropriate socket, and all meter indications afforded by the panel in question are carefully checked. In the case of the largest tubes, these readings are not taken until the tube has been thoroughly heated. Where a number of large tubes are to be tested, these may be heated in a group, but are then to be tested one by one, in comparison with an older tube known to be good.

In the case of large tubes, the action of springs designed to prevent filament slack must be watched carefully. If the expansion of a large filament creates any slack, the electrical forces at work within the tube will tend to pull the filament into contact with the grid. The internal short-circuit resulting can cause serious damage to the panel.

The filament expands rapidly, for which reason the anti-slack springs cannot be seen at work except when the filament in a thoroughly cold tube is first turned on.

The larger tubes are frequently used in matched pairs as full-wave rectifiers or push-pull amplifiers. The plate current meters should be observed to make sure that each tube of any matched pair passes the same amount of current as its mate. If only one plate current meter is available, as is sometimes the case, each tube of the pair may be lifted from its socket momentarily. When this is done, the meter will indicate the current flowing through the other tube.

This test must be made quickly, since the push-pull, or full-wave, circuit is unbalanced whenever one tube is removed. The desirability of balancing paired tubes lies largely in the fact that a mismatch can cause serious damage. Apparatus in the amplifier or rectifier which is associated with the more heavily loaded side, may burn out. For exactly that reason, a balance test which involves lifting one tube from its socket must be made very quickly. A very serious mismatching exists during the second or so that this test is applied.

Paired tubes being matched for push-pull, or full-wave, operation, must of course be thoroughly and equally heated.

The smaller tubes do not require prolonged heating and are tested more quickly in consequence. However, an additional check is required in the case of the smaller tubes. They are likely to be microphonic, while large tubes very seldom have this trouble.

To determine whether or not a tube is excessively microphonic, turn on sound in all respects, except for running the projector or turntable. Tap the tube to be tested with the finger nail. Listen to the sound of this as heard through the monitor. Remove the tube and insert an older one, which is known to give no microphonic trouble. Tap the standard tube and compare the intensity of the noise created by the standard tube with that which was set up by the tube under test.

It is not always necessary to discard a microphonic tube. Very often it will cause less trouble if used in another socket. For this reason all microphonic tests should be made in the socket most susceptible to this form of trouble, which in every case will be the first socket to receive the current from the photocell, or from the disc pickup.

When all tests for meter readings, filament springs, matched pairs or microphonics have been made, the tube under test may be checked for good sound. This likewise is a matter for comparison with a standard tube. Volume comparisons offer no great difficulty, but quality must be watched more closely.

Wherever possible, all comparative tests of a new tube with a standard tube should be made in duplicate panels, or with duplicate reels or records. This makes possible a much more acurate check, since it eliminates error due to faulty memory of the previous result, and, moreover, it saves time. But panels, projectors, records or reels used in such duplicate tests, must be perfectly matched as to volume and quality before the trials are made or if not matched, whatever difference may exist between them must be known, and taken into account in evaluating the results.

After all checks have been completed, the tubes which pass may be placed among spares fit for immediate use, and the wrappings in which they came, thrown away. Tubes which have been matched should be paired by means of rubber bands, or appropriate marking.

Gummed labels, which can be obtained in any stationery store, should be pasted on to every tube at this time. When the tube is placed in use the date is written on this label. When the tube is removed from service the date and cause of removal are added. The information thus obtained is invaluable, both for claiming credit under any manufacturer's guarantee as to length of service, and for comparing different makes of tubes.

Except where the glass is broken or the filament burnt out, no tube should ever be discarded when it is first removed from service. Such tubes should be set aside. At a convenient time they may be retested, according to the procedure followed in the case of new tubes. The cost of such a double check is small. It is more than paid for if one tube in a dozen is saved, and the average will often run far higher than that, especially in the case of tubes removed during an emergency.

An illusory saving will sometimes be made by these rechecks. Tubes discarded for low emission and left to rest for a while will sometimes appear thoroughly normal on test. But if restored to service they will not function properly for much more than an hour or so. Thorough and prolonged heating restores the condition of low emissivity. No large tube, as a matter of fact, will ever fully reveal its condition until it has been heated for one hour or more. All tests, whether made on a test set or in the projection room, labor under this handicap in the case of larger tubes. The handicap does not make the tests valueless, it merely diminishes their value slightly. Rather, it may be more accurate to say, this characteristic of large tubes makes it necessary to double-check all tests immediately after the tube has been in operation for a number of hours.

Rejuvenating Tubes

SOME TUBES can be restored to usefulness after their emission has declined, by a process known as "rejuvenation." The tubes which can be so treated are those that have filaments of thoriated tungsten.

Thorium is the chief emissive agent in such filaments. When all the thorium available has been used up, a new supply can be forced to the surface by a process of excessive heating.

The filament should be supplied with 25 per cent. more than the normal current for a period of about ten minutes, following which the current is tapered down to normal over a period of about one hour. It is vital that no plate voltage be supplied to the tube during the process.

Rejuvenation can be repeated as often as necessary, until all the thorium has been boiled out of the filament and used up, after which the treatment will have no further effect. Rejuvenation will sometimes make a tube noisy, and this is another limit to its usefulness in sound work. However, so thoriated filament tube should be discarded until after the process has been tried and its results checked. Occasionally the useful life of the tube will be doubled by two or more such treatments.

All tubes do not have filaments of thoriated tungsten. In the case of any individual type and make of tube, the manufacturer will be able to advise whether or not this type of filament is used.

It is obvious, all other considerations being equal, that there is a decided advantage in buying tubes which are capable of being rejuvenated.

The process of rejuvenation can often be applied on the panel in which the tube is regularly used. All that is necessary is provision for cutting off the plate current, and for increasing the filament current by 25 per cent. However, there is always some possibility that such an increase in filament current may damage another portion of the circuit. This is a matter to be checked before the sound system is used as a rejuvenating panel.

It is quite simple to build a separate panel for this purpose. All that is needed is a socket, a filament current meter, a source of current, and a rheostat for controlling the current. Where several types of tubes are to be rejuvenated, a pair of clips may be used for connection to the filament prongs, thus saving the expense of several sockets of different sizes. The current source may be a storage battery, or a transformer supplied from analternating current line, or a resistance supplied by a direct current line.

Where the types of tubes to be rejuvenated vary widely as to filament requirements, one rheostat may be inadequate, and additional resistors may be needed. These can be arranged to be cut in or out of circuit, according to the type of tube to be treated, by switches or by plug-and-jack connectors. Any good radio mechanic should be able to build such a panel for less than $10, not counting the cost of the ammeter. All that is required is ordinary electrical knowledge and information as to the normal filament requirements of the tubes to be rejuvenated.

TECHNICALLY SPEAKING, photocells are not ordinarily listed as vacuum tubes, but they may most conveniently be considered under that heading here.

The inferior photocells in the open market are many, the good ones relatively few. Moreover, photocells are not used in radio work. The unfortunate conditions now prevailing in the radio industry, which are largely responsible for the lowered price of theatre tubes, do not therefore apply to photocells at the present time.

However, such cells are coming into increasing use for television, and occasionally economies may be effected. But great care must be exercised in choosing cells, since they have a vital effect upon the quality of sound-on-film reproduction.

The caesium type of cell, with the active material placed on a metal plate, seems to have proved itself possessed of advan tages in volume and in length of life to the potassium type, with the active material coated onto the inside of the glass. The liquid type "photolytic" cell compares very favorably with either as to both volume and life, and some makers claim that it yields equal quality.

Both vacuum tubes and photocells must match, in their constants, with the constants of the circuits in which they are to be used. In the case of tubes, the type number is, in nearly every instance, sufficient guide regardless of the name of the manufacturer. (Tubes have become standardized to that extent.) Sometimes a tube of one type number will replace another tube of different number, but the manufacturer will be careful to make this possibility clear in his advertising and in his sales contacts. Cells have not as yet been standardized to the same degree. The potassium and caesium cells are generally interchangeable, but neither can be interchanged with the liquid or the selenium type without modification of the associated apparatus.

Exciting Lamps

EXCITING LAMPS of the type used in theatre work have few uses outside of the theatre. Like photocells, therefore, and unlike tubes, they do not offer a large field for economies. However, less is required of them than of either tubes or cells. They must give the proper amount of light, the filament must be correctly placed and horizontal, and they should last as long as possible. The first two requirements are easily checked by observing volume and focus. For the last, the manufacturer's guarantee is perhaps the best reliance. But life tests, however, are simple and should always be made in spite of the moderate expense involved, because of the large current drain they are cheaper than repeated stoppages due to the burning out of exciting lamps somewhat too optimistically guaranteed.

So the inside of your theatre will bring patrons from without!

NOW the spotlight is turned from the outside of the theatre to the inside. From the exterior that first attracts patrons to the interior that actually sells and keeps patrons sold. Owners and managers now focus attention on the seated audience . . . make the interior of their theatre so inviting that it brings patrons from without!

In the competition for patron favor, seating . . . the chairs your audience sit in from 2½ to 3 hours, can be made to contribute definitely to bigger volume. For comfortable chairs . . . seating that permits of healthful relaxation is always appreciated by the theatre goer. Showmen find that extra comfort brings extra profits.

So, American Seating Company undertook research. Posture specialists worked with engineers. Chairs were built to conform with proved posture principles. From a maze of research findings, came comfort features that were quickly recognized by the motion picture industry. Roomy, luxurious chairs . . . seating built to fit the body—to correctly support the spine . . . to give the utmost in easy, natural comfort without slumping.

Illustrating Theatre Chair No. 8136 with 843 Standard
A comfortable chair of unusually attractive design that is meeting with the enthusiastic reception of theater owners and managers. Specially built for maximum sound absorption. Only one of the many American Seating Company types and styles of theatre seating.

Then followed acoustical research. It was found that seating had a direct bearing on the acoustics of the theatre . . . that properly built seating had a sound absorption value that assisted in producing more perfect sound effects. Chairs were built that stopped excessive reverberation, echo and hollow sounds—that helped sound reproduction and eliminated rasping noises, jumbling of words.

Your theatre—reseated with these comfortable, acoustically correct American Seating Company chairs will prove to be a magnet of patron drawing power . . . an investment you must eventually make if you expect your daily receipts to show a steady, healthy increase. One-Contract Plan Assures Satisfaction

Maximum efficiency at minimum cost results are assured every new theatre enterprise or complete renovation job engineered under the Fulton One-Contract Plan.

The One-Contract Plan means that all phases of the enterprise are carefully considered in relation one to another, not by a single specialist but by various experts and engineers, each working independently, yet co-operatively and with full knowledge and understanding of each other's activities.

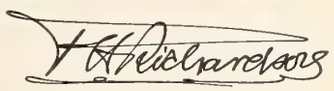
Under the scrutiny of these engineers, faults of plan or proposed equipment specified in original plans are unerringly spotted and rectified in advance of installation.

Equally important to the completed job is the assurance of proper installation—your guarantee of proper performance from the right equipment.

Thus the One-Contract Plan offers a sure check on lost motion, wasteful purchases and insurance that real economy will prevail from start to completion of the theatre job.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •



A CRITICISM AND A PLAN

THE FOLLOWING is a paragraph from a letter recently received by a projector manufacturer:

"I would like to get a main drive gear and a small double gear. The larger one drives the automatic governor; the smaller drives the upper sprocket. These gears are for a Powers cameragraph No. 5. The number of the mechanism is 4722."

Now so far as the motion picture industry be concerned, that order would be somewhat analogous to the United States Government ordering some particular part for a Civil War musket. The Powers No. 5 came into existence about 1906 or 1907. Its manufacture was discontinued, as far as I can remember, somewhere between 1915 and 1918, yet here comes a projectionist ordering repair parts for it.

The only reason I am paying attention to this particular thing is that it points to the utterly ridiculous extremes to which some people will go in the matter of using equipment that is out of date and out of about everything else.

I have many times said, and again I say, that it is rather the height of inefficiency and foolishness to keep projection equipment in use for an unreasonable length of time. It must be remembered, gentlemen, that there are two very different and distinct things to be considered in matters of this kind. First, will the equipment deliver acceptable results, regardless of its age? And, second, will the equipment deliver results efficiently? Exhibitors should not for one moment lose sight of the fact that not a year passes in which equipment manufacturers do not make many and important improvements in their apparatus. Manufacturers do not expend large sums of money and go to a very large amount of trouble making changes in their equipment just for the amusement of doing it. They make these improvements, gentlemen, because it is found that the improvements will add materially, either to efficiency in operation, or to the improvement of results obtained, or and (usually) to both.

Exhibitors who retain old equipment in use fail to experience the benefits derived from these improvements. They usually are paying a higher operating cost, coupled with more or less reduction in excellence of results obtained. It required no keen mentality to understand that any reduction in the excellence of results automatically means reduction in box office receipts.

Some years ago I proposed what seemed to be a very workable scheme which would enable the de luxe theatres, at a very reasonable cost, to keep their equipment right up to date, and at the same time enable the smaller theatre to replace its worn, out-of-date projectors with thoroughly up-to-date, reconditioned projectors at a price even the smaller theatres could afford. The plan was published, but nothing came of it.

Briefly, the plan provides that projectors be sold to de luxe theatres, which statement is meant to include all large theatres, under an agreement that at a stated period, perhaps a year or so, they would be replaced with new projectors, the old ones taken back at a fair allowance, returned to the factory, thoroughly reconditioned, then sold, at a reduced price to the smaller theatres. That is, of course, a very rough sketch of the plan. I am thoroughly convinced that such a plan could be put into operation with very large advantage to all concerned.

The motion picture industry is too important a factor in the affairs of man to permit longer its product to be placed before an audience at less than its full entertainment value merely because the projection equipment in many theatres is not only old enough to wear a beard, but also in a more or less wretched state of repair.

MARKING REELS TO FIND RUNNING TIME

VINCENT M. TATE, chief projectionist at the Publix Irving Theatre in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., describes a scheme he uses for estimating the exact running time of his show. He says, "First I want to tell you how helpful your articles on sound have been to me. I have not missed an issue for a long, long while.

"I have been using a little idea of my own for more than a year, which I suggest you pass along, through the department, as it will be found helpful, especially to the men in night houses.

"Find enclosed a form to be notched or filed on one spoke of a reel. The one I am sending shows minutes on a standard wire reel with a 4¾-inch hub.

"It is simple and accurate. All that must be done is to rewind the film on your own reels and you have the exact running time of the whole or any part thereof."

Brother Tate's idea is to wind 90 feet of film on your projection room reel, and using a hack saw or file, make a mark, and then wind on 90 feet more, and so on until the whole 1,000 or 2,000 feet have been wound on. These notches will not injure the reel, and it seems to me it is a pretty good stunt for projection reels, because once a reel has thus been accurately marked, the projectionist will be able to tell at a glance just how long a reel will run. I think I can heartily recommend that projection room reels be marked in this way.

If you have a film measuring device it will take only a short while to do it. If you have no measuring machine, you can measure each 90 feet by running it through an ordinary projector mechanism, 90 turns of the crank shaft being, of course, 90 feet of film.

We thank Brother Tate for submitting this scheme. I am glad he finds benefit in the department. Last spring the Wilkes-Barre local wrote asking me to come down and address them. I was then unable to accept its invitation, but should the local care to have me come some time next spring, I think it could be arranged.

ROTARY CONVERTERS VS. MOTOR GENERATORS

THE FOLLOWING letter comes from E. C. Van Fradenburg, one of the two owners of the Valley theatre in Manassa, Colo.:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I have been reading your department for some time. Find that it is a great help to me, though at times I feel you fail to give sufficient consideration to the small town situations where the matter of expense makes some of the desirable improvements prohibitive.

"Ofttimes there are inexpensive ways of obtaining very desirable improvements, though of course they may not be quite the ne-plus-ultra. The deluxe theatres and great theatre chains have their own engineers and technical men, hence are not so dependent upon information obtained through departments such as yours. However, when the matter is considered as a whole, these theatres form but a relatively small percentage of the whole.

"I have a question which, while it is not a 'trouble,' has caused me to do some thinking. For years I used a motor generator set at approximately 35 amperes at 65 volts; projection distance, 72 feet, with a 12-foot-wide picture. Got good results with vertical type arcs when pictures were silent. With the advent of sound, this seemed insufficient, so I shopped around for a set of larger capacity, with the hand, as usual, on the pocketbook. Finally I installed an a. c.-to-d. c. rotary converter, which delivers 50 amperes at voltage desired, from 65 to 85.

"I find I can now get 45 amperes at 75 volts with about 10% less a. c. consumption than I formerly got using 35 amperes at 65 volts. Upon checking this up I find it to be generally granted that a rotary converter is more economical than is a true motor generator. That being true, why is it motor generators are being installed almost exclusively at this time? In other words, what is the matter with the rotary converter for arc operation?

"Another thing: Am using quarter-size, 5¼ E. F. lenses. Had half-size lenses sent on trial. Worked for a week with half-size on one projector, and quarter-size on the other. Could see no difference at all, or at least very little. With lenses of same quality should this be so?"

That depends. I have told you many times during past years how to ascertain whether or no you needed larger diameter lenses. Measure distance from lens to aperture exactly. On black paper, which you may obtain at almost any photo shop, draw a ring, using white chalk, exactly the diameter of rear opening of your projection lens. Remove lens from projector, and in any convenient manner, hold paper exactly the same distance the rear surface of your lens was from the aperture. If the light all falls inside the white circle, then it is all entering your lenses and there would be no advantage in having others of larger diameter.

Or you may be able to hold a ruler in the light beam and measure its diameter at the point it enters the lens. Presumably the light, or nearly all of it, entered your half-size lens, and that was that. (Would suggest that you consult Fig. 48, Page 184, and Fig. 49, Page 185, Vol. 1, of the Blue-book of Projection. In fact, a study of "Practical Projection Optics," Pages 160 to 192, of that book, will enlighten you thoroughly on the whole matter.)

As to motor generator sets and rotary converters, I have heard, as you say, that the rotary converter is more economical, but there are also those who insist the motor generator set is more stable and dependable in its operation.

RATING A MOTOR GENERATOR SET

A LETTER from George L. Branscome of Kansas City, Mo., says, "I have a theatre near this city in which straight d. c. arcs are used for projection. The current is direct. We use rheostats. A supply dealer has been trying to induce me to put in a motor generator set instead of the rheostats. He tells me the saving would be great enough to enable me to save the price of the set within one year.

"This seems incredible to me, though I am assured by the chief projectionist of one of the large Kansas City theatres that the statement is correct. Will you advise

KEEPING POSTED ON EQUIPMENT DEVELOPMENTS

FROM the chief inspector of theatres in a Canadian governmental office comes the following:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: May I ask a favor of you? Before I put the request, however, let me explain that we are a long ways from the seat of activities along equipment production lines. If we don't happen to read everything that comes along, we become temporarily behind the times. When we do read, we are obliged to write for further information, only, in many instances, to discover we have written to the wrong persons and have to do it all over again, which causes both delay and inconvenience.

"My request is: Why cannot you keep a file with the names and addresses of the theatre inspectors in this part of the country, and immediately advise us of changes in equipment, new devices and advancements in the industry? As you undoubtedly know, inspectors are in touch with theatre managers at all times. They are expected to be up to date. Theatre managers expect to obtain from them information as to how they can improve their equipment, make their theatres more attractive, more cool in summer and warm in winter, and where those many things may be obtained that will make for better and still better screen results.

"We have endeavored to follow out this spirit of progress. We have nothing for sale. We receive not a penny for information we are able to impart. As a matter of fact, it has cost me personally plenty of money for books, for experimental appliances, chemicals, etc., to the end that I be prepared to help them to the better appreciation of the wonderful possibilities within the profession.

"Is it not possible for you to ease this ever-increasing burden to us who struggle for advancement, by supplying our names to the various manufacturers of equipment parts and appliances, so our offices may be up-to-the-minute on information pertaining to the industry?

"Our inspectors through the country, on their daily visits to theatres, must be in a position to advise the various managements as to new advancements and devices that might help along those exhibitors who are willing and some times even anxious to try out new things."

I most sincerely recommend manufacturers of equipment to read the foregoing, and perhaps to again read it. This inspector of theatres is perfectly sincere, and I am perfectly sincere when I say that nothing would please me better than to comply with his wish, were it possible to do so.

But unfortunately it would not be feasible for me or any other member of our organization to take of his spare time and energy to serve directly one small group in addition to the service already provided for in the pages of the publication, and through such extra-publication services as Better Theatres Catalog Bureau.

Much of the very information which my correspondent seeks is given in each issue of the publication itself. Besides this department, there are Projection Mart and Equipment Affairs where such information on new developments among the manufacturers are given—and the latter two departments are conducted for precisely that purpose. In addition, the Catalog Bureau is conducted outside the publication to obtain information on such new developments, affording a direct contact between manufacturer or dealer and the reader.

The significant point in this inspector's request is obviously one for the manufacturer's consideration. In this day and age the man who doesn't advertise his goods is not going to find much sale for them. It is rock-bottom fact that the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES reach practically all theatre managers in this country and Canada. It is, so far as I know, the only medium through which the virtues of new equipment and devices can be set before practically all theatre managers and projectionists.

These, gentlemen, are the facts as I know them. They are not in any degree overdrawn. The official referred to has asked me to do what should be done by the manufacturer himself. This is the first time, I believe, I have ever dealt with the matter of advertising in this department. But while there are several reasons why I cannot hope to do what this official asks, there is no reason on earth why manufacturers should not do so through both this department and through our advertising columns.

This department will always be glad to lay before its readers a competent description of new equipment—and that means, of course, practically before the entire industry.

me as to just what the saving really would be. The theatre in question pays a profit and always has, but it is small and I cannot afford to put in such a costly equipment unless the statement of the supply dealer and the chief projectionist is at least approximately true. I shall appreciate your advice and will be very willing to pay you any reasonable sum therefor."

There is no charge for advice, provided the question be one suitable for answering through this department, as this one is. If it is not suitable for answering through the department, the charge for answering by mail will always be very reasonable.

In this case Mr. Branscome has neglected to give sufficient information to enable me to work out exactly the saving such a set would affect, based, of course, upon the probable efficiency of the proposed set.

However, I can tell the correspondent how to work it out for himself, always provided the efficiency rating of the set—the real efficiency rating, not a theoretical rating based upon factory tests made with the machine in perfect condition and tuned up to the limit—be known, as it in practice never is known, for it will vary, and perhaps vary widely in proportion to the expertness with which the set is handled and the care it receives.

The saving effected by installing a set will be in proportion to the efficiency of the set and the efficiency of the resistance in use. Assuming the supply voltage to be 110, if your arc voltage be 60, then the difference between the line and arc voltage must be "broken down" or absorbed in the resistance, hence the difference between 110 and 60, or 50 volts, must be wasted, and assuming your arc amperage to be 60, you would be using 60 x 110=6,600 watts at the arc, and 50 x 110=5,500 watts in the resistance or, putting it in another way, your resistance efficiency would be 60÷110 =54 plus.

On the other hand, suppose the motor generator set efficiency to be 60, and that the projectionist operates his arcs with a rheostat drop of 20 volts. In such a case, 60% of the line voltage would be generated as d. c., but of this power, 20 volts must be absorbed in the rheostat (ballast resistance). Therefore 80 volts are generated and only 60 actually used at the arc. This figures out as 45% efficiency, hence you would, if the efficiency of the set be as above assumed, actually have 54-45=9% less efficiency in operation by installing the set. Your expense would be about 11 cents greater with the set than with resistance. I believe, however, the total efficiency would be somewhat higher than that given, provided the set be kept in first-class condition.

The foregoing assumes that a multiple type of generator be used. Let us for a moment examine into the series machine. Suppose a series type generator were installed, instead of the multiple. The efficiency of such a set would be about the same as the other—that is, 60%. And since there would be no ballast resistance loss, the line is called upon to supply 6,000 watts in order to supply the arc with 3,600 watts. At 8 cents per kw. hour, the loss per hour would be about 19 cents, a saving over the multiple type of 16 cents, and over the rheostat feed direct-from-the-line, of 5 cents per hour.

It has been argued that using a motor generator set avoids some of the rather tremendous amount of heat generated where power is taken from the lines through resistance, but if the multiple set and its 20 volts of drop ballast were put into one room, and the 50-volt drop of the rheostats taking power direct from the line to feed an arc into another, the former would be found to produce noticeably the greater amount of heat of the two.

The real field for motor generators, insofar as applies to theatre projection work, is in rectification of a. c. into d. c., at the same time reducing the voltage. In that field it is a highly desirable, highly efficient machine. Where d. c. is available, the matter is very different.

VOLTAGE, OIL AND FILM DAMAGE

JOHN ANDERSON of New Orleans, La., asks, "What effect has low voltage in the B-batteries? What oil is best for use on projectors? What is a projectionist to do when he is accused of scratching a sound band when he did not do it?"

If the B-battery voltage drops too low, the battery will be noisy. If the battery be a 45-volt one, it should be discarded when it drops to 38 volts. This refers to dry batteries, of course.

As to oil, it is best to use only the oil recommended by the projector manufacturer. This should very strictly be adhered to in the case of the intermittent oil well. Write the manufacturer of your projectors concerning this matter, paying strict attention to their recommendation. Projector manufacturers have an engineering department, one duty of which is to make careful tests to determine what lubricant is best for use on their projector.

I have an average of at least three or four cases per week in which projectionists appeal to me for settlement of a dispute between them and the theatre management, or between them and the film exchange. Unless the projectionist or projection staff has examined the films carefully after receipt, and made report to the manager of any damage they have sustained, it is almost impossible to settle such a dispute as the one friend Anderson has on tap. He may know he did not do the damage, he may be able to convince the manager he did not do it, but how is he going to prove that fact? He can't do it, and that's that!

A DISGRACEFUL PERFORMANCE

BECAUSE of the fact that there is one man involved whom I have for years regarded as both a friend and an efficient, capable motion picture projectionist, I shall not name the theatre, its location or the great theatre chain to which it belongs. However, should I again be "treated" to such an exhibition in that theatre, neither friendship nor anything else will deter me from reporting it to the head office of the theatre chain in New York City, because there is and can be no possible excuse for such slip-shod work. Moreover, the company has a considerable investment in that theatre and is entitled to know, to the end that it may determine whose the fault is.

Some weeks since I visited a good sized and very nice theatre in a certain city of medium size. This city has several theatres, but my experience, covering ten years or more, has been that with one exception, the projection work in them all has varied from mediocre to just plain punk.

I only viewed a small part of the show this time, then mounting to the projection room, found two men on duty, neither of whom was very near the working projector. They stood and talked with me for several minutes, removed several feet from the working projector, at no time even so much as glancing toward either it or the screen. I gave them both a good talking to for this and took my departure.

A couple of weeks after the first visit I again visited this theatre and viewed the whole show, without anyone except the door man (I have a yearly pass to all the theatres of this chain) being aware of my presence. The doorman, of course, did not know anything about me, except my name. I shall now tell you of the disgraceful exhibition of either rank carelessness or incompetence we viewed.

I must go back, though, first and tell you that when I talked to the men about being away from the working projector at the time of my first visit, upon which occasion one of them advised me that he could tell when anything went wrong by the sound, which is true insofar as concerns some things which might occur, but entirely untrue as to others. Moreover, should a bit of film catch at the aperture and a fire start, fractions of a second count, and at the least one, two or three seconds would be required for the projectionist to reach the projector and get into action. And now to our story:

First (at a guess), two minutes before the ending of one of the Bobby Jones golf lessons, where there was little action and much conversation, the sound suddenly dropped so low that only an occasional murmur could be heard. The effect was to ruin the ending of the production and thus in a small way to work a swindle upon that audience which had paid real money to hear, not a part, but all of that conversation. The silence continued for at least two or three minutes. Presumably the I-can-tell-by-the-sound chap's ears were not working well that day.

Following this fiasco, things went on all right for a few moments and then the picture suddenly faded entirely from the screen. Evidently something had gone wrong with the light source or optical system. As a matter of fact, a carbon broke off, though why I did not learn. Such a thing as that has not happened for years in thousands of theatres!

Well, gentlemen, this would certainly seem to be enough, but there was more to come, for soon the sound again went blah for at least two full minutes, and later there was a decided discoloration of the light, lasting a minute or two. Query: Did that "I-Can-Tell-by-the-Sound" chap hear the discoloration?

After the performance I made it my business to see the man in charge of projection that day and was advised that the sound went bad for the reason that fuses blew two times "without any apparent reason," and that the stoppage was because a carbon broke off.

At this late day the "without any reason" cannot be accepted. Fuses do not blow without reason. If that equipment had had the daily inspections and tests it should have had, and had been kept in the condition it should have been kept in, those fuses would not have blown. They don't happen in any theatre where things are done as they should be done, and the fault, whatever it may be, lies between the projection staff and the theatre management. I might add that a manager who permits such things to happen, himself stands in need of attention.

It is no pleasure, I assure you, to be obliged to write thus. The man I spoke of as a competent, progressive projectionist has assured me it was not his fault that these various things happened that day, and in that particular I believe him. But just the same he is not entirely blameless, for at the time of my first visit he was one of the two who let a motor run the show while he talked.

CAUSE OF CRACKLING NOISE

AN IOWA projectionist who asks that his name be withheld, says, "We have Western Electric sound equipment. It has given good satisfaction, but not long ago there was a sort of crackling noise which we were unable to locate. The service engineer seldom seems willing to tell us very much. When I asked him, after he had remedied the trouble, what caused it, he said, 'Oh, just a little fault that didn't amount to anything,' and that was all we could get out of him.

"Now, Mr. Richardson, can you tell us what it was? Whatever it was, was in the p. e. cell, I think, as that was all he worked on. The noise was a sort of crackling."

The p. e. cell positive terminal is connected to the amplifier by a small stranded wire, and by reason of the vibration set up by the projector mechanism it (the wire) sometimes breaks, or partly breaks. The crackling sound spoken of may be caused by all but one or two of these tiny wires being broken, so that those remaining are overloaded, and when the broken ends make contact some current jumps through, producing the crackling sound. You may have to examine the wire very closely to find the broken strands. The break will in all human probability be at the soldered connection.

It is also possible that the trouble is in the small fuse located in the p. e. cell

B-battery box, in which case a new fuse must be installed, the old one being defective. If such a trouble cannot be located elsewhere, remove the before named fuse and install a new one. If this stops the noise, why that's that, of course.

FILM DENSITY AND PROJECTION LIGHT

RECENTLY I spent some time talking over various matters with a man who has been director of projection of one of our largest, most important theatre chains for several years. In course of conversation a matter was touched upon which is deserving of very careful consideration by producers.

Said this director of projection, "Producers are today, almost without exception, making films suitable for use only in large theatres in which the most powerful projection light source possible is employed. In other words, they are making films for deluxe theatres and for deluxe theatres only."

"Just exactly what do you mean by that?" I asked.

"I mean that the films of today are so dense that only those theatres having available maximum projection light can properly project them in the best way."

"Your idea is," said I, "that the films now turned out by the developing laboratories are so dense that unless there be a very powerful light source available, all the photographic details contained therein cannot be carried to the screen, hence the screen image will not convey to the audience all that is contained in the film photograph?"

"That is exactly the situation, Mr. Richardson," was the reply.

I had until then given this matter no very serious consideration. Certainly the density of prints has been increased very materially of late. The man in question is most certainly in position to form an intelligent opinion. His company has theatres of all classes. It is a part of his duty as director of projection to observe all those things which operate to make projection less effective. It is his duty to analyze those various things which affect projection, particularly if they work injury.

If what he says is true, then the matter assumes very grave proportions, because of the fact that only in deluxe theatres, plus possibly a limited number of smaller theatres having an exceptionally powerful light source, can project prints to the screen at their full entertainment values.

I do not know what the proportion of deluxe theatres is to those of other different classes, but certainly it is quite small. At a guess I would say the proportion could hardly exceed one deluxe to nine of the lesser classes. Assuming, however, that half of our theatres have light sources of maximum power, and therefore can properly project the present films at their full value, we would still have inferior screen results in all the others—assuming, of course, that the charge made is true.

As against that it may be conceded, I think, that the more dense print will have a

SYNCROFILM

Profits from the outstanding quality of Syncrofilm performance may now be made by small theatres. The clearest, purest voices and music are as available to the house with a limited budget as to the palace with endless funds.

The basic principle of Syncrofilm—four times the light on the photo-cell—is embodied in Syncrofilm machines.

Syncrofilm is built for both battery and A C power operation, for Simplex, Motiograph and Powers projectors. So, whatever the size of your house, or the make of your machine, you can have the extra profits earned by perfect sound—and your outlay will be strictly in keeping with your income.

Write us the size of your house and the make of your projector. We guarantee satisfaction from the Syncrofilm you get, or give you back your money.

better contrast value (or value in photographic contrasts, if that suits you better) than would prints less dense. Still it would hardly seem that this advantage is worth serious injury to results in those theatres unable to have, or at least not using such a powerful illuminant.

It may be argued that all theatres should use a maximum power light source, but that cannot possibly be. In thousands of small cities and towns there is not the necessary amount of current available. Also, in thousands of theatres the expense would be too great.

Gentlemen, this is a matter of very real importance, or so it seems to me. It certainly should be, at least, to small town and village theatres. I would be glad to hear from theatres in which the projection of dense films is difficult. If you have had trouble projecting films of today stand forth and be heard. If enough of you do so to make it worth while, the matter will be taken up with the producers.

ANGLES OF PROJECTION

OF LATE I have had several inquiries from exhibitors, and at least two from companies, asking as to the advisibility of decreasing projection angles at the cost of some seats. In nearly all cases the loss of seats would be rather small and in every case their inclusion would force the use of an angle considerably in excess of 15°. In three cases it would exceed 20°.

One exhibitor who owns three theatres said, "I well know your objection to heavy projection angles, Mr. Richardson. I have followed your department and your books for many years and have found your teachings to be almost invariably good. I am about to have plans drawn for a new house to seat about 900, and wish to have your advice. The plans I have in mind would call for a projection angle of about 20°. I have as yet only pencil-sketched them and cannot tell exactly what it would be, but the angle would approximate the figure named.

"I could, however, locate the projection room elsewhere, but only at the cost of seating capacity which would amount to about thirty seats. And now I get down to the point I want you to consider. I am sure you were quite right in condemning high projection angles in the old days, but not so certain you are right now. Excessive projection angles have been the rule for many years. Is it not a fact that theatre patrons have become so used to distortion that a picture of normal size would look a bit queer to them. People grow to like those things they are accustomed to."

There was considerable more, but I have quoted sufficient to convey the idea this exhibitor desired to set forth; namely, that because continued use of excessive angles have accustomed theatres patrons to heavy picture distortion, distortion is now less objectionable.

What this exhibitor says may to some extent be true. People do become accustomed to many things which are not in the least beautiful, and finally come rather to like them. (Take the absurd, ridiculous "bustle" women once wore, or the leg-o'-mutton sleeves!) Yes, what this exhibitor says is somewhat true, I think. People have become accustomed to picture distortion. Some of them have had it before their eyes for so long that they might actually find a normal picture to look a bit queer. But the fact remains that they would find the undistorted picture much the more beautiful of the two, particularly if the distortion be considerable.

And now here is the proposition as I have always seen it, and still see it: There are three distinct things upon which the motion picture depends for its attraction, insofar as has to do with the public. First, the production, whatever it may be, must have real dramatic, scenic or educational interest. Second, it must be so impressed upon the prints that it will be possible for the theatre projectionist to project a clear, sharp picture having good contrast values. Third, it must be placed before audiences by the projectionist as a clear, sharp, snappy picture, free from flicker, neither under- nor over-illuminated and projected exactly at the rate of 90 feet of film per minute.

Distortion, as usually understood in motion picture projection, is the "stretching" of the picture vertically in varying amount, the amount being dependent upon the height of the projection angle, but evenly throughout its width, and the stretching of its width unevenly from top to bottom.

Now, gentlemen, can it possibly be successfully argued that a motion picture thus abused will be as pleasing and beautiful as one that is of normal dimensions. In extreme projection angles we will have the spectacle of a man or woman increased by fully one-quarter in height, with feet entirely out of proportion to the head. That is exactly the situation, though the amount of "stretching" will, of course, depend entirely upon the amount of projection angle. At low angles—say, less than 15°—it will be too slight to be seriously objectionable.

And now here is my argument: A part of the attraction to any theatre is the beauty of its screen image. No theatre I ever heard of has all its seats filled at all of its shows. It just is not done. There are empty seats in practically all theatres every day. Is it not logical to presume that, allowing the locating of the projection room so that there will be little or no distortion will sacrifice some seats, if by increasing the beauty of the screen image all other seats are made more valuable, may it not be worth while, and in fact good practice to sacrifice those seats?

Admitting this to be a rather hard thing for the exhibitor to accept as fact, it nevertheless is fact, though whether or no the improvement in beauty of the screen image will be sufficient to fill enough of the aforesaid empty seats to compensate, or more than compensate for the seating loss, is open to argument. Personally, I am firmly of the opinion it will be more than sufficient if the projection angle would be excessive—say, more than 18°—were the seating not sacrificed to make room for the projection room lower down.

BE SURE TO CLEAN THE SOUND GATE!

MAY I AGAIN direct your attention to the imperative necessity for making sure the Western Electric sound gate is perfectly clean before you thread in each film?

Don't get the idea that because you cleaned it, or found it to be clean at the last threading, it will be clean at the next one. Perhaps it will; also, perhaps it won't, and the careful projectionist will be certain it is clean at every threading.

Failure to keep the sound gate clean may not only injure the show, but also work injury to all future shows given with those films by scratching the sound band. Failure to have the sound gate clean may ruin the sound band of an entire reel, and it would not be altogether unfair if the guilty man were made to pay for the damage. True, he doubtless would put up a terrific kick, but I'll bet dollars to hard-boiled, no-account eggs that he would thereafter be very sure that the sound gate was perfectly clean at every threading.

It would be unpleasant for the projectionist to have to pay for a ruined reel of film, but some one has to pay for it and the loss is no more pleasant to them than it is to the man through whose negligence the damage was done.

Never thread in a film until you are certain that the sound gate parts are perfectly clean.

Another thing which should have more attention than it usually receives is the idlers immediately above the sound aperture. These idlers must move freely or they may and probably will become cut, so that the film may move or sway sidewise, under which condition either the edges of the sprocket holes, or the dividing line between the film photograph and the sprocket holes, may project slightly over the sound gate, whereupon there will be a humming noise set up—which will be no improvement to the sound.

A WAIL ABOUT THE STANDARD PRINT

A PENNSYLVANIA projectionist writes:

"Dear Pop Richardson: Will you listen to a wail from one who began by turning the crank of a Powers 5 and an Edison exhibition model?

"To begin with, the standard release print is being abused to the point of disgrace. This is a second-run theatre using De Forest equipment. We use sound-on-film only. I have been using these films for some time and to date not a single S. R. P. has been perfect—not by a long shot. The cues are gone, the leaders have been badly cut, some of them as far back as within a couple of frame of "3." Fade-outs are missing, and so it goes. From the projectionist's standpoint, I am telling you, it is a terrible situation.

"The following is a result of studying the S. R. P. with its relation to the projectionist. It is not to be considered as Red propaganda, but just the way it looks to me. I believe by using my glasses you will see it as I do.

"The prints coming in on 1,000-foot reels almost compel me to double up as before. If I don't double, the boss asks why I don't and I nearly go crazy trying to fit sound with the picture at the end of every reel. Recently my assistant was fired because of 'poor business.' I am now running the whole works and getting away with it, but it is a situation that is going to develop into something that will cause plenty of bitter feelings as other theatres take up the idea of one man doing all the work, and at a lower scale, too. There is no necessity for a personal reply to this letter, but may I see a few lines in our department concerning it?"

Insofar as has to do with the Standard Release Print, there is no question but what the condition you set forth is met with by a very large number of projectionists in second run houses. There is one trouble with matters of this kind. The Standard Release Print was evolved by laboratory men and projectionists concerned entirely with high class theatres. I doubt if there was any consultation at all with any representative of those thousands upon thousands of second and third-run theatre projectionists.

I hold that these latter have a right to be consulted in matters of this kind. The conditions under which they work are radically different from the conditions under which first run projectionists work—so very different that if you took a big city downtown man out into the country and put him into a theatre, using the stuff many of these men are given to produce shows from, he would hardly know what to do.

I believe the Standard Release Print is basically all right so long as it is kept in good condition. I believe that when it is permitted to run down into the condition set forth by Friend Reed, it might well be worse than nothing at all.

It seems to me that since the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences has produced this device and has caused its adoption, it is up to the Academy to find means for compelling exchanges to maintain the S. R. P. in at least a reasonably perfect condition for so long as they are used. I believe, too, that this might be accomplished, at least in very large measure. It is unfair and unjust to the thousands of smaller houses to permit the condition described to exist, and that it does exist is beyond question.

SOME CAUSES OF EYE STRAIN

IN AN ARTICLE in a recent issue of The Bioscope, London, England, a trade paper, I noticed the statement that flicker "is undoubtedly the one tangible basis for charges of eye strain."

Whoever wrote that article knew but little about eye strain as applies to motion pictures. Flicker has now dropped into third or fourth place in importance when we consider motion pictures and eye strain. There are two elements which set up eye strain fully equal to, if not superior to, flicker. They are lack of sharpness of focus, and glare spots, in which latter the screen of many theatres may itself be included.

It is almost an unheard of thing for flicker to be noticeable on the theatre screen, though it is of course nevertheless there, since about half the time the screen is not illuminated at all, while the rest of the time it is more or less brilliantly illuminated—usually more, rather than less.

I have said, and now again say, that very many theatres are using too much screen illumination, and in so doing set up very serious eye strain. Not only is this true because of the tremendous contrast between the lighted and unlighted periods, but also for the reason that the human eye is uncomfortable under the action of a too-brilliant illumination.

I would suggest to President Crabtree of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers that it would be helpful if he could have tests made in which at least 50 persons took part, by illuminating a theatre screen of average reflection power, in increasing carefully measured steps, making note prior to each such increase as to how many find the illumination uncomfortable. This should be carried forward until the limit of illumination is reached, or all have declared the last stage used to be uncomfortable.

True, such a test might not be an altogether fair one, since no film is to be used, but I nevertheless believe it would serve a very useful purpose. Having this data it seems to me that it would not be difficult to ascertain the drop caused by the insertion of clear film, and it is of course the "clear" spots (skies, etc.) that overstrain the eyes.

As to lack of fineness of definition setting up eye strain, there can be no reasonable doubt about that, nor can he who watches projection fail to understand that definition is seldom at its best on theatre screens. True, it usually is fairly good—in fact, good enough to set up no serious eye strain. But also not infrequently it is very far from good, because not only is the lens not set exactly right, but also all horizontal lines in the screen image are more or less blurred by the fact that there is some travel ghost.

It should require but a moment of consideration to convince any one at all familiar with projection that travel ghost does induce or set up eye strain. Certainly it must and does pull the whites up or down over the darker shades of photography, and in the very nature of things in so doing it blurs the horizontal lines and decreases contrast. It cannot possibly be otherwise, and blurred lines mean eye strain. If you don't believe it, try to read a blurred typewritten carbon copy for a while and see how your eyes feel.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

IN THE FALL of 1928, the town of Gore Bay built a small theatre seating 400 people. This theatre was built of stone with a metallic roof, steel lath and plaster. The size is 45 x 85 feet. It was built according to government specifications and passed by the motion picture department.

This year there has been a lot of changes in the law as regarding motion picture theatres, and our theatre has been condemned as not being fire-proof. The reason is that this theatre has a hard wood floor.

What would you suggest as to the making of the floor so that it would pass the new regulations. We must do something that will make this floor fire-proof, and we would appreciate it if you could help us out.—T. R. P.

The Answer:

I AM SORRY not to be familiar with building laws covering theatre buildings in your territory. I cannot understand if the motion picture department approved your plans only three years ago that they would condemn the theatre now, unless you are doing some remodeling at the present time.

You did not state whether there is a basement under the auditorium. If the floor lays on the ground, why not take it up and build a concrete floor in its place.

In some localities, the department will allow you to fire-proof under the joists by lathing same with heavy metal lath and plaster, with 2-inch plaster underneath. If you have the space under the joists to do so, this would be the least expensive.

The Question:

I HAVE A theatre 22x110 feet, with a 15-foot ceiling, seating 322. In this same building is another room with about the same dimensions. In other words, the entire building covering the two store rooms is approximately 45x110 feet, brick with three floors. Separating the two first floors (theatre and vacant store room) is a false wall with steel columns and beams running lengthwise. We would like to know what you think of throwing the two rooms together and about what the seating capacity would be. It would all be on one floor.

We thought probably you could furnish us some sketches showing modern treatment of just such a condition as we have. If you have any plans or information on the treatment of conditions such as we have, we would like to look them over. We would like to know just the treatment as to height, location of booth, arrangement of lobby and entrance. If posts are used inside of theatre to take the place of supports between the two rooms, just how would they be placed in connection with the seating arrangement.

Do you think we would gain 600 seats with two small store rooms on each side of the entrance, or would you suggest using the entire front as a theatre lobby?

Do you know of a modern arrangement where the booth is placed on the main floor, center, with entrances on either side?

Do you know of a condition of this kind being changed into a ramp theatre, or is the ceiling too low for a ramp on either side?

The Answer:

I AM absolutely against advising you to remodel these two buildings into a theatre the way you suggest. Under no circumstances do not think of having a row of columns stand in the middle of the auditorium, as the majority of your patrons will not be able to see the screen on account of the vision lines being blocked by the columns. Since there are three floors above your theatre, you will have quite a serious problem supporting the upper structure. If the steel beams supporting the upper wall run lengthwise, it is not impossible to install cross-beams, taking the support where the columns are.

If you could lower your auditorium floor you might get by. It will be impossible to gain 600 seats. You will need about 40 feet for lobby, foyer, apron and space between front row and screen, leaving 70 feet for seats, which will give you 28 rows, figuring a center section of 13 seats with a 3-foot aisle on each side, giving you four seats in a row along walls, making 21 seats across the house with a total seating capacity of 588 seats. The booth could be placed behind the last row of seats in the middle section. Your ceiling is too low to consider a ramp, and there will be no space for stores, as you will need room for women's and men's rest rooms.

The Question:

I AM CONTEMPLATING construction of a theatre on a lot 30x80 feet. There are buildings on both sides of the lot extending the entire depth and to a height of about 35 feet. The owners of these have given permission to use the existing walls. We do not wish any more stage than is necessary for horn installation, probably five or six feet. With about a 9-foot lobby, and a 6-foot foyer, how many seats could we get on main floor alone? How many additional seats could we get if we were to build in a balcony? What method of heating and ventilation would you suggest? Where would you suggest putting women's and men's rest rooms? What would be the approximate cost, exclusive of equipment?

The Answer:

I AM AFRAID that 30x80 feet is not very large for a theatre. From this depth you must deduct nine feet for lobby, six feet for foyer, three feet for wall thickness, at least 12 feet from first row of seats to stage, leaving space available for seats 50 feet or 20 rows.

The house being 30 feet wide would give you 13 seats in a row, with 3-foot aisles on each side, making your total seating capacity 260 seats. I do not think you have enough room for a balcony, as the building is between two existing ones, not leaving any space for fire exits from the balcony, and you need space on each side of lobby for women's and men's rest rooms. They should open from the foyer.

For such a small house, you could use a hot air system for heating and ventilating, as this will be the most economical. I think $12,000 to $15,000 would build this building, as you already have the sidewalls and, of course, equipment is not included.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

Paper: Theatre Design

REVERSING THE FORM AND INCLINATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE FLOOR

[The following is a paper presented before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at its last convention, in Los Angeles in May, 1931, by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, presenting two new forms affecting the present floor: one reversing the slope of the orchestra floor so that it ascends, rather than descends, in its approach toward the screen; the other changing the horizontal angles of the seats in relation to the screen. Also, in this readjustment, the balcony pitch is reduced. This innovation was the subject of a discussion in BETTER THEATRES of July 6. The following is Mr. Schlanger's paper itself, as read by him before the S. M. P. E. convention, and as subsequently published in the S. M. P. E. Journal. Appended to the paper is the stenographic report supplied the author by the S. M. P. E., of the discussion which followed the reading of the paper at the convention.]

IT IS quite striking that with all the interest displayed during the past fifty years in the theatre arts, we have concerned ourselves so little with the theatre itself. This statement is made advisedly, fully appreciating the difference in general appearance between what today's theatre presents and the theatre of fifty years ago, and also giving due cognizance to the plaster turrets and twinkling stars that have become a theatre art in themselves during the last decade. Our present theatre is the circular stadium of the Greeks plus the balconied enclosure of the Elizabethans, with the proscenium arch as it was added to this structural form. There have been no changes. We are still using this form, even for a theatre art so radically different from the stage as the motion picture.

There are, of course, many theatres in which motion picture and stage performances are combined. These combinations came into rather wide usage about fifteen years ago and are still retained, but to a smaller extent than in the period just prior to the introduction of the talking picture.

The theatre, as we accepted it with slight change from our predecessors, was little adapted to the exhibition of the silent motion picture. We have come to realize that it is even more poorly suited to the presentation of sound film entertainment. And now the enlarged screen threatens to render the standard theatre form obsolete in more points than ever.

Basically, the essential principles of a good theatre form are the same for both the stage and screen theatre. The difference lies in the degree to which, and the method by which, these principles must be enforced. All theatres should furnish a clear view of the performance, should permit the patron to easily hear and understand the sounds of the performance, and provide for him the proper comfort and safety. Strangely enough, these basic principles, more inexorable than ever in the motion picture theatre, have been obscured by those of mere decoration. With all other fields of architecture moving forward, the motion picture theatre, weirdly reacting to its modern mechanicalism, has somehow taken on surroundings savoring of oriental voluptuousness.

In the motion picture theatre, vision must be more delicately dealt with than ever, because the screen performance is a thing of sheer light. Audibility must be more meticulously cared for, because the sounds of the screen are greatly amplified sounds. Perhaps we need not insist on more comfort for the movie fan than for anyone else, but it may be pointed out that good acoustics and good vision contribute to the patron's comfort as much as do well upholstered seats and ample ventilation.

The theatre forms concerned in this paper embrace all three of the principles named. More directly, however, they affect vision. Good vision depends on the disposition of the sight lines, and the physical substance of the motion picture representation requires very special consideration of this disposition, while the problem is even further extended by the enlarged screen.

The sight lines, as now fixed in the present type of theatre, cause the spectator to sit with much bodily discomfort and frequently with a distorted view of the screen. On the orchestra floor level, the present arrangement requires (except at the extreme rear of a deep auditorium) that the spectator tilt his head backward to see the upper portions of the screen, the amount of tilt reaching a somewhat painful degree. This is due to the fact that the chairs are placed on a floor that is sloping downward toward the screen, the level of the floor being, in most parts, about even with the bottom of the screen. In the balcony, the steep angle makes it necessary for the patron to pitch his body forward in order to view a screen that is at a level which is in most cases below that of the greater part of the balcony. Study has shown that it is impossible to correct these faults without entirely disregarding the present theatre forms and creating new ones.

In endeavoring to correct the faults of the present type of orchestra seating, the author has developed a plan in which the slope of the orchestra floor is reversed, bringing the high point of the floor nearer the screen instead of the low point, as is now the case in the present type of theatre. The screen is raised above the level of the eye line of the first row of seats nearest the screen. This plan includes a systematic tilting of the backs of the chairs on the reversed orchestra floor slope (Fig. 1). By tilting the body backward and permitting the higher part of the floor in front of the seat to support the feet, a natural and comfortable position is assumed which allows the spectator to obtain a complete view of the screen without having to raise his head from its natural position. Seats on the orchestra level more remote from the screen require less tilt. Fig. 3 shows the system of lessening the tilts of the backs of the chairs. The angle of tilt in each case is perpendicular to a line of sight drawn from the eye level to a point on the screen about one-third the height of the screen, measured from the bottom. It is at this height of the screen where most of the action takes place and where the spectator's eye is chiefly focused. The angle formed between the back of the chair and the seat is 98 degrees and is kept constant for each and every chair. This angle has been found to be most conducive to correct and restful posture. Heretofore, only the placing of the seat and the screen were taken into consideration in determining sight lines, the matter of posture being entirely disregarded. Realizing that variously inclined surfaces are used in theatre structures, it seems almost incredible that more consideration was not given to the inclination of the chairs. The reversed slope of the orchestra floor permits establishing a definite relation between the inclination of the floor and that of the seat. It would be impossible to apply this system of tilting to the present slope of the orchestra floor because the proper angle of the seat with respect to the back of the chair could not be maintained without leaving the feet unsupported. Sight lines from the orchestra level cannot, therefore, be improved for screen entertainment unless the slope of the orchestra floor is reversed.

While this arrangement distinctly improves the orchestra seating, it also serves as a means by which the complete form of the theatre may be revised to suit the requirements of the screen performance. The faults of the present orchestra seating are greatly magnified when the enlarged screen is used, because the spectator then has to tilt his head backward even further than is now necessary with the small screen. And so the enlarged screen has also served as an important agent in determining a new form for the theatre structure.

Reversing the slope of the orchestra floor also brings many decided advantages to the balcony, which can now be kept low and of a slight pitch, made possible by the low point of the rear of the reversed orchestra floor. The balcony thus becomes more desirable for two reasons: (1) due to the fact that the level of the screen is very much the same as that of the balcony the sight lines are greatly improved and, (2) direct and easy access to the balcony from the street level is provided, the difference in levels being surprisingly small. This is made possible by reducing the pitch of the balcony and by placing the rear of the orchestra slightly below the street level (Fig. 1). This plan requires only a few steps and a small easy ramp from the lobby to the orchestra level.

Although the requirements of good acoustics and motion picture projection might have been secondary considerations in this instance, they were by no means disregarded. The shape of the auditorium, as developed from this new disposition of sight lines, lends itself to a better acoustic form and provides for a smaller angle of projection than the shape of the present type of theatre. The projector is lowered to a level almost even with the top of the screen.

Besides meeting the requirements of good motion picture exhibition, this form of theatre is also economical to build. Fig. 1 shows, by means of dotted lines, the form of the present type of theatre compared with the new form, the latter being indicated by the heavy solid outline. Note the reduction in the height of the entire structure, due to the low level of the balcony and the projection booth.

and Fig. 2 has a seating capacity of 1700 seats, the outside dimensions of the structure being 90 feet in width and 140 feet in length. The average interior height is about 36 feet. The screen used for this theatre is 22 feet high and 36 feet wide. A theatre of these dimensions was selected in this instance for two reasons: firstly, because the dimensions are practically controlled by the requirements for good vision and hearing, and secondly, because its seating capacity would be that of the average motion picture theatre. To design a theatre for a greater seating capacity it would be advisable to use a somewhat larger screen, increase the distance between the first row of seats and the screen, increase the distance between the screen and the front facia of the balcony, and then to place the additional rows of seats at the rear of the orchestra and balcony, respectively. Of course, there is a limit as to how far back from the screen seats may be placed and yet maintain coordination of vision and hearing. It is also inadvisable to make the width of the theatre too great for the angle of vision necessary for the large screen. Fig. 2 shows the maximum angle of vision as 108 degrees in relation to the screen. Seats placed outside this angle would afford a distorted view of the screen. The smaller screen permits a more obtuse angle of vision, which accounts for the fan shape of many existing theatres. A smaller theatre than the one shown in Fig. 1 and Fig. 2, using a large screen, could also be designed according to this new plan by reversing the process described for increasing the size.

Fig. 2 shows the seating arrangement of the orchestra and balcony, considering the larger screen. There are here incorporated two definite changes from the present type of seating. One is the reversal of the front curve used as a guide outline for the seating block. This was necessary because the ends of the curve now in use would cause a certain number of seats to be too close to the screen and too much to one side. The other change consists of eliminating the present system of concentric arcs and introducing in its stead a system of angles in the side banks. The plans in Fig. 2 show sight lines drawn from the center of the screen to about the center of several rows of seats. The backs of the seats are made perpendicular to the sight lines. This allows the spectator to view the complete width of the screen without having to twist his body or lose the support of the back of the chair. In the present seating arrangement the backs of many chairs face in a direction which does not afford the spectator a direct view of the enlarged screen unless he twists his body away from the back of the chair. Even if the present arrangement of concentric arcs were used in a theatre employing a large screen, the spectators would unconsciously face in the direction suggested by the sight lines in Fig. 2.

It might seem from the nature of this paper, that the problems thus far presented are of a purely practical nature and that some disregard might have been shown for the esthetic and decorative considerations of the interior of the theatre. This is not the case—it is necessary to get in behind the turrets, classic columns, and archways to see what really exists. These architectural features have always so bedecked the theatre as to obscure that which was functional and expressive of its purpose. Of all the fields of architectural endeavor, what branch could so well express itself as the motion picture theatre—an architecture inspired by a mechanism which so delicately transmits various degrees of light and sound? Why not an architecture for the theatre interior that would be limited to the treatment of the intensity, placement, and projection of light in its various moods? The very art of the theatre should demand more intangible surroundings than those which are obtained by garden walls and other finite unchangeable forms. The larger screen will to a great extent determine the treatment of the interior, its very size making it an integral part of the auditorium.

Generally, the form and treatment of the motion picture theatre depends largely on the progress made by the technicians. Ten years ago the presence of a theatre architect at a meeting of motion picture engineers would have been unlikely. Today the architect must come to them to assimilate the many advances which have been made and to incorporate them into his creation of a modern motion picture theatre. Never before in the history of the motion picture industry has there been such a need for a common understanding between the technician and the architect. What of all this progress which has been made in the science of motion pictures? Where will the results be utilized? Will it all finally resolve into a little machine in the home in which will be heard and seen pygmy images of people in the midst of dwarfed backgrounds? Or will there be an auditorium that is so motivating and complementary to a large screen presenting a large panorama of figures against backgrounds whose scale in relation to the viewer will be so impressive as to make a home television set a toy?

[The following is a stenographic report of the discussion which followed reading of the paper by Mr. Schlanger, the discussion taking place on the floor of the convention. The discussion appears below as given in the report, without editing.]

THE DISCUSSION

Leavier: Mr. Schlanger's paper leads me to believe that at last the projectionist has found a friend. Many millions of dollars are being spent on the very fine theatres which are being built, but the importance of angle of projection appears to have been overlooked. Therefore, the suggestions made in Mr. Schlanger's paper are very timely and represent a real step in the right direction, whereby the projectionist will come into his own, and the theatre will be assured of having an angle of projection in which pictures of rooms will not be distorted as they are in present day theatres, where every means must be employed on the design of the apparatus to remove or compensate for the distortion resulting from disregard for this important factor.

Palmer: One of the things that we say a great deal about in the motion picture is the "box-office," and I can see a rather ominous factor in this theatre design in that the fellow who attends such a theatre must necessarily go downstairs for the orchestra seat. I am afraid that if he has to do this he is going to gain the impression that he is sitting in the basement and will therefore be reluctant to pay as much for an orchestra seat as he is willing to pay at the present time. Such a feature would appear to me to present a rather serious obstacle.

Schlanger: I want to correct the impression that you appear to have in regard to the necessity of going down to a basement to get to the orchestra seat. This theatre is so designed that there would be no more than two or three steps, plus a ramp with a slope no steeper than the one in this auditorium, and thus one would scarcely be conscious of having to go down to an orchestra seat. It is even possible to place the rear of the orchestra floor at the street level. However, the slight depression of the orchestra is a decided improvement in making the balcony more accessible. Such an arrangement would provide a greater amount of good seats than is now available in the present type of theatre, and it would thus assure greater box office returns.

Fear: One of the first things Mr. Schlanger said was that this theoretical theatre had a seating capacity of about 1,700 seats. That, I think, is considered a moderately small house, and theatres of that size seldom have balconies. The modern trend of design is toward the stadium type of construction. Another point which I want to discuss in connection with Mr. Schlanger's paper is that I believe such a design would be very unsatisfactory acoustically. The auditorium in the Salt Lake City church is of a type which is probably one of the most nearly perfect acoustical auditoriums ever built, and acoustical engineers are striving to achieve the same results in the design of other buildings. The third point I wanted to bring out is in connection with Mr. Palmer's statement to the effect that at the present time the motion picture industry has a five hundred million dollar indebtedness primarily upon new theatres. There are very few new theatres being built at the present time, due not only to the huge bonded indebtedness, but due most probably to the fact that there is one seat for every ten people in the United States, and that the normal attendance of 150 million people daily does not fill the houses to their capacity. In the small theatres, say those with a seating capacity of under 2,500, the motion picture with sound is the primary attraction. In the majority of theatres which are larger than that, the exhibitor has found it necessary to add the stage show, and with the type of construction which Schlanger has been describing, it would be practically impossible to have a flesh show, and the latter has seemed to be necessary in deluxe houses. In fact, even second-rate houses at the present time have been putting on flesh shows in order to stimulate attendance. There is another point in respect to the small house with the large screen. I believe that a house of 1,700 seats would never require a large screen. We found that when Warner Brothers locally put on a large screen 22x40 wide screen picture, the people in the first few rows got up and moved back. If that is true in a deluxe theatre of the size of Warner's, I do not see how you can show much larger pictures in a small house.

Schlanger: For the purpose of justifying each and every portion of the statements made here, I would like to answer each one separately, because these constitute severe criticisms which are based on present-day conditions. I can start with the question of the large screen which you mention as having been employed with difficulty at the local Warner Brothers theatre. I do not remember if I mentioned it, but in the design which I suggested the screen was placed sufficiently far away from the first row of seats, so that nobody would need to get up and walk away from the screen in order to gain the needed distance. This brings in the question of the balcony.

Due to the large screen, considerable space must be provided for the distance required between the screen and the first row of seats in the theatre, and therefore the economy of ground area is a very important consideration. Obviously, in order to get 1,700 seats in a minimum of ground area, the logical solution would be the addition of the balcony. You cannot get such a number of seats in the small space unless you use the type of theatre suggested. A stadium would require a much larger lot.

Now as to the acoustical condition, I would like to get the expression of some of the engineers here as to why a form so extremely simple, shaped like a megaphone, should not be satisfactory acoustically. That requires some acoustical engineer's opinion. I do not know whether I read that part of the paper, but the disposition of the sight lines brings down the cost of the building, due to the flatter lines, lower balconies and lower projection booths—all of which tend to lessen the height of structure, which represents cubic area of saving. The statement in regard to stage shows is very interesting.

I think my paper included something on that subject. I mentioned that at the present time there are stage shows and that probably there will be a need of them in order to promote box office receipts. But I hope and think, and there are many others who hope, that the motion picture will be developed to such a point that there will be no need of flesh performance. Again in that respect there will be vaudeville theatres and very likely there will be so many more movie theatres than stage theatres. The practice of sending out road-shows for vaudeville is being eliminated. The elimination of the orchestra pit is no reason why one cannot be put there if required. It can be placed in front or at the side. A pit can easily be built in, as there is plenty of space between the front row of seats and the screen.

Shea: I recommend that the sound committee investigate the acoustical problems in this suggestion. One of the problems to consider is the elimination of the pocket under the balcony, which appears in so many of the present theatres.

Schlanger: The design of the balcony in this theatre has the ceiling underneath the balcony rising upward toward the screen, instead of as in present theatres, where the front of the balcony is the low point. In all cases an attempt is made to have surfaces that will not distort the sound. The simplicity of the design can be carried out to help the acoustics. I might state that this paper is intended to show a new way of disposing of the sight line. I could in the next five minutes make 20 more sketches using the same system of sight lines and achieve any form of theatre of a successful type, and therefore there is no limit to the diagram shown on the screen.

Shea: I think Mr. Schlanger's slide indicated some improvement over present conditions. Probably the conditions under the balcony are contributing to the distortion of sound passing over the audience in the restricted area under the balcony.

Falge: Regarding Mr. Palmer's discussion on the necessity of going downstairs, there is the other problem of going upstairs. Theatres cannot sell balconies today, as nobody wants to go up. But that would not prove serious. In regard to flesh shows, as Mr. Fear brought out, we may lose sight of the fact that the majority of theatres in the country do not have them because of the high overhead connected with them, especially in theatres having a seating capacity of 2,000 to 2,500 seats. Right now they do not know which way to turn on the flesh show problem. All large circuits have reduced flesh shows a great deal. I do not know whether Mr. Schlanger brought out the fact that there was saving of space resulting from the fact that when some of the lower basement space is used you do not have to go so high up. In regard to the screen size, Mr. Fear mentioned that the large circuits today are putting in screen sizes of 36 feet or larger in order to use what Paramount refers to as "Magnescope" for the purpose of effect, rather than large picture size. It is used just for particular shots, and it is quite effective and standard today and is important therefore from that standpoint.

Chauncey Green: With respect to the question that has been raised regarding the tendency of the people to move back from the larger screen, I am wondering if perhaps the engineers have not developed something recently which could be of great use in conserving space, but a copy of the Nela Park work, and really some remarkable impressions of perspective and of distance were gained by the use of curved and combinations of curving and flat illuminated surfaces, and at the time I saw them, they struck me that a comparatively inexpensive change in the design of a proscenium vicinity might be done in the place of certain existing theatres which would result in a great increase in the pleasing perspective of a larger screen located close to the observer.

Schlanger: An interesting point brought out here was the proscenium, which was mentioned in relation to the large screen. I failed in this paper to bring out the feature of the elimination of a fixed proscenium between the audience and the screen. It would be a great thing if the forms immediately preceding the screen would be changeable. The setting would not have to be of a structural quality having ornamental plaster and supporting beams. The proscenium could be arranged in such a manner as to give an effect which would best suit the tempo of the picture being shown—that would be one way by which the individual owner or manager could heighten the effect of the show.

Fear: This question of the size of the screen goes back to fundamental motion pictures. That more or less determines the size of the picture we can show without grain. The distance of the screen from the observer determines the amount that the grain effects it. Primarily the introduction of large pictures was for the reason of vision in large houses. The larger the picture the larger the house, and the farther the spectator is away from the screen the harder it is to see the definition of detail on the smaller screen. In the smaller house, say in a 1,700-seat house, there is no difficulty encountered in distinguishing all details of a screen 16x24, in three to four proportion. As larger houses come into use it is necessary to increase the size of the screen, but not for smaller houses. The more grain in the picture, the greater the eye-strain or the greater the concentration necessary to follow the picture. In a small theatre it would only be a critical point, but it would be a point that would obtrude on the audience, because they would have a three-ring circus effect, of which they have already complained in the presence of large screens.

Schlanger: I am very glad that that point was brought out. This is an absolute misunderstanding as to the use of the large screen. The question just brought out deals purely with the technical development of large screen pictures, and I hope that this large screen will be so developed that it will do away with these imperfections. The reason the screen was enlarged was due not only to the fact that the larger the theatre became the larger the screen that was needed. I believe that the reason which the artist in the production field had in enlarging the screen was the relationship of objects to scale, and the relationship of the performer to his background. The possibilities of the large screen are so many that I should think that only the director could express them. But the reason the screen was enlarged was not only because the theatre was enlarged, as was brought out in the last discussion.

Jones: I haven't anything in particular to say except that I feel like congratulating the author of this paper. Of course it is a radical departure and when anything new is proposed there are always a million reasons given as to why it cannot be done. The paper I think is extremely stimulating. I would not like to commit myself regarding the actual feasibility of what has been proposed, as that is something which requires a great deal of thought, but I believe we have been very fortunate in having a paper of stimulating and imaginative as Mr. Schlanger's paper; and we only hope that the future will bring something better than we have had in the past, and whether or not the design suggested will be the ultimate practical form, does not detract from the value of the paper which brings to our attention many of the things which can be accomplished. I have expressed myself often to the effect that in the past the theatre has been built and the optics of the motion picture put into it. Here is a serious attempt to build a theatre around the optics of the motion picture, and personally I congratulate the author for the stimulating paper, as it is something we will have to think about and anaylze—consequently, for my own part, I am very delighted with the paper.

Auditorium and projection room of the Sarphie theatre in Brookhaven, Miss., just completely outfitted by the National Theatre Supply Company. Equipment supplied included ventilating machinery, Walker-American sound screen, scenery and draperies, upholstered steel chairs, Nathco Auditec acoustical panels, carpeting, lobby frames and complete projection equipment

Dieterich: I want to express a great gratification in the applied optical principles which Mr. Schlanger has shown in his designs, from the point of view of easing up the spectator and the question of looking at the screen, and that includes the large screen, as the distance from the object depends upon the ease of looking at something. That we have to move back in certain theatres when a large picture is shown results from the fact that in looking at an object, strain is caused by the axis of the eye being made to view farther than 30 inches on each side. The first row should be placed in such a position and at such a distance from the screen as to permit a 60-inch angle of view. So if a maximum picture of 36 inches be shown, we should have a minimum distance in the first row from the screen of about 50 feet. The inclination of the whole head and body makes it easy to look up at this distance, because the head is inclined backward and the need of the head rest might be considered in such cases. We have about 30 feet allowable for viewing a picture up and down. So I believe that the structural principles as outlined will help you to make it easier to look at the screen, which feature will affect the box office returns to an advantageous extent.

Schlanger: I appreciate your suggestion as to the need of the head rest. I have looked into this matter and checked up on the subject and have found that the vertical axis of gravity in relation to the inclination of the body, as it is thrown back to view the picture in the structure I have suggested, would obviate the need for a head rest. Even the greatest tilt to be encountered in the seats nearest the screen in such a theatre would not necessitate a head rest. The inclination of the body in all seats would be perfectly comfortable in viewing the screen—even from the first row.

or unreasonable on the grounds that the license fee is excessive in consideration of the small income derived from any particular business, providing other businesses of similar nature can well afford to pay the license fee.

For instance, in Irvine vs. Bergman (295 S. W. 1041), it was disclosed that a man named Bergman sued to prevent the city from collecting a license on the contention that his net profits from the business were too small to justify payment of the license. However, it is interesting to observe that the higher court held Bergman bound to pay the license fee, and said:

"The test is whether the tax bears so heavily on a class, not isolated and exceptional individuals, as to prohibit the occupation—as to be confiscatory . . . We have never hesitated to declare a license fee or tax discretion and imposed a license tax that was prohibitive, unreasonable, oppressive, or discriminatory, nor have we hesitated to uphold a tax that was not so . . . This ordinance has been attacked as unreasonable, excessive, oppressive, confiscatory, and discriminative. We do not so regard it."

Handbill Prohibition

IT HAS been held by various courts that ordinances are invalid which prohibit theatre owners, and other advertisers, from handling or passing advertising circulars to pedestrians on streets. However, an ordinance is valid which prohibits persons from placing advertising circulars in buildings, motor vehicles, mailboxes, etc., notwithstanding the fact that distributing of newspapers in this manner is permitted.

For example, in Sieroty vs. City of Huntington Park (295 Pac. 564), a city ordinance was held valid which made it unlawful for any one to distribute or cause to be distributed in the city any handbill or other printed or written advertising matter by placing it in any automobile, yard, porch, or mail-box. The law also provided that its provisions were inapplicable to any newspaper or other publication having advertising space therein.

It was contended that the law is void because it discriminates, since publishers of newspapers and similar advertising mediums are not included in its provisions. Nevertheless the higher court held the law valid, saying:

"In our opinion the ordinance in question is a valid exercise of the police power of the city. It is not prohibitive, but regulates matters over which the council had jurisdiction; and, as the manner and extent of such regulation is for legislative determination and appears not to have been exercised in an arbitrary or unreasonable manner, we cannot interfere."

Advertising as Legal Nuisance

IT IS WELL established law that any theatre owner who builds a structure that projects over a sidewalk may be held liable in damages for injuries caused pedestrians who walk in contact with the structure. So held a higher court in the late case of Montgomery vs. Nelson (295 Pac. 1034).

In this case it was shown that a property owner built an advertising case on the front portion of his building. The case was provided with a door to be opened for inserting new advertising matter. One day a pedestrian bumped into the rod used to support the door and was seriously injured. Although the lower court held the property owner not liable, the higher court reversed this decision.

Keeping Stairs Safe

THE COURTS have consistently upheld the law which requires theatre owners to exercise ordinary care to maintain the premises in a safe condition. Moreover, various courts have held that failure to properly guard the stairways may result in liability if a patron is injured.

For illustration, in Essenpreis vs. Elliott Company (37 S. W. [2d] 458), it was disclosed that a patron fell down a stairway which was unguarded and without light. It is interesting to observe that the lower court instructed the jury in the following language:

"The court instructs the jury that one who occupies a business house is bound to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition, and if you find from the evidence that defendant (proprietor) negligently and carelessly maintained under its supervision and control an obscured stairway leading from the first floor of its premises, and if you find that defendant negligently and carelessly left said stairway unguarded and unprotected, and negligently and carelessly failed to have any sign or warning posted to warn or notify plaintiff (patron) of the existence of said stairway, and if you find that it was dangerous to leave said stairway unguarded and unprotected, and to have no sign or warning posted to warn or notify plaintiff of the existence of said stairway, and if you find that defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, that said stairway was unguarded and unprotected and that no sign or warning was posted to warn or notify plaintiff of the existence of said stairway . . . and while exercising ordinary care for her own safety, she fell down said stairway and was injured, as a direct result of said negligence and carelessness of the defendant, if you find there was such negligence and carelessness, then your verdict will be for the plaintiff (patron)."

The jury considered all testimony in the case and held the injured patron entitled to recover damages. The higher court sustained this verdict.

Testimony in Injury

A RECENT higher United States court (Grand-Morgan Theatre Co. vs. Kearney, 40 F. [2d] 235), upheld a law which requires theatre owners to maintain the premises in safe condition. This law reads as follows:

"The owner of a theatre, like the owner of every other sort of business, or most other sorts of business, is obligated to exercize ordinary care for the safety of people who visit the theatre, and a patron who goes to the theatre is under the same duty to exercise ordinary care for his own safety."

Another important point is that all questions involving negligence of the theatre owner must be decided by a jury.

The facts of this case are that a patron entered the balcony of a theatre at the time the picture was being shown. He testified that he stood a minute or two so as to accustom his eyes to the darkness, and, as no usher was there, decided to walk over and look for a seat. He was not able to see anything clearly, the steps and seats were more or less of an outline, but noticed there were quite a few empty seats. As he attempted to descend the steps he caught his right foot on the carpet and fell. After his fall he went back and examined the step, and discerned that the carpet was crumpled up to the edge; that there was a rise there of approximately an inch, and probably an inch and a half or two inches back from the front edge of the step; that it was either padding under the carpet that had become wadded up or the carpet had become loose.

He had been to the theatre before, and knew where to go, but on the previous occasions he had always been led down to his seat by an usher who carried a flashlight and walked ahead of him holding the light.

The chief engineer, employed by the theatre owner, testified that regular inspections were made of the carpet and the lights in the theatre and at the place where the patron fell, and that there was no roll in the carpet, but that it was smooth and in good condition. Also, the lights were in good condition and were bright enough to not only show the steps, but to enable one to see the figures in the carpet.

During the trial the judge of the court stated the grounds of negligence submitted to the jury as follows: (1) That the theatre owner negligently permitted the left side of the balcony of the theatre to remain without sufficient light to guide patrons down the aisle and to enable them to clearly see the steps thereof; and (2) that the theatre owner failed to have an usher on the aisle of the balcony to direct the patron to his seat, and that by reason thereof his foot was caused to be caught on the edge of the steps of the aisle and the patron was injured.

The jury considered the testimony and rendered a verdict in favor of the injured patron, allowing him a large sum as damages.

The counsel for the theatre owner appealed to the higher court on the grounds that the decision was erroneously rendered because the jury was not permitted to determine whether the carpet was defective. Therefore, the higher court reversed the verdict of the jury, saying:

"Nowhere in the instructions was the question of a defect in the carpet mentioned . . . The evidence discloses an issue on the fact question of whether the carpet was in good condition . . . The plaintiff entered the theatre as a patron and invitee, and it was the duty of the defendant (theatre owner) to construct and maintain the premises in a reasonably safe and suitable condition for the protection of patrons. In general, the duty to keep premises safe for invitees applies only to defects or conditions which are in the nature of hidden defects . . . It is also a general rule that, in order to impose liability for an injury to an invitee by reason of the dangerous condition of the premises, the condition must have been known to the owner or occupant or have existed for such time that it was the duty of the owner to know of it."

Rental Under Illegal Contract

ASSUMING that a combination or contract is illegal, it does not follow that a theatre owner can refuse to pay for films rented by him. In other words, the illegality of a combination does prevent a theatre owner from showing the pictures, nor does it relieve him from obligations to pay the greed rental fees.

For instance, in Columbia Pictures Corporation vs. Vi-Metallic Investment Company (42 F. [2d] 873), it was disclosed that a theatre owner agreed in writing with a distributor to take 29 "first-run" photoplays or movie pictures under license of the distributor and exhibit and pay for the same at a fixed rate and within a certain time, all in accordance with the terms of the contract. Of the 29 pictures specifically enumerated, the theatre owner, according to the distributor, refused to accept, exhibit, or pay for 15, thus breaching the contract and damaging the distributor who sued to recover $12,550 damages from the theatre owner.

Bronze plaque which has been placed in the lobby of the Majestic theatre in Wellington, New Zealand. Using a Greek symbolism, it represents Apollo introducing the youthful goddess of the Cinema, to the goddesses of the other theatrical arts.

The counsel for the theatre owner contended that there was no liability because the distributor's contract is illegal. This contention was based on the allegation that the distributors which utilize this contract distribute approximately 98 per cent of the motion picture films in the United States and that a theatre owner, in order to secure sufficient pictures for his regular business, must, of necessity, deal with this group and subscribe to the monopolistic contract which also requires compulsory arbitration of all disputes between the parties arising out of the agreement. The distributors enforce this collectively by refusing to license films to exhibitors who violate any of its terms.

In holding that a theatre owner cannot avoid liability for breaching a contract of this nature, the court said:

"There is no illegality in such an agreement . . . While there may be something in the charge that the distributor was thereby enabled to control and arbitrarily fix prices for its pictures, counsel do not charge any actual duress, or anything that makes the payments provided for involuntary or compulsory. The mere fact that the defendant (theatre owner), as a practical matter, was compelled to make purchases from the illegal combination, because of its control of the supply of pictures, does not operate to make payments already made, or to be made, involuntary."

Marquee Permits

IN ALL instances in which the municipality, or any co-ordinate branch of government acting for it, is given discretionary power of control and supervision over public property, the exercise of this discretion in determining what is fit and what is unfit cannot be decided by private persons such as theatre owners who seek to place permanent structures in the public highways or streets for their private accommodations. For this reason any reasonable law is valid by which a board is granted authority to refuse construction of theatre improvements.

For example, in the late case of Walnut & Quince Streets Corporation vs. Mills (154 Atl. 29), a state law was adjudicated which provides for a board or commission to be known as the art jury, setting forth the qualifications which its several members must possess, together with the function and purpose of the jury in passing upon works of art and erections upon, or extending over, public places. The law further provides, in part, that "the approval of the jury shall also be required in respect to all structures or fixtures belonging to any person or corporation which shall be erected upon, or extend over, any highway, stream, lake, square, park, or other public place within

General Equipment News and Comment

ELECTRIC PIT LIFT

● The Otis Elevator Company of New York, has just brought on the market several types of electrically driven stage and pit elevators, arranged for individual and group operation in synchronism.

The equipment used in an installation at the Hershey Community Center, Hershey, Pa., includes, in addition to the three stage elevators, one orchestra elevator, one revolving console elevator, a loudspeaker elevator and a rear back stage elevator.

The individual, group or combination operation may be accomplished by running a series of stage platforms in synchronism with each other as a group and at the same time, the operation simultaneously of another group or individual platforms without interference with the first group.

Another possibility is the operation of all platforms as one, all level with one another. Push-button operation is the feature of this stage elevator movement. However, all can be accomplished by mechanical pre-setting and master control similar to that used for stage lighting. The mechanism can also be arranged for pre-setting for any automatic stopping position within the limits of travel.

SPECIAL CARPETING

● Stylists of the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, New York, working in cooperation with the decorators of the new Earl Carroll theatre in New York, in the selection of the carpeting to cover the theatre's floors. Three grades were chosen, a semi-modernistic pattern, black figures on a green background, being selected. Hartford Saxony is underfoot in the aisles, while under the chairs Bigelow Alba is used. On the stairs, where most of the wear will be concentrated, the covering is Bigelow Paramount, a carpeting specially designed for the New York Paramount when it was built and which has proved of excellent quality for the purpose since.

NEW APPOINTMENTS

● E. W. Loomis, formerly manager of Westinghouse Electric's Northeastern industrial division, has been appointed Middle Atlantic district manager, with headquarters in Philadelphia, by C. E. Stephens, vice president. Loomis is a graduate of the University of Delaware. He joined Westinghouse in 1914, moving successively to the sales department, managership of the mill and mining section and last the position from which he was just promoted.

William F. James was promoted at the same time from the position now assumed by Loomis, to that of assistant to the commercial vice president of the Atlantic division. James entered the Westinghouse employ in 1909, as salesman in the Philadelphia office. In 1923 he was appointed sales manager of the industrial division.

MODERN DRYING

● The General Utilities Manufacturing Company, Detroit, makers of an "electric towel" which dries hands and face by means of a stream of warm air, writes this desk to say that a letter from the Roxy theatre in New York declares that 15 "electric towels" are now in use there and giving satisfaction. The National Theatre Supply Company markets the product.

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on August 25. The list also includes remodeling projects and contracts awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

Theatres Planned

California

*LOS ANGELES—S. C. Lee, architect, 2404 West Seventh street, is taking bids for brick and reinforced concrete theatre to be erected on Compton avenue for the Fox-West Coast Theatres, Inc., 1609 West Washington street. Estimated cost, $200,000.

*STOCKTON — National Theatres Syndicate, 25 Taylor street, San Francisco, Calif., has revised plans by Bliss & Fairweather, Balboa Building, San Francisco, Calif., for a two-story Class A theatre to be located on Main street, between Market and Stanislaus streets. Estimated cost, $400,000.

Georgia

STATESBORO—Ernest Collins, this city and Vidalia, Ga., has purchased two store properties and plans converting into a modern theatre. P. G. Walker in charge.

Iowa

SPENCER—Fred and Earl Moore have plans by Liebenberg & Kaplan, 710 McKnight Building, Minneapolis, Minn., for a two-story brick and stone-trim structure, 43 by 132 feet, to replace the Salon Theatre destroyed by fire. Estimated cost, $40,000.

Massachusetts

NEWTOWN—Garden City Auditorium, Inc., 75 Deerfield street, Boston, Mass., has plans by Henry & Richmond, 12 West street, Boston, Mass., for a two-story brick and stone theatre to be located at 1300 Washington street, West Newtown. Cost estimated to exceed $150,000.

Missouri

ST. LOUIS—Syndicate forming, care S. R. Wilson, has plans by G. R. Bartling, 802 Paul Brown Building, and will take bids in the early fall for a three-story brick and algonite stone theatre, store and office building, including ball room, sound picture equipment, cooling system, to be located at 911 North Vendeventer avenue. Estimated cost, $300,000.

New Jersey

ENGLEWOOD—Corporation, care C. M. Taylor, manager Englewood Theatre, 48 East Palisade avenue, will soon take bids on general contract for two-story brick and reinforced concrete theatre, with seating capacity of 2,000, to be located at 16 West Palisade avenue. Estimated cost, $150,000.

HACKENSACK — Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., 321 West Forty-fourth street, New York, has plans by Thomas W. Lamb, 644 Eighth avenue, New York, for a two-story brick theatre to be located at 220-222 Main street. Maturity after January 1.

LONG BRANCH—Paramount-Publix Theatres, Paramount Building, New York, plans erection of new theatre. Maturity in February. Estimated cost, $150,000.

PLAINFIELD — Paramount - Publix Theatres, Paramount Building, New York, plans to erect new theatre. Maturity in February. Estimated cost, $250,000.

RIDGEWOOD—Thomas W. Lamb, architect, 644 Eighth avenue, New York, has rejected bids on general contract for two-story brick theatre, 80 by 190 feet, to be located on Ridgewood avenue, for Warner Brothers, 321 West Forty-fourth street, New York. Estimated cost, $250,000.

New York

NEW YORK—F. H. D. Holding Corporation, H. Traub, president, 309 West Twenty-third street, has plans by Thomas W. Lamb, 644 Eighth avenue, for a theatre and store building to be located at 261 Eighth avenue. Estimated cost, $800,000.

NEW YORK—Melrose Bond & Mortgage Corporation, 560 Melrose avenue, P. Murphy, president, has plans by Eugene DeRosa, 18 East Forty-first street, for a two-story theatre to be located at Mt. Eden avenue and Grand Concourse. Estimated cost, $175,000.

Texas

*AMARILLO — Amarillo Theatres Company, J. N. Beasley, Fisk Medical & Professional Building, has received bids for a two-story and balcony brick and reinforced concrete theatre, 180 by 140 feet. W. Scott Dunn, architect, Melba Building, Dallas, Texas. Lessee Paramount-Publix Theatres, Paramount Building, New York.

Remodeling

California

SAN FRANCISCO — Golden State Theatre & Realty Company, 25 Taylor street, has awarded the contract to the Clinton Stephenson Construction Company, Monadnock Building, for alterations to the Excelsior Theatre at 4631 Mission street. Improvements include heating and ventilating, painting, plumbing work. Contract for electrical work awarded to Globe Electric Works, Fifteenth and Mission streets. Estimated cost, $60,000.

Florida

TAMPA — Casino Enterprises, Inc., Frank Rogers, president, Ybor City, Fla., has started work remodeling Casino Theatre at Howard avenue and Cherry street. Improvements include installing air-washed ventilating equipment, new seats, concrete floors, redecorating 150-foot marquee. Estimated cost, $25,000.

Iowa

SIOUX CITY—Princess Theatre, care L. H. Wasson, manager, 408 Jackson street, will soon start work on remodeling, including new seats, reinforced concrete floors, lobby, cooling system, etc.

Kansas

PITTSBURG — Frank Lenshi has awarded the general contract for remodeling theatre at 213 North Broadway to Schneider Brothers, which includes tearing out front, installing cooling system, etc. Estimated cost, $25,000.

New Jersey

PALMYRA—Contract has been awarded to Calvin E. Stow, Bellview and Land streets, Riverton, N. J., for alterations and an addition to theatre. Improvements include tile, terrazzo, structural steel, plumbing, steam heating, painting, glazing, plastering, carpentry, mill work, general interior alterations. Owner, Broadway Theatre, care Romm & Zisak.

New York

NEW YORK—Alurion Realty Corporation, W. T. Knight, president, 60 Wall street, has plans by Thomas W. Lamb, 644 Eighth avenue, for alterations to theatre at 254 West Forty-second street. Estimated cost, $500,000.

Contracts Awarded

California

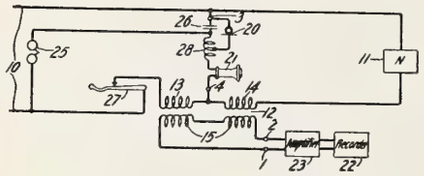
LONG BEACH—United Artists Theatres of California has awarded the contract to Henry I. Beller Construction Company, 6513 Hollywood Boulevard, Los Angeles, Calif., for the erection of a one-story reinforced concrete theatre, 100 by 144 feet, at 209-23 E-Ocean Boulevard. Estimated cost, $118,000.

LOS ANGELES—West Side Land Company, 4322 Crenshaw Boulevard, has awarded the contract to Lindgren & Swinnerton, 523 West Sixth street, for the erection of a two-story tower theatre and store building, 144 by 158 feet, at Wilshire Boulevard and Mansfield street. Estimated cost, $200,000.

PALO ALTO—United Artists Theatres of California, 1966 South Vermont street, Los Angeles, has awarded the contract to Barrett Holp, 918 Harrison street, San Francisco, Calif., for the erection of a two-story concrete theatre and store building of Gothic type, 62 by 150 feet, on University avenue, near Cowper street. Estimated cost, $65,000.

New Inventions . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

1,763,169. SOUND RECORDING. Robert C. Mathes, Wyoming, N. J., assignor to Bell Telephone Laboratories, Incorporated, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Sept. 23, 1926. Serial No. 137,274. 8 Claims. (Cl. 179—6.)

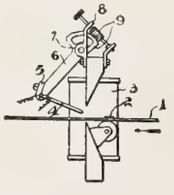


1. A system comprising a telephone set including a transmitter, a line, a recorder adapted for recording electrical variations within a limited amplitude range, so adjusted that said recorder is supplied with a portion of the electrical variations received over said line and from said transmitter and means comprising a single space discharge amplifying device connected between the recorder and said coupling means.

1,763,055. LOUD SPEAKER. Marcus C. Hopkins, Washington, D. C., assignor to Titanafram Corporation, Jersey City, N. J., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed Jan. 7, 1927. Serial No. 159,555. 7 Claims. (Cl. 181—31.)

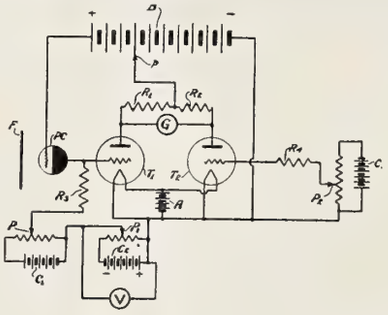
1. A loud speaker comprising a diaphragm, a plurality of parallel spaced resonators of corrugated board, means for transferring vibrations from the diaphragm to one of the resonators and means for transferring vibrations from one of the resonators to the other.

1,799,322. SOUND-REPRODUCING MECHANISM. Percy A. Robbins, Highland Park, Ill. Filed May 17, 1929. Serial No. 363,952. 4 Claims. (Cl. 179-100.2.)



1. Sound reproducing apparatus comprising a magnet having its poles positioned close to one another; a strip adapted to move lengthwise through the magnetic field between the poles, said strip having a para-magnetic sound trace formed thereon adapted, as the strip moves to shift the magnetic flux back and forth lengthwise of the strip; and a coil having its turns at one side parallel to the surface of the strip and extending transversely of the strip through the magnetic field, so that a current will be induced therein by the movements of the magnetic flux relative thereto.

1,762,748. PHOTO-ELECTRIC PHOTOMETER. Hardick Allen Smith, New Rochelle, N. Y., assignor to Electrical Testing Laboratories, Inc., New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Apr. 26, 1927. Serial No. 186,773. 7 Claims. (Cl. 88—23.)



7. In a photometric apparatus, the combination of a Wheatstone bridge having a three electrode audion in one arm and a resistance in another, so arranged that they are normally balanced, means for impressing a desired potential upon the grid of the audion, a photoelectric cell connected to the grid of the audion, means for impressing a voltage upon the grid to counter balance that impressed upon the grid by the photoelectric cell and means for measuring the value of the counter balancing voltage, substantially as set forth.

1,799,154. MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION APPARATUS. Frederick Brook, Gilgandra, Australia. Filed Dec. 15, 1927. Serial No. 240,259, and in Australia, Sept. 21, 1927. 4 Claims. (Cl. 37-17.)

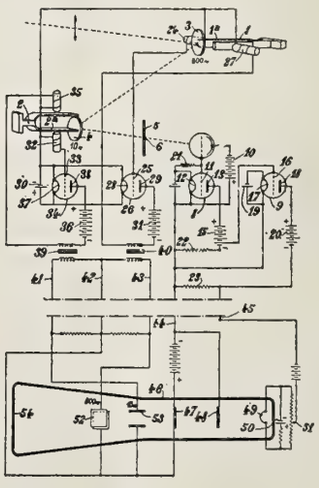
1,808,078. NONINFLAMMABLE SOUND PICTURE SCREEN. William J. Schoonmaker, New York, N. Y. Filed Nov. 12, 1929. Serial No. 406,599. 6 Claims. (Cl. 88—24.)

1. A non-inflammable sound picture screen comprising a woven fabric formed with interstices in the weaving among the threads, the said fabric being submitted to a fireproof solution treatment and having afterwards applied to both sides a plastic non-inflammable and waterproof chemical compound, said plastic compound being of a density suitable for covering the threads of the said fabric, thus acting as a seal in preventing deterioration of the ingredients of the said fireproof solution from exposure to air or contact with water and at the same time making said screen non-inflammable, waterproof and washable, the said plastic compound being of a sufficient thinness in density as not to clog up or entirely close the said interstices, thus allowing the passage of sound through said screen by way of the interstices.

1,766,885. TELEVISION SYSTEM. Alexandre Dauvillier, Paris, France. Original application filed Aug. 22, 1924, Serial No. 733,651, now Patent No. 1,661,603, dated Mar. 6, 1928, and in France Nov. 29, 1923. Divided and this application filed Dec. 10, 1927. Serial No. 239,187. 4 Claims. (Cl. 178—6.)



1. In a television system, a light distributor arranged for continuously analyzing a rear image to be transmited by selecting therein at every instant, a beam of invariable section, vibrating means for imparting to said beam two simultaneous harmonic movements of constant amplitudes, the said movements occurring in planes at right angles to each other, means for producing, by means of this beam, photoelectric currents, means depending from the light distributor for simultaneously and directly producing and without loss of time synchronism currents, which vary according to the position of the said beam, and are consequently sinusoidal in form.

a seat. This will relieve the ushers of much difficulty and lessen the number needed, and there will be no cause for the annoyance of patrons already seated, because the "directors" are silent. "Silence" signs should be placed where they will be most effective.

If the performance is under way, the auditorium will be in semi-darkness, but there should be sufficient light for one to locate seats easily on the main floor or in the balcony, without the need for ushers' flashlights, and without fear of stumbling. The light must be so arranged and distributed that it will not fall on the screen, nor should it be spotty or cause glare. Even shaded or indirect lighting must not have bright contrasty areas.

THE LIGHTING of the auditorium should not vie with the picture for attention. However, it should be a harmonious part of the architecture, with a unification of effort to heighten the value of the picture and to satisfy the needs of the occasion. For instance, it may combat the seasons by subtle pastel colorings. It should co-operate with the picture being exhibited. It should use all of the psychological appeal of the colors—reds and ambers would be suitable for the excitement of a war picture; greens for the freshness of a Gaynor picture; or blue for the loveliness of a "scenic."

By a heightening of the longitudinal lines an intimacy may be created, while with a vertical accent, grandeur may be enhanced. Furthermore, by a careful and subtle slow change and combination of these principles, and by changes in brightness, the action of the picture may be greatly accented. At all times, however, the lighting must not call attention to itself, but should, by careful directioning and use of brightness and color, serve to concentrate the attention on the screen.

The above is a far cry from the traditional blue that permeates our standardized theatre existence. The same is true of the "play of light" which could assist the grosses of every theatre. Each subject—features, news or short subjects—may well be the occasion for a lighting change. During the "spill," the occasion should be used to play our "color music" for a minute or so, to assist and speed the seating, and to give the patrons an additional treat. This would prove a satisfactory dessert and might well be the subject of much valuable word-of-mouth advertising.

Comfort should be the keynote of lounges. This includes eye appeal by virtue of soft colorful lighting, amply re-enforced at mirrors and other needy places. Though in general a more elaborate note than that usually found in the home is desirable, these rooms should have a homey atmosphere, rather than a "touch-me-not" forbidding appearance.

To dwell on the many ramifications of light, is indeed to build castles in the clouds, but castles which have keys to grant us access to a veritable fairyland. The key is light, and it opens to us the glories of a new and delightful music—more colorful, more exotic than anything one could have imagined.

We have sufficient technique already to adapt illumination more generally to the function of the theatre. What the future holds will be determined as much by such adoption now as by the knowledge we have yet to gain.

the city, except as provided in this act."

Controversy arose because a theatre owner erected a marquee, a permanent structure, extending about half a city block along the front of the theatre and completely overhanging the sidewalk, without having complied with the legal requirement that plans for such a structure must be approved by the art jury before erection is permitted.

Plans for the erection of this canopy were approved by the city department of building inspection, a permit for its construction was duly issued by the department of public safety, and, in addition, a permit was issued by the department of highways, subject to the approval of the art jury.

After the theatre owner had partially completed the marquee, it submitted plans for its construction for the art jury's approval. Upon consideration, the art jury refused to approve these plans, and so notified the theatre owner. The city solicitor thereupon demanded discontinuance of further work on the extension to the building and removal of such parts as had already been erected, and the superintendent of police warned the theatre owner that an attempt made to illuminate the canopy would be followed by the arrest of those responsible.

The theatre owner appealed to the court on the contention that the art jury acted arbitrarily in refusing a permit. It is interesting to observe that this court held the theatre owner not entitled to complete the marquee, and said:

"It is a settled principle that the Legislature has the power of control over encroachments into or over public highways, from house line to house line, and this control may be delegated to municipalities in the state. . . The art jury has been designated by the Legislature to act, in the respects named, in guarding the streets, of which the municipality is trustee for the public, from unfitting and objectionable encroachments."

Anticipated Profits

VARIOUS courts have held that a property owner who breaches a contract made with a contractor for construction of a theatre building is liable in damages to an amount equal to the profits the contractor would have earned had the breach that prevented his profits not occurred.

For illustration, in the late case of Delarosa v. Misuruca (133 So. 441), it was disclosed that a theatre owner furnished a contractor with plans and specifications for a proposed theatre building. He and two other contractors submitted bids for the contract to erect it. At an agreed time and place the bidders and the owner of the property met, the bids were opened, in their presence, by the architect of the owner. The architect announced the result of the bidding and declared that the contractor who had submitted the lowest bid had secured the contract. The original or copies of the plans and specifications were handed to the contractor who was told, by the architect in charge of the project that he should "get busy at once."

The contractor immediately began the preliminaries necessary to the beginning of the work. A few days later he learned that the property owner had called for bids for a smaller and less expensive building and that other contractors had been awarded the contract for the erection of that building. The contractor was advised by the property owner that he had decided to construct a smaller building. The contractor sued the property owner to recover anticipated profits. In holding the contractor entitlde to a recovery in his suit, the higher court said:

"The trial judge found that the plaintiff's profit was figured in the bid at 10 per cent of the cost of the building, the sum of the profit being $2,881.36, for which amount, together with legal interest thereon from judicial demand, judgment was rendered in his favor. The testimony in the record sustains the correctness of the judgment, and the judgment is therefore affirmed."

EXHIBITORS CHEER AS PRODUCT BRINGS BACK

EVERYWHERE they're saying it's a PARAMOUNT year. Thousands of smart exhibitors are shouting "Happy New Year" in September. They've signed a PARAMOUNT 1931-2 contract, and they know that means a consistent run of week-after-week quality product. Box-office records of early fall releases prove it!

CHEVALIER-LUBITSCH "SMILING LIEUTENANT"

A country-wide clean-up. Wrecking records in every town. Claudette Colbert, Charlie Ruggles and Miriam Hopkins.

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"

Paramount's mighty dramatic hit. Practically doubling business in every theatre. Based on Theodore Dreiser's novel. Directed by Josef von Sternberg. With Phillips Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee.

"SILENCE" . . . CLIVE BROOK

and great cast including Marjorie Rambeau, Peggy Shannon and Charles Starrett. Powerful dramatic smash that's doing big-money business. Directed by Louis Gasnier and Max Marcin.

"SECRETS OF A SECRETARY"

CLAUDETTE COLBERT, Herbert Marshall and Georges Metaxa. Directed by George Abbott. Swell money picture in the small towns as well as the cities.

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN"

Clean, wholesome picture for the whole family. With Jackie Coogan, Junior Durkin, Mitzi Green, Jackie Searl and Eugene Pallette. Directed by Norman Taurog.

PARAMOUNT'S 1931-2 BOOM-TIME GROSSES

4 MARX BROS. "MONKEY BUSINESS"

It's in the air! Here's the greatest comedy hit in five years. The money-making maniacs at their best. Rave reviews say "MONKEY BUSINESS" will do more to bring back happy-box-office days than any picture in years. The Laugh Panic of the age! Opening soon at long-run Rivoli, New York. Directed by Norman McLeod.

And here is just a sample of sure-fire box office hits to come! "THE ROAD TO RENO" — Lilyan Tashman, "Buddy" Rogers, Peggy Shannon, William Boyd, Irving Pichel. "MY SIN", showing the real TALLULAH BANKHEAD and handsome FREDRIC MARCH. "TWENTY FOUR HOURS"—world famous novel—with CLIVE BROOK, Kay Francis, Miriam Hopkins, Regis Toomey. RUTH CHATTERTON in "ONCE A LADY". GEORGE BANCROFT in "RICH MAN'S FOLLY". "TOUCHDOWN", football story with Richard Arlen, Peggy Shannon and big cast. Lubitsch production "MAN I KILLED" with Nancy Carroll, Phillips Holmes, Lionel Barrymore. Is it any wonder Paramount exhibitors are happy.

Big Money Pictures PARAMOUNT

THE PUBLIC IS THE FINAL JUDGE!

Get Ready To Give Them Hits Like These!

GARBO—They want more like "Inspiration." And wait till they see "Susan Lenox"—Garbo gets the gold!

SHEARER—After "Strangers May Kiss" and "Free Soul," naturally the public waits for Norma's new season hits!

CRAWFORD—"Dance Fools Dance," "Paid"—sure they loved 'em and they'll flock to Joan's forthcoming delights.

DAVIES—Her great dramatic work in "Five and Ten" is a forerunner of her big thrill-vehicles to come!

BEERY—When you can flash Wallace "Secret Six" Beery from your housefront you know it's a sure housefull!

MONTGOMERY—"Shipmates" and "Man in Possession" were only starters for handsome Bob. The public wants more!

GILBERT—His first new season and "new idea" film is "The Phantom of Paris" and it's jack for Jack!

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 104, No. 10 — September 5, 1931

Thirty Million Strong

THE greatest annual movement, affecting nearly a fourth of the population of the United States, will be taking place in the next two weeks. School days are at hand again and the whole home life of the nation must assume a new routine.

Families are pouring back from camp and shore. The cities and towns will begin to stir again with growing traffic movements and throngs on the streets and in the shops. According to the figures of the National Educational Association in Washington, 24,000,000 will enroll in the grade schools, 5,000,000 in high schools, an another million in colleges and universities.

To the motion picture industry this means the real opening of a new season of patronage. As the flurry of school preparations passes and the waning of the outdoor season comes the great potential audience of millions will be back to normal routine again, ready to be beckoned by the marquee lights, ready to be sold entertainment once more.

But this year every maker and retailer of wares for the millions is standing alert for the return from summerland. Selling competition, price competition, quality competition, the struggle for the consumer's dollar, will be sharper than ever before in the memory of this generation. Ride where you will and consider the billboards, read what you will and consider the advertising, everywhere selling is being based on a concern about values, about dollar buying power, to a degree that has no precedent.

This great returning audience will be shopping for entertainment. It will have money aplenty, but no impulse to part with it save for bargains.

Now it chances that the motion picture rose to be a great industry in the service of the masses in the days when a seat in a theatre was the biggest ten cents' worth on earth. This is no advocacy of a ten cent admission, but it is a suggestion that now is the time to make the whole show worth the money, no matter what the price may be. Amusement is a state of mind and, concerning a show, it need not be entirely dependent on what comes in the film can. It may be pointed out that not a little in recent theatre circuit experience very sharply indicates that the whole show can not be shipped in the can. That intangible element of showmanship will not be concerned in picking up this September flow, back from Summerland, and guiding it neatly to the box office. Amusement habits and patterns of family activity will be taking form in the next thirty days. Good selling now can weave the motion picture habit into the pattern.

A useful instrument of service in this connection is offered by MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S "School and Screen" department, instituted so successfully by Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick in the latter months of the last school year. Two weeks hence the first "School and Screen" department of the new season will be presented, with a wealth of new material.

The Heir of Opera

FEODOR CHALIAPIN'S world fame pertains to the ancient, archaic, tradition bound art of the opera. And so, to an exponent of the motion picture as the supreme machine tool of the art of expression, there is a pleasant thrill and surprise in an article from the great Russian appearing in the Saturday Review of London in which he sees the talking film as the superseding medium.

"The means at the disposal of opera," he observes, "pale into insignificance beside the tremendous perspectives of the talking film. . . . The future belongs to the talking film, and I think it will be the inheritor of the opera. . . . It is the herald of dawn for a new form of musical dramatic art."

Certainly enough, no great art can self-consciously elevate itself, although the motion picture has tried enough of it. But a destiny greater than its personal instruments controls the future. Meanwhile there is a thought in Chaliapin's words for those who have striven mostly with bricks and steel to make themselves and the picture industry great.

Naughty Fidoes

A NUMBER of minor leaflets, sometimes carelessly called trade journals, are indulging in a rash of peevish yappings at and about MOTION PICTURE HERALD and other Quigley publications. Apparently they hope to draw this journal into a controversy because any such controversy would in itself imply importance for them. Space in this journal is far too valuable to devote to the exposition and reproval of the bad manners of those ill bred and untrained amateurs of journalism.

Mr. Ford's Real Field

A REPORT from Los Angeles says that some one has interested Mr. Henry Ford in the production of a series of religious shorts. Mr. Ford's only really vital contribution to contemporary civilization, despite his several experiments in several fields, has been a reasonably successful four cylinder motor car.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

The POST of CINCINNATI has an editorial writer who feels very badly indeed about the art of the screen. It is just possible that what he is quarreling with is the human race. However, here is his plaint:

A father who says he represents a group of East End parents comes to this paper complaining.

He wants to find a movie house which will exhibit only pictures fit for children. That is, he longs for programs in which sex, crime and vulgarity are unknown.

This father goes only half way into the problem.

Flagrant lewdness is bad enough, as it pops up sporadically.

But the heaviest charge against movies is the fact that their taste universally is on a disturbingly low level.

Funny pictures that draw the biggest crowds are those which extract laughs from cheap situations.

A man placing his bare foot on a dinner table. A man turning the seat of his pants into the camera. A girl tossing her bustle region as a gesture of contempt. The Bronx laugh in mixed company. Reference to physiology. Jokes on some individual's physical infirmity, like stuttering or deafness.

Children see these displays of bad taste and hear their elders laugh loudly. Children naturally decide such lack of breeding is the smart and appropriate thing.

And children become boors, strictly from bad example. Twenty more years of this and we'll have a nation of louts.

THE KNICKERBOCKER PRESS of ALBANY, N. Y., offers a markedly sane view of the relation of the motion picture to contemporary life and conditions in an editorial which remarks:

If the talkies are guilty of past sins in making the gangster a hero in the eyes of the weak-minded, they are atoning for that fault in such a picture as "The Star Witness." Here the gangster invades a peaceful home and threatens the lives of its members because they happened to be witnesses to a gang murder and are asked by the district attorney to testify against the gangster.

Intimidation may be carried to melodramatic extent in this picture, but basically its story can be matched in the fact that state troopers still guard Grover Parks, Catskill farmer, against the vengeance of the Diamond gang, and in the miscarriage of justice in a Troy court in the Diamond trial; a miscarriage in which fear and perjury are believed to have had their part.

Someone has said, "People don't get indignant any more." Knowing the facts in the Parks case and in the inferences in the Troy Diamond trial, it seems that the talkies are doing their bit to get people indignant against a dangerous public enemy.

THE JOURNAL of FLINT in MICHIGAN, which is a city of motors and industry, recognizes that an absolute perfection of performance by the motion picture business is not exactly to be expected. Also this paper amazingly enough does not seem to think that the screen has entirely gone to pot. It observes:

The fashion of the moment seems to be to scold the movies for putting on poor shows, for not making greater profits, for not having something novel to amuse the public and for sensationalizing this, that or the other thing.

As a matter of fact, the movies probably are no worse or no better than ever. On the whole, the talkies seem to be improving their standard of dramatic work and the actual speaking and photography has been excellent.

The movies, like every other business, have been hurt by depression. And all this scolding from critics and audiences is just a case of needing something to blame when nerves are frayed.

There have been spells of this kind in the movie world before. There probably will be again. After the first flush of the novelty of talkies had worn off, audiences suddenly became supercritical and began talking about "dramatic values," "plot," "dialog" and other things they know very little about. The movies, we must assume, are made by people who know something about their picture business.

Every show cannot be a smashing hit. And with the great number of films that are produced, each cannot possibly be original. However, the producers are not going to stop looking for the sort of thing which amuse their audiences. We can bank on that.

In the meantime, we have seen a number of pictures in the last six months which we would not hesitate to give a grade of "excellent," judging entirely on the standards by which movies have always been judged.

The box office is the test, perhaps, but we must not lose sight of the fact that it takes a great deal more to draw a big "house" in times like this than it does when money in "easy."

PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE, under the editorship of James R. Quirk, is collecting expression from the public about the values that motion pictures offer from the point of view of the ultimate consumer. Some of the letters quoted in the magazine follow:

"'Min and Bill' made me laugh until my sides ached and I forgot the depression. Next day I started to reorganize my business."—C. E. Dexter, Boulder, Colo.

"'Skippy' was the tonic I needed to cure my blues and depressed feeling."—Timothy McInerney, New York, N. Y.

"We (husband and I) forget about the note coming due and the dazzling new car that mocks us every time we pass the show window, and we walk home (from the movies) with renewed love and courage . . ."—Mrs. M. O. Wilburn, Montgomery, Alabama.

"I am by careful selection of pictures trying to develop in my son standards of conduct, judgment and appreciation. He admires the manliness in Gary Cooper; he apes the polished mannerisms of George Arliss; he is likely to burst into song after hearing Lawrence Tibbett . . ."—Mrs. C. R., Bedford, Pa.

"My parents were uneducated . . . with no money I tackled the job of obtaining an education. The movies helped. They gave me a basic knowledge of customs, manners, and styles. . . . They are helping me to develop into a well-rounded personality."—C. L. G., Birmingham, Ala.

"As a country girl. . . . How I wish I could find some means to express my appreciation to the designers of film clothes and house interiors for the help they have given me."—Alberta Rowell, Lexington, Ky.

"There are plenty of clean juvenile films for children . . . of course, the baby shouldn't smoke daddy's cigars or use mother's lipstick, and, of course, children shouldn't see films intended for adults. . . . I have five children of my own."—Blanche Bennett, Washington, D. C.

HOLLYWOOD BLAMED FOR INDUSTRY EVILS AT M-G-M PROTEST MEET IN N.Y.

Exhibitors Ask Ban on Gang and Indecent Pictures, Immediate Application of the Standard Exhibition Contract and the Elimination of Score Charges

Approximately 70 exhibitors, for whom a representation of 7,000 theatres was claimed, left a meeting called for the purpose of protesting the new M-G-M contract at the Hotel Astor, New York, this week without making requests for any specific changes in the contract. A continuing committee appointed by the meeting convened with Felix Feist, Metro sales manager, the following day, and likewise presented no definite program of contract modification. Further meetings of the committee were adjourned at least until next week, due to the absence from the city of Walter Vincent, its chairman.

Partially explaining the inaction of the exhibitor protestants is Feist's explanation that Metro will entertain requests for contract modifications and adjustments wherever the situation demands.

"My instructions to the Metro sales force," said Feist, "were specifically to sell an exhibitor only where it was possible for him to make a profit and stay in business with Metro. Our home office and exchanges are always open to any one with a justifiable complaint, and no such complaint has ever been ignored by Metro. Our company," he said, "can only hope that its representatives did not adopt arbitrary or high-handed methods in presenting the new contract to exhibitors."

Feist indicated that, although the contract would have to stand in its essentials, a liberal and elastic application of it would be made, and no rigid enforcement of all of its provisions would be attempted without regard to individual situations. An understanding of this nature, in essence, is what was sought by the protesting exhibitors, and a definite agreement to that effect may be reached at later meetings of the continuing committee with Feist.

Serving on this committee, in addition to Walter Vincent of Wilmer & Vincent, eastern circuit operators, are: Nathan Yamins, Fall River; Jack Harwood, Cleveland; M. A. Lightman, Memphis; Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York, and A. Levey, New Haven.

In addition to its consideration of the Metro contract, the meeting petitioned distributors to put the standard contract into immediate operation; it empowered the continuing committee to negotiate with all producers for the elimination of the score charge; it called on producers to abandon further production of gangster and "indecent" problem pictures; asked the elimination of "holdouts," or changes in release dates, and protested any "tying in" of short subjects with feature sales under any price or booking subterfuge.

With Walter Vincent chairman of the meeting, the exhibitors immediately inaugurated an attack on industry practices which, they charged, threaten to increase theatre admissions throughout the country.

The arraignment of the production and distribution ends of the industry was con-

Spies!

William Hollander, New York exhibitor, raised an objection to the admittance of unidentified individuals to the exhibitors' Metro protest meet in New York this week, intimating that "distributors' spies" might be in attendance at the meeting. He asked that all unable to furnish proper identification be asked to leave the meeting.

Chairman Walter Vincent stated that the meeting "had nothing to conceal" and invited public scrutiny.

"Even though we did desire privacy," Vincent said, "it would be impossible to attain it in this industry. I have been frequently advised by distributors that within five minutes after exhibitors' meetings, no less than six exhibitors were in their offices with complete accounts of what had transpired."

Artists Service Reports Returns Of $10,000,000

George Engles, director of NBC Artists Service, has reported that returns from engagements secured for its artists have totalled $10,000,000 during the past 12 months. This figure represents, according to Engles, a 54 per cent increase over two years ago.

In all, 300 performers of all sorts, both on the stage and radio and on the lecture platform, have benefited from these returns. Advance bookings for the coming season, said Engles, indicate no falling off of the demand for entertainers. Concert artists alone, of which the organization represents 120 already have 60 per cent more bookings awaiting them than they had last year.

The definite indications are, in the opinion of Engles, that the public is not economizing on entertainment, but it does, however, insist on only the very best available. It is spending more for amusement than ever before, says Engles.

Gance Distributing Russian Films In France; Will Direct

Abel Gance, French engineer in France, has secured French distribution rights to 12 Russian productions, while the Soviet Union in Berlin has bought several French films for Russia, by way of reciprocity.

Gance has also been engaged by the Russian authorities to direct several for them.

Double Bills to Prevent Rehiring Of B-K Organists

Balaban & Katz will not reemploy 26 organists laid off at the beginning of the summer in the circuit's Chicago theatres unless double featuring is abolished this fall, according to Louis Lipstone, production manager of the circuit.

"There will be no reemployment of organists in Balaban & Katz theatres after Labor Day," Lipstone said. "Double feature programs do not afford time enough for organ solos, and in consequence only five organists will be used in the same number of houses at which no double featuring is done."

The theatres at which organists are employed are the Chicago and Oriental in the Loop, and the Uptown, Paradise and Tivoli, outlying. The remainder of the Balaban & Katz 30-odd houses are on either a permanent or part-time double feature policy, with the exception of the Loop-run houses.

At the time the 26 organists were dispensed with, the circuit announced that the move would probably be temporary, with reemployment of organists effective at the end of the summer.

To Push Contract At Allied Session

The next step to be taken by Allied States Association in its effort to push adoption of the proposed new form of license agreement, adopted in principle by distributors, is expected to be determined in Minneapolis on September 9 and 10 at the session of the Northwest exhibitor unit.

Allied heads from numerous states will be on hand for the regional meeting, which is assuming the proportions of a national affair, with leaders attending to congratulate W. A. Steffes and Aaron Saperstein on the outcome of the Chicago difficulties.

150 DECENTRALIZED THIS WEEK BY FOX IN THE EAST

Unit Operators Assume Charge of Circuit

Move Accomplished by Retracing Steps Which Led to Formation Of Former Central Operation

Decentralization of all Fox theatres east of the Mississippi was accomplished this week with the dissolution of the main office departments of the Fox Theatres Corporation on Monday. The following day approximately 150 theatres inaugurated a new system of territorial or individual operation management.

No departments or department heads that have been eliminated from the main office by the decentralization were replaced in the new field organization. Instead, unit managers have assumed the full responsibilities of operation, including those of real estate, film buying, advertising, public relations, taxes, personnel, and all other phases of theatre operating. Each theatre manager in turn is given full responsibility for his own theatre operation under the general manager of his local unit, while managers of de luxe houses are again working exactly as they did before the organization of the main office.

The decentralization, in effect, was accomplished by retracing the steps which led to formation of the former centralized circuit operation, which is now extinct.

The division or unit managers on whom operation responsibilities now rest are: Manhattan, Bronx and Long Island, Harry Woodin; New Jersey and Brooklyn, Harry Goldberg; Albany and Buffalo, Marshall Taylor; New England, Herschel Stuart; Midwesco and Chicago, H. J. Fitzgerald.

Steffes to Quit Northwest Group For Allied Affairs

W. A. Steffes, who has been president of the Northwest exhibitor association for over 10 years, will resign at the association's Minneapolis meeting September 9 and 10.

He will devote all his time to affairs of the national Allied States Association which he founded.

Tax Rebate of $402,134 Is Won by Paramount

Loew Promotes Addison

H. M. Addison, former managing director of the Penn in Pittsburgh, has been promoted to supervisor of Loew's Cleveland division, comprising 11 houses.

"15-cent Circuit For Trans Lux is Incorrect": Smith

The expansion plans of Trans Lux are still in a formative stage, Courtland Smith, president, says in commenting on a report in Walter Winchell's column in the New York Mirror that Trans Lux planned to open a large number of theatres with a new low admission price of 15 cents.

"Naturally, Trans Lux plans expansion on a large scale," said Smith. "Certain plans for the development of operations have been in mind since the opening of the first Trans Lux theatre, but no definite stage has been attained as yet. The report that a new 15-cent admission scale is contemplated is definitely incorrect.

"We have fullest confidence in the future of Trans Lux," Smith continued. "It is new and different, and, like most departures from the ordinary, it is meeting with opposition in various quarters. I am certain of its eventual success in spite of this opposition from those who do not want to see the enterprise succeed."

Miller Music House Denies Rumor of Harms' Sponsorship

There are rumors in the music trade that the firm of Miller Music Inc., is being financed and sponsored by the firm of Harms Inc., which is a Warner subsidiary, but Charles Miller, formerly managing editor of Harms Inc., and the founder of the new publishing house, denies that he is associated with or sponsored in any way whatsoever by Harms Inc., or any other organization.

Because of Miller's success with the Ziegfeld Follies and other shows which he is now publishing, an effort is being made by competitors who are losing prestige with managers to create an impression that they are sponsoring him or financing him, claims Miller.

De Mille-Hakim Deal For 3 Films Understood Completed

A deal in London between Cecil B. DeMille and Eric Hakim for the production of three pictures, is understood to be definitely concluded. The first will be made in England and the other two anywhere in the world necessary.

Two American companies are understood negotiating for the release of the three. Hakim is head of Cinema House, Ltd., and an important financial figure in the industry in England.

Sennett to Resume

Mack Sennett studios, which closed August 24, will resume production activities about September 21.

Something New

While the process still is under test and, therefore, not yet perfected sufficiently for publication of details, it looks as though the near future will bring a new film coating (chemical) which hardens the photographic emulsion and renders it practically immune to scratches. We have examined film so coated and find it difficult to scratch the emulsion.

There are now 150,000 feet of film so treated in service for test purposes and engineers report 100% satisfaction with results so far.

If this develops, and it looks as though it will, it will be one of the really big improvements in the industry.

F. H. RICHARDSON

An Echo of the U.S. Journey of "Journey's End"

There is a sequel to the "dive" which the film version of "Journey's End" took in the American market. It takes the form of a candid confession on the part of the directors of Welsh-Pearson at London, jointly responsible with Gainsborough Pictures for production of the film, that "at the time the film was due for general release in U. S. A. the great financial crisis occurred, one of the effects of which was to produce a sensational falling off in picture theatre receipts throughout the whole of America."

This, the directors say, has greatly reduced the value of company assets estimated largely on anticipations of "Journey" rentals from Tiffany at $500,000.

They say that "Journey's End" failed to stand up against the "overwhelming theatre slump" and the effect was disastrous. They admit that the item shown in the accounts as worth $500,000 is in reality worth considerably less; a bold and frank attitude which renders all the more obscure, any reason these directors may have had for not ascertaining what within reason these assets really are worth.

It is felt in the London trade that it would be much better for all British production concerns having on hand assets which are of problematical value, to so write of their obvious losses as to bring their figures into something approaching correct relationship to actual present day values. Some concerns are still writing in their balance sheets huge sums representing the cost of producing silent films. These are clearly not worth a fractional part of their original value, and the bitter truth has to be faced sooner or later. Many of the major British companies have already written off their losses and are making a fresh start.

The profit and loss account of Welsh-Pearson actually shows a slight working profit: there is an amount of $45,000 transferred to the balance sheet, but its actuality is queried even by the W.P. directors.

INDUSTRY ORGANIZES TO JOIN DRIVE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Local Newsreel

The Santa Barbara, Cal., DAILY NEWS, local paper, has started production and release of a weekly talking newsreel, devoted for the most part to interviews and general news events of the community. Warners plant is used for the development of the shots which are sent back to Santa Barbara, where Paul Whitney, dramatic critic of the NEWS, sees the reel at a private showing, writes the dialogue, and returns to Hollywood with the film, where the recording is done. Six issues of the reel have already been released, which have resulted, according to report, in increased attendance at the theatre showing the reel and in splendid advertising for the newspaper.

Movietone Men "Shoot" McKinley

Culminating three months of newsreel picture taking in Alaska, two Movietone cameramen flew over Mt. McKinley, North America's highest peak, in Alaskan Airway planes on Wednesday, according to a Universal Service dispatch from Fairbanks, Alaska.

"It was the second flight ever to be made over the towering peak, 20,300 feet high and the first time the mountain has been photographed by motion picture cameras.

The cameramen, Eric Mayell and Oscar Darling, announced upon their return to Fairbanks that they secured "excellent shots" of the mountain. The pilots were Joe Crosson and Ed. Young, Alaskan fliers.

Mayell and Darling make up the Fox Movietone News crew which is going through Alaska in search of sound news pictures and features.

Warner Studio Resumes With 114 People Added to Payroll

Warner-First National studio in Hollywood has resumed production activity with 114 people added to the payroll, in the stenographic, accounting, scenario and technical departments.

A report current at the plant was to the effect that the salary cut which they took will be lifted within 30 days, and though studio officials confirmed the fact that the cut was temporary, they refused to divulge exactly when the cuts would be returned.

Clarke In New York

Representatives in Action Session at Hays Office

All Facilities of Motion Pictures Made Available to President Hoover's Aid Program

The motion picture industry has this week entered upon arrangements to mobilize on a nation-wide scale for cooperation in unemployment relief.

At a meeting held at the New York offices of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., participated in by all branches of the industry, including the heads of the independent theatre circuits, circuit theatre operators, distribution executives, representatives of the trade press, and news reel chiefs, plans were laid for coordinating the industry's resources with the nation's relief program initiated by President Hoover.

Will H. Hays was named chairman of a central committee which immediately commenced action along the line of welding into the relief work the motion picture industry's full cooperation.

The objective of the effort commenced today, as explained by Mr. Hays, is "to develop plans to the end that the industry may fully discharge its duty in connection with the whole subject of unemployment relief, and to coordinate everywhere with responsible community relief agencies, thereby assuring the most effective application of what we do to help. Exhaustive and united action through responsible delegated committees in our own ranks, extending everywhere, will make our facilities available to the local joint committees of the nation's general effort.

"We are doing in our industry," Mr. Hays continued, "what the Gifford Committee is doing in regard to the general relief activities. We will make certain that the organized industry is available at quick and effective contact points with the coordinated work of welfare agencies, city committees, and other industries which I am sure will prepare, as we are doing, to render unified and effective service."

Mr. Hays has named a Planning Committee of 16 which will advise with him in the selection of a general national committee, and a central committee which will work out details for mobilizing the industry. The personnel of the Planning Com mittee, all of whom have consented to serve, is:

Cooling System—$10

F. J. Quartemont of the Fox Plaza in Milwaukee recently turned a neat trick when he transformed the theatre's small heating plant into a satisfactory cooling system at the unusually low cost of $10. The temperature chart, kept regularly, indicated a temperature at all times from 10 to 15 degrees cooler than outside. Warm air from outside is led over a series of heat radiation pipes over which cold city water is kept constantly flowing. A rack filled with ice beside the pipes cools the air. From there, the cooled air is drawn into the theatre by means of a blower fan. He even gets the ice without charge, through a tieup with a local ice dealer.

Northwest in Arms Over C.O.D.—ing

C. O. D. shipments of films, against which numerous complaints from Northwest exhibitors have been registered with the Allied organization, will be discussed at the annual convention of the Northwest Allied unit, to be held at the Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis, September 9 and 10. Indications are that the meeting may assume national significance. Independent exhibitors from widely scattered sections of the country, together with national Allied officials, will attend, according to Bennie Berger, president of Northwest Allied.

Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States, and Al Steffes, Allied official, will be in attendance. Steffes, who has been directing the fight of Chicago independent exhibitors against the operators' union in that city, will report on the Chicago labor situation at the convention.

"The association," said Berger, "has received many complaints from exhibitors stating that companies are C. O. D.-ing films for amounts greater than the cost of that particular film. Should such a shipment be made by parcel post, the exhibitor should file a complaint with the postmaster immediately as it is against the rules of the postal department to ship any film for a greater amount than the actual cost of the shipment, and should such a shipment be made by express I would advise that the shipment be refused and the theatre be closed for the day. The exhibitor should then have his attorney replevin the film and ask for damages from the film company for losses sustained while the theatre was closed," Berger advised.

REHABILITATION OF COLOR STARTS WITH 20 FEATURES SCHEDULED BY 5

Six Major Companies Still To Form Color Plans

Producers Will Not Force Bulk on Public As They Did in '29—Adopt Method of a Slow "Build-Up"

Color is about to claim a new lease on life. A minimum of 20 features are on the 1931-32 schedules of five distributors, with six companies still undetermined on a color policy.

Forced into a year's idleness through admitted imperfections and the death-blow it received as a partner to musicals, color will be developed, beginning immediately, along more natural and saner lines than the overdone, forced treatment it received at the hands of producers during its short-lived career of one year ago. It will be "built up" over a period.

Warners' new contract with Technicolor is for six features in color, work on the initial opus beginning October 5, to star Winnie Lightner. First National will have color features. Five are to be made this year by RKO, including "Fanny Foley" and "Runaround," already completed; "Bird of Paradise," "Marcheta," and "Babes in Toyland." Paramount has contracted for eight, with at least two for the current year. "March of Time" and "Merry Widow" will be M-G-M's candidates. Universal has no contract, but is stated to feel partial to color. Fox is "flirting" with color. The favorable attitude of RKO officials will probably react at the RKO Pathe subsidiary. United Artists is uncertain, likewise Columbia, Tiffany and Educational.

The new two-color process has been aided considerably by Eastman's new speed film, and will, in the opinion of Natalie Kalmus, Technicolor executive and color director, permit of a normal black-and-white studio schedule. The price of prints has been reduced from 8.85 cents per foot to seven; the necessity of additional lighting no longer exists, colors have been softened and the flicker and grain of former Technicolor pictures have been eliminated, Mrs. Kalmus said.

At the beginning of the recent color era, Warner Brothers tied up practically all Technicolor cameras along the West Coast. This seriously hampered other producers and it was not until the musical-color cycle was well under way that a readjustment ironed out the situation. The ensuing rush overloaded the color plant and further difficulties arose. Producers insisted that they handle many of the technical details of color, including selection of materials, costumes and sets, which should have been done by color experts and the result was color which impaired rather than helped most pictures.

In addition, Technicolor had not perfected its process, admittedly, and the public's

Film Stocks Gain $19,095,677 in August; 4th Among 20 Groups

A gain in market value of amusement shares for August of $19,095,677, which compares with a decline in July of $22,853,075, is indicated by a stock survey by the New York Times.

Five issues are listed in the amusement group in the survey, which embraces 20 different commodity classifications. Amusements are rated fourth in the index, with five issues showing an average net gain of 1.375 points.

Twenty-five railroad stocks showed a net gain of 4.190 points; oil stocks, a net gain of 1.590 points; third are nine chemicals with a gain of 1.514 and amusements fourth. The latter issues include Fox Film "A", Loew's, Paramount-Publix, RKO "A" and Warners.

Railroads, chemicals and oils were at the top of the recovery list for the month, but amusements ran ahead of building stocks, business equipment, chain stores, copper, department stores, foods, leathers, mail order houses, motors, motor equipments, public utilities, railroad equipment, rubbers, steels, sugars and tobaccos.

Four of the five amusement issues showed gains and one lost. Warners showed the greatest increase with $11,403,621 and RKO "A" smallest with $2,675,819. Fox "A" showed a market value decline of $3,638,490 from July. The comparison follows:

	Aug. 28th, Shares Listed	Closing July, 1931.	Closing Aug., 1931.	Net Change.	Increase.	Decrease.
Fox Film Corp., Cl. "A"	2,425,660	16	14½	— 1½	.....	$3,638,490

Film Piracy Charged By Pathe Exchange

Seizure of more than 1,000 reels of film by Federal deputy marshalls at the storerooms of the Metropolitan Motion Picture Company, Newark, New Jersey, reveals film piracy operations of a large scope, according to Frederic Bellinger, of Coudert Bros., bankers for Pathe Exchange Inc., who instituted the raid.

Charges of violation of the copyright law were made against Claude L. Seiberg, president of Metropolitan, who will be arraigned next Tuesday in a Newark court. Seiberg stated that he had in his possession a bill of sale for the film, but Pathe denies that it has had any dealings whatever with Seiberg or his company.

Most of the films seized were Pathe comedies, although several features, including one as recent as "Holiday," are said to be included in the seizure.

Agfa and New York Labs On Creditors' List of U. S.

A meeting of creditors of the defunct U. S. Film Laboratory will be held early next week, at which time an investigation of alleged irregularities in management will be launched. Agfa-Craft, Malcolm and Filmlab are creditors.

M.P.T.O.A. to Make Bid for Independents

Revamping the organization scheme of the M. P. T. O. A. for the express purpose of gaining membership among independent exhibitors and dissipating the impression that distributor circuits are in control of the organization will be proposed at the association's annual convention to be held this winter, M. A. Lightman, president, announced.

The plan provides for the sponsoring of new organizations and the conducting of an extensive membership drive among unaffiliated exhibitor units, such as the Philadelphia zone, the Ohio, Cleveland, Connecticut associations, and the new Texas unit which was organized last year in protest against the censorship stand of Will Horwitz, president of Allied Theatres Association of Texas.

Revamping of the organization calls for election of a director to represent all affiliates, whether they be municipal, state or regional organizations. The distributor circuits, however, will be allotted only one representative each on the board.

President Lightman will head the membership drive if the plans for reorganization of the M. P. T. O. A. are approved by the national convention, at the forthcoming Winter session.

PARAMOUNT STARTS PLAYER TREK TO LONDON FOR BRITISH FILM MAKING

3,693 Wired in Britain

Film theatres in the British Isles showing talking pictures now total 3,693, according to reports from London. The number of silent theatres still operating is placed at 1,313. Of the total wired houses, 1,332 have Western Electric equipment, which added 31 to its installations in July.

Specific Selection Of Supplies Urged

Methods of equipment selection that emphasize actual demonstration under conditions of the theatre, are urged by C. H. Fulton, president of E. E. Fulton Co. Naming the selections that must be made in the planning of a theatre, as first, the selection of an architect; second, selection of a general contractor; and third, selection of the equipment and furnishings, he declares that it is the latter which most often does not receive the consideration due it, largely because the buyer does not realize the changes that today makes equipment more specifically related to a certain theatre.

Suggests Following Individuality

"Lighting fixtures," he states, offering an example, "are made in the majority of cases especially to order, and such made-to-order fixtures are not found in the ordinary electrical display rooms. Being made to order, the selection should be made from ideas of different types and designs of fixtures, of which drawings or pictures are submitted to meet the individual installation. The same is in general true of many other items—signs, chairs, carpets, draperies and so on.

When it comes to the ventilation of a theatre, selection of dimmer systems, stage lighting and rigging, there is no advantage to the buyer to have these items displayed in a store. In each case the specifications vary, and they must be particularly adapted to each individual case.

The Fulton Company is preparing a program of expansion involving a new plan of equipment distribution designed to reduce overhead and operating costs and thus to realize lower prices.

Rudy Vallee Will Make Two Short Films For Paramount

Rudy Vallee has been signed by Larry Kent, Paramount short production chief, to appear in two one-reelers, which will be made soon at the Eastern plant at Astoria, Long Island, for release this season.

Aubrey Scotto will direct. "Musical Justice," by Sammy Lerner and Sammy Timberg, will be the first.

'Serious' British Efforts to React at Hollywood

Warners, First National, MGM, Fox, Radio, Universal All Lining Up For Production in England

London Bureau, the HERALD

Film making at British studios by American companies is expected within one year to become a vital part of Hollywood, rather than a necessary evil forced by quota requirements, as heretofore.

Eventually, it is believed, the number of feature pictures made at Hollywood will be reduced, with London production efforts maintaining an even balance on release schedules of American companies.

Deportation of English players now at Hollywood to London has been accepted by Paramount and Radio as the solution to successful English pictures, productions which will have an unquestionable appeal in name value at American theatres and at the same time completely satisfy distribution needs of each company in British possessions. The quota requirement, of course, is an additional reason.

Robert T. Kane's announcement at London that Paramount will bring many of its key writers and directors from Hollywood and from their new Joinville outfit near Paris, to concentrate on production of "first-rate" British pictures, will doubtless precipitate a situation at London in which most of the major American producers having British affiliates, will, if only for purely competitive reasons, adopt a similar policy. What they have to gain is best known to themselves. Certainly the gradually mounting British quota is a factor which has exercised the minds of American executives. Then there is the further question of native "atmosphere," which undoubtedly has a value at the British box-office.

Except in unusual circumstances, Paramount will not, according to Kane, employ on their Elstree lot other than British players. And among the writers whose work will be translated into pictures between now and Spring are Rudyard Kipling's "Light That Failed," to be directed by Alexander Korda, and Arnold Bennett's novel "Barbary Sheep."

Among other fixtures in the Paramount British schedule are Ernest Vajda's "Fata Morgana," to be directed by H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast; "L'Assurance," by Saint Granier, in which the French actor, Fernand Gravey will star; a subject by Martin Brown, author of Valentino's "Cobra;" two stories by May Edginton, whose "Child In Their Midst" is now in production with Louis Mercanton directing.

It is significant that Paramount said nothing of these plans until after the initial British production had reached the screen. This was received with press acclamation al-

"E. W." Dolling Up

E. W. Hammons' Educational West Coast Studios are having a "facial": that is, the entire front facade is being done over and an elaborate array of nine illuminated 24-sheet boards are being specially painted, telling the world all about Ideal, Mermaid, Cameo, and other company product, including the James Cruze features.

Skouras Seeks 55 Fox Eastern Houses

A deal between Spyros Skouras of Skouras-Publix Theatres and Harry Arthur, Fox theatre executive, for 55 Fox houses is reported to be in a well-advanced stage of negotiation.

Fox Film franchises are said to figure in the negotiations for the theatres which will probably be acquired on a long-term leasing arrangement. Affected by the proposed transfer are 21 theatres in the New Jersey division, four of which are now dark; 18 houses in the New England division, and 16 in the New York division.

Skouras could not be reached for a statement, but Arthur admitted that negotiations were under way.

Following is a complete list of the theatres involved.

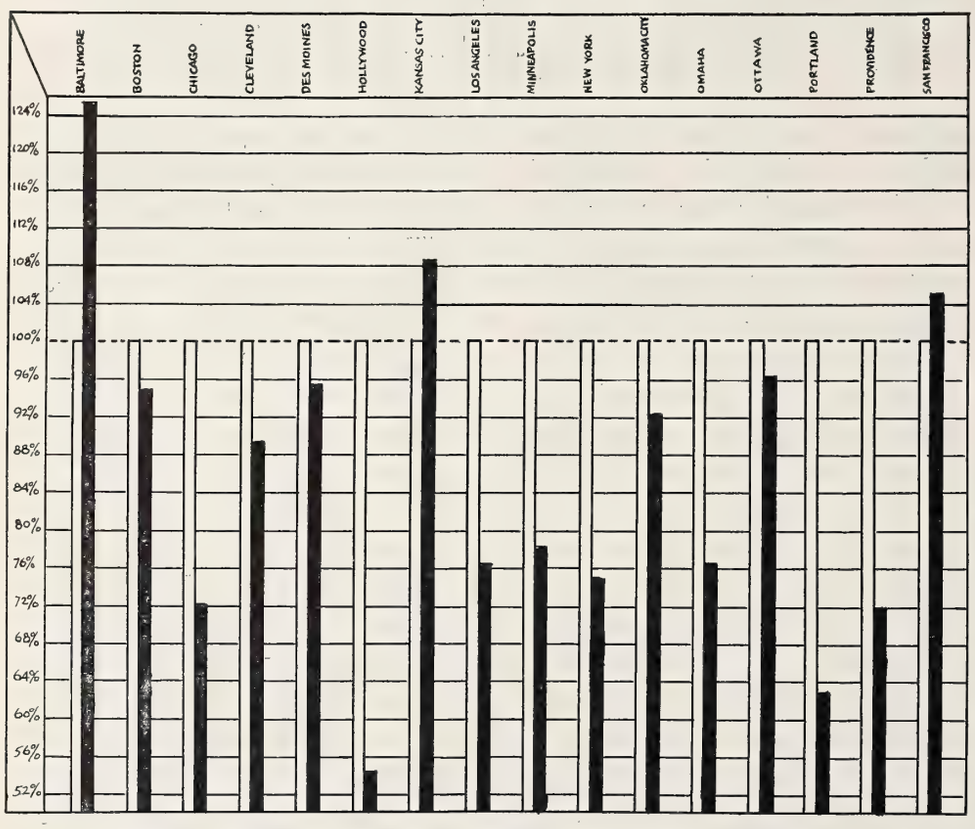
B. O. Intake in 3 Keys Above 100%



Baltimore, Kansas City and San Francisco box office receipts are running ahead of last year. Figures for June, July and the initial two weeks of August show Baltimore running 24% above the same 1930 period, while Kansas City and San Francisco admissions are nearly 10% higher.

In the chart above, the white bar represents box office receipts for June, July and the first two August weeks in 1930. A comparison with the same period in 1931 is indicated by the black bar.

Victory Claimed By Chicago Theatres In One-Operator War

A "complete victory" in the fight of Chicago independent exhibitors against the operators' local of that city is claimed by Al Steffes, Allied States leader, who has been acting as strategical advisor to the Chicago exhibitors involved.

With city departments co-operating with the exhibitors in the licensing of unaffiliated projectionists so that approximately 100 "imported" operators have now been licensed to work in Chicago theatres, attorneys for the exhibitors have agreed to withdrawal next Tuesday of the temporary injunction restraining police from interfering with unlicensed projectionists. Daily examinations are being given the "imported" operators so that it is believed enough licensed men to operate the independents' projection machines will be available by the first part of the week.

During the week past, approximately 100 projectionists were taken to Chicago from southeastern cities. Atlanta furnished the bulk of these, most of whom were transported in private cars attached to fast trains.

The Chicago independent theatres are now entirely on a basis of one operator per shift per theatre, and are accepting the present situation as a permanent one. No further negotiations with the Chicago operators' local will be advanced by them, they say, and add that future overtures will have to come from Tom Maloy, business agent of the Chicago union.

Three Chicago theatres, one of them owned by Aaron Saperstein, president of the Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois, were bombed one week ago while Tom Maloy and other union officials were in New York conferring with William Canavan, president of the I. A. T. S. E. The state's attorney's office attributed the bombings to the union and charged Maloy with attempting to establish an alibi by journeying to New York. They announced that charges of contempt would be instituted against Maloy for leaving the state while under indictment.

The theatres bombed were Saperstein's Olympia, the Ridge and the Ray. The bombings resulted in injuries to two children who were thrown from their beds in nearby homes by the force of the blasts.

The Chicago theatres are still under a heavy armed guard by police who have instructions to "shoot to kill" in order to prevent further attacks and vandalism.

60 Bookings on German Pictures

David L. Apfelbaum of Foreign Talking Pictures, Chicago distributor of foreign films, reports 60 houses lined up for German features in Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana and Illinois.

Apfelbaum sees the necessity of the distributor cooperating with the exhibitor in educating the latter in the best methods of advertising and gaining support for foreign pictures.

The company has begun an effort toward organizing other language bookings in the same territory.

Union Theatres Earn $114,825

Union Theatres (Victoria), Ltd., of Australia, showed a net profit of $114,825 for the year ended March 31, as against $134,720 for the period of operations from February 13, 1929, to March 31, 1930. At a meeting of shareholders, before whom the annual report was tabled, Edwin Geach, managing director, stated that payment on the preference dividend would be deferred.

Develops Process of Making Film, Using Sugar As a Base

Arthur S. Ford, English chemical engineer in New York, after more than 40 years of research and experiment, is reported to have been successful in transforming sugar into a plastic substance from which, it is claimed, non-inflammable film can be produced.

Ford claims he can produce celluloid for all purposes, at low cost. It is understood a large American chemical corporation is understood to have interested itself in the discovery, commercial production being expected shortly. The product is called "sakaloid."

UNANIMOUS

AS GREATEST OF YEAR

"YOU'LL ADORE IT"

Dunn has done it. He has completely won our hearts with a single role . . . Unquestionably, one excepted, the greatest find of the year . . . Sally Eilers does better than we ever imagined she could do, and the fact Dunn steals the picture isn't her fault. It's only because his is the sort of electric appeal that strikes the public once in a blue moon . . . Another achievement of that ace director, Frank Borzage of "7th Heaven" fame . . . Comedy that will kill you and pathos enough to bring the tears to your eyes. You'll adore it.

—Rob Reel, Chicago American

"RATES 4 DIAMONDS"

One of the most understanding, most human and most entertaining pictures of this year. Such skillful direction and such splendid acting that Dot and Eddie are as real to you as if you'd grown up with them. You'll laugh and sympathize in their fun and struggles, weep over their troubles and understand them. Sally Eilers and James Dunn LIVE it for you—and it's absorbing.

Doris Arden, Chicago Daily Times

"JAMES DUNN A SENSATION"

If you want to laugh or cry, see "Bad Girl." A record breaker. Very human. James Dunn is a sensation. He has a tremendous ability to jerk the heart muscles by his acting. Scene in doctor's office one of finest ever shown on screen. Sally Eilers a fine little actress. Borzage's work charming.

—Eleanor Barnes, Los Angeles Illustrated Daily News

"HUMOR, NATURALNESS, PATHOS"

James Dunn begins his screen career with a performance which is going to put him in the very front rank of screen favorites. The humor, naturalness, pathos in the situations and above all the charm of the leading players, combine to make "Bad Girl" one of those pictures a wide section of the public thoroughly enjoys.

—Genevieve Harris, Chicago Evening Post

"COMPLETELY CAPTIVATED ME"

I was so completely engrossed in this human, interesting tale that I was lifted out of myself. It's the first time in many a day a motion picture has so completely captivated me. Story told with a graphic beauty and an intensity that will make movie fans out of the most hard-boiled audience. One of the best directed pictures of the year. James Dunn excellent.

—Louella Parsons, Los Angeles Examiner

"MEMORABLE"

Borzage possesses the ability to stir the emotions. Fine direction. He has carried Sally Eilers and James Dunn toward something very closely resembling the high places of tragedy. Dunn enormously likable.

—Philip K. Scheuer, Los Angeles Times

"AMONG TEN BEST PICTURES"

When the time comes to pick the ten best pictures of the year, there is one which ought to appear on every list. It is "Bad Girl." Nothing half so tender or heart warming has come out of Hollywood in many months. There is no doubt that James Dunn is a real discovery. Sally Eilers is fine.

"BEST SINCE '7th HEAVEN'"

"Bad Girl" is splendid. Extraordinarily clever performances of Sally Eilers and James Dunn. Searching, brilliant, gentle direction of Frank Borzage. The finest thing he has done since "7th Heaven." —Winifred Aydelotte, Los Angeles Record

"NOTHING SHORT OF A SENSATION"

Literary gem nothing short of a sensation as a movie. James Dunn walks away with the histrionic honors like a cinematic cyclone. Sally Eilers carries the title role in splendid fashion . . . It is real—something terribly genuine. Borzage's genius made the characters seem alive. The scene in the doctor's office is one of the finest ever witnessed upon the screen. It's marvelous! —J. S., Los Angeles Evening Express

SUPERLATIVE!

"4 STARS"

A mighty good picture. Has everything from laughter to tears. A thing of beauty as well as 4 star entertainment for everybody. James Dunn will take your breath away.
—Helen Harris, Detroit Daily Mirror

"SURPRISE PICTURE OF YEAR"

An achievement which should make all concerned justly proud. Genuinely human. We guarantee that this will stir you as practically nothing else has. If there are tears in you you will make use of them during one of the most astounding scenes which has been played before the camera—when James Dunn implores the famous surgeon to come to his aid . . . This is the surprise picture of the year. —E. de S. Melcher, Washington Star

Misunderstood Labor

Amicability between labor and exhibitors in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, was threatened recently by a gesture of good will on the part of the operators' local directed at one exhibitor and misinterpreted by others.

The operators' gesture consisted of the insertion of a paid advertisement in a paper there congratulating W. L. Ainsworth on the reopening of his Garrick theatre and commending Ainsworth for his past friendliness toward organized labor.

The advertisement, in the opinion of chain exhibitors at Fond du Lac, was capable of being interpreted as a slight against circuit houses, inasmuch as it bore no mention of chain employment of organized labor. The impression was corrected by the union in a second paid advertisement explaining the first and restoring community good-will on all sides.

"AMPAS-WAMPAS . . . 'Baby Stars' . . . pshaw . . . as long as you've got your health," was the way Michael L. Simmons, President Extraordinary of the A.M.P.A. castigated the current controversy when smoked out of his lair by a MOTION PICTURE HERALD correspondent. . . . One doesn't send a reporter to "Six-Syllable" Simmons. It would be infra dig. One sends a correspondent and catches all the fine nuances of his Wagnerian resonance, his Olympian virtuosity and philosophical calm. The HERALD'S minister-plenipotentiary was well equipped to carry the day. His collar was freshly starched, his monocle correctly adjusted and his gaiters le dernier cri. . . .

"Reports from the coast," continued our Prexy, "lead me to believe that an organization there called the Rompers the Wimpers . . . oh, I forget the exact name, are having baby trouble. The wires beat a tempestuous tattoo of calumnies, protestations, retractions, accusations and reprisals. . . . It all can be settled so easily. . . . Let them eat cake." . . .

So saying, the venerable administrator of the destiny of several hundred motion picture publicists, sat back and chuckled with the serenity of a cigar-smoking Buddha. . . .

"Of course," wheezed 'Old Six' when prodded further by the insistent interviewer, "I see poetic evocations of a sort in this clash at arms. It brings my mind back to the day when man was in the grip of barbaric forces and had to shift for himself. "But what's all this got to do with the Ampas-Wampas question on 'Baby Stars'?" begged the interlocutor. . . .

Prexy Simmons picked his teeth thoughtfully with a paper knife, carefully masticated, digested and savored the question succulently before answering: . . . HOLLYWOOD BLAMED FOR INDUSTRY EVILS AT M-G-M PROTEST MEET AT N.Y.

tained in a message from the exhibitors of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, the organization which sponsored the meeting.

Specifying the Metro sales policy as the primary reason for the meeting, the exhibitors' message stated that it was but one of a number of industry problems which threatened the thousands of theatre owners of the country, the tens of thousands of employes, the vast army of stockholders in its enterprises and, in a more general way, the millions of theatre-goers."

Hollywood came in for the brunt of criticism and attack for "mounting production costs, poor pictures, crazy competition for stars, a riot of extravagance and waste—all of which are passed on to theatre-owners and theatre-goers."

"There has been an increase of 200 per cent to 400 per cent in production costs in the past five years, but a corresponding decrease in the quality of pictures," the message said. "Thirty thousand dollars a week for stars but no dividends for stockholders; a general increase in film prices and percentages for the tenth consecutive year despite the fact that in the past two years all other commodities have decreased 25 per cent, and the maintenance of the score charge—the most outrageous financial policy ever imposed on a helpless industry," were among the alleged industry evils cited in the message.

The message called upon industry leaders to "deflate Hollywood by a widespread reduction of the absurd salaries paid to stars, directors, executives and other favored ones, and save the industry." It contained a demand that "film selling be based on the theatre's capacity to pay, and not on the distributors' ability to collect." It asked that producers devote themselves to the making of better pictures rather than to the operation of neighborhood theatres which "you have demonstrated by ample proof is legitimately the field of the independent exhibitor. Turn these costly playthings back to the independents who know how to operate them profitably," the message admonished.

"The best pictures were made several years ago when the producer had to turn out quality or stay out of theatres, and not as at present where there is an assured outlet for pictures in producer-owned circuits," it continued. "Such an outlet," it concluded, "guarantees a showing, but does not guarantee a profit. One outstanding success followed by six 'flops' is a poor average to boast of in picture making."

Following these general arraignments of the industry, George Aarons, secretary of the organization sponsoring the meeting, guided the discussion to a specific attack on the Metro sales policy, which he termed "a menace."

He said that the meeting was designed for constructive settlement of this and other industry problems, and was not "a destructive attempt to tear down Metro."

Amity Marks Protest Meet

Amity between exhibitor bodies at the national Metro protest meeting in New York was apparent to everyone. Absence of discord, flashes of humor and ready relinquishing of personal viewpoints in favor of majority opinion, were particularly noticeable.

Exhibitors recalled that this was the first time in years so many different groups had gathered together with one objective in mind. When, on the few occasions that a brief, militant note was assumed, exhibitors were reminded by Chairman Walter Vincent that the attitude of the meeting was one of passive resistance and that "futile fighting" was to be avoided.

Northwest Allied To Thrash Metro Protection Tilt

Failure of Metro to institute a 45-day protection schedule over Publix in the Northwest will be protested at the annual convention of Allied Theatres of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, at Minneapolis, on September 9 and 10.

In a communication to members, Bennie Berger, president of the organization, states: "The 45-day protection over Publix theatres which Metro was to institute a short time ago was no myth, only they apparently backed down after the organization had taken the matter up with New York and the proper authorities. This will be verified by a number of exhibitors to whom the proposition was clearly explained by Mr. Workman, manager of Metro, and will be taken up on the convention floor."

The Metro contract was described by Herman Blum, president of the M. P. T. O. of Maryland as "a one-sided partnership with Metro participating in the profits and the exhibitors standing the losses." He concluded that "exhibitors cannot afford to buy Metro product on this year's basis—it would break them."

M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., stated that "Metro's policy was its own responsibility. Personally," he continued, "I think it is a mistake. It is certainly reckless action to increase the exhibitor's burden at this time. However," he said, "Metro at least did not make any half-way move in this. It went all the way, and in doing so aroused this united opposition against its policy. We really owe them our thanks for doing that."

Lightman urged the meeting to consider the practices of other companies which, he said, were as onerous as Metro's.

"The United Artists' contract," he said, "is as bad or worse than Metro's. Although theirs is a flat rental basis, the charge is exorbitant, and the only alternative is a 50-50 split on the company's first three pictures. Fox, in some sections, asks high percentages and guarantees," he charged. Columbia's contract also came in for minor criticism.

Paramount, Lightman said, has no set policy on percentage and appears willing to conduct negotiations with individual exhibitors.

"The box office is the only thing left to exhibitors," Lightman concluded. "We have to guard it against the raids of distributors."

Suggested action against Metro was collective or individual boycotting of Metro product, overtures for legal or legislative action, or resolutions. No action was taken by the meeting on any of these suggestions.

A recommendation made by Chairman Vincent that Nicholas Schenck be invited to address the meeting on the subject of the Metro contract, and Harry Warner on score charges, was accepted, but it was learned that Schenck was obliged to leave New York and Felix Feist then consented to appear. Harry Warner advised the meeting that, since the recent death of his son, he had avoided public appearances. Sam Morris, suggested as an alternative, sent a message to the meeting in which he indicated there was reason for exhibitor optimism in the matter of Warners' attitude toward score charge relief, although no definite statement to this effect was contained in the message.

Feist, in his address to the meeting, intimated that Metro would apply the contract with reason and fairness to individual situations.

"There may be instances where protest is justifiable," he said. "Metro has never ignored a justifiable complaint. However," he said, "I think this protest is premature. If it is proved during the year that our sales policy is really unfair, the protest should be made at the end of the year, and if redress is not had the crucifixion of Metro should take place during the year following.

"However," Feist continued, "it is inconceivable that the same minds that conceived this year's sales policy will say that it must be renewed next year, if losses from it actually result. Such action is just not in the cards. Exhibitors have nothing to fear from a Metro sales policy or contracts," Feist declared. "The company has returned better pictures on the whole than other company's. Metro's past record earns it the right to attempt this policy, and if it results in hardships to the exhibitor, let him bring his complaints to the company

SMPE TO DECIDE POLICY ISSUES AND NEW SLATE

Goldsmith and Sease Are Nominated for Chair

Hollywood Situation Involving M. P. Academy Technician Membership Scheduled for the Floor

The members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers are balloting by mail in the annual election of officers. Results are to be announced at the fall meeting at Swampscott, Mass., in session October 5-8.

The principal contest is for the office of president. The nominees for this office are Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, vice-president and chief engineer of the Radio Corporation of America, and Dr. V. B. Sease, director of research for the DuPont Film Manufacturing Company.

J. I. Crabtree, of the Eastman research staff at Rochester, has held the office for two terms and declines to again be a candidate.

The Society is faced with a considerable array of policy problems, the most important of which is presented by the Hollywood situation, where a large majority of the engineers and other eligibles have joined the Technicians Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, a definitely west coast rather than national organization. The Hollywood membership in the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is relatively but a handful. The unofficially expressed attitude of the Academy branch is to hold aloof from the Engineers. It is held, among some of the leaders of the Society, however, that the Academy attitude is geographical rather than political and it is likely that discussions of a possibly more workable relation will be among the early considerations of the incoming administration. It is held to be obvious, at least in some quarters, that the great producing machine of Hollywood might well have a more intimate organization relation to the workers of the great technological plants and laboratories of the East.

Plans for the Society's Swampscott session are yet in the making. It is a possibility that a number of the early workers and pioneers of picture technique will figure in the social functions of the meeting.

The remainder of the formal ticket of the election includes:

E. I. Sponable, director of Research and Development, Fox Film Corp., and M. W. Palmer, electrical engineer of Paramount Publix Corp., for vice-president.

J. H. Kurlander, commercial engineer of Westinghouse Lamp Company, and R. E. Farnham, commercial engineer of General Electric Co., for secretary.

H. T. Cowling, moving picture engineer, Eastman Kodak Company, and W. B. Little,

Anti-Trust Danger In Standard Contract Is Overcome by MPTO

Objections to application of the new standard contract based on anti-trust regulations have been overcome by M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., who proposes submitting to exhibitors each company's individual contract together with the standard contract, thus permitting the exhibitor to elect whichever contract form he desires.

A paragraph superimposed on the standard form of contract stating that the exhibitor has his choice of either that or the company's individual contract, is proposed by Lightman. This, it is believed, eliminates all possibility of objections to the standard contract which are based on alleged collusion.

Increased Quota Backed by Trade Union at London

By W. H. MOORING, London

The Film Group of the Federation of British Industries—embracing all the principal British film producing units—has not yet given up hopes of an increased British quota.

Political "strings" are being pulled with the General Council of the Trades Union Congress, which is an organization of no little political significance.

Recently, members of the T.U.C. were escorted through the studios of British International, accompanied by officials and members of the F.B.I. That they were impressed by the growing importance of the British industry as a channel through which to arrange absorption of some of the non-employed labor which at present is giving all the Trade Unions a terrific bank run, is not to be doubted.

Immediately afterwards, a joint sub-committee, composed of members of the F.B.I. and the General Council of the T.U.C., was formed to report on conditions affecting the British picture field. This report will, it is expected, be put before Governmental authorities after passing the T.U.C.

And it is almost certain that the T.U.C. will be prepared—subject to certain conditions—to lend its official support to the principle of amending the Films Act of 1927 so as to increase the British quota from 35 per cent to 50 per cent.

It appears foolish for the film group of the F.B.I. to nurse the illusion that this newly found interest on the part of the T.U.C. in the cause of British films, is confined merely to increasing the quota and so creating slight reactions in favor of British unemployed. It in fact represents part of the declared policy of the Trade Unions to secure better conditions for workers in the film and cinema industries generally.

Within recent months, the Minister of Labor, has been pressed by the unions to do something to clean up the scandals said to exist in regard to conditions and salaries obtainable in this business—notably in British cinemas. Trade Union officials were often found quoting instances of what they termed unfair wages. The activities of some of these people was aimed in particular at circuit theatres, some of which, following recent rationalization and consolidation schemes, had used every known method of cutting staff wages.

In the main, conditions have remained stationary and in view of current industrial affairs, and their natural repercussions on the box-office, improvements in wage standards and general conditions are extremely unlikely.

It is with due realization of this fact that the T.U.C. has entered into this new relationship with the members of the producing industry. Acting on the axiom that one good turn deserves another, the T.U.C., after giving its wholehearted support to the F.B.I. plea for a larger quota, will turn to the employers in the business—in several notable instances the self same people who are in film production—with a serious demand for reconsideration of existing wage scales.

Paramount Starts Player Trek Abroad

though it obviously—as J. C. Graham openly admitted—was merely an experimental beginning. Mercanton's new film stars Jack Buchanan, which fact should appeal to British audiences, and the whole scheme seems to make a deal set at this market and those of British Dominions.

Jack Warner, who a few weeks ago announced that his company had decided definitely to commence the serious production of British pictures here, has since been negotiating with Henry Edwards, British star, whose company owns the newly converted studios at Teddington, near London.

Sam Eckman, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, though unwilling to commit himself to an official pronouncement as to when his company will start making films here, admits that the matter is well under consideration. At the moment, an MGM executive is on his way to London to look over the situation with a view to reaching a decision without delay. One difficulty which impresses itself upon Eckman, and doubtless upon other American executives facing this particular step, is that of finding suitable studio facilities all ready for them to take over.

Fox executives on this side have not in the past viewed the prospects of an excursion into British production with enthusiasm, but it is unlikely that this important unit would remain unrepresented—for long at any rate—in a British studio field which boasted of Paramount, Warner, Metro and Universal (Carl Laemmle is said to be on the verge of arranging the same British unit system for his company). Hitherto the policy of Universal in this respect has been to buy pictures solely to satisfy quota footage.

Radio, of course, is already making London films.

Nance of Texas Finds "Round Table" Source of Profit

A ringing note of optimism and a highly constructive attitude toward the functions and responsibilities of the motion picture theatre as an integral part of its community is expressed in a general bulletin issued to house managers by Mr. F. D. Nance of the Hall Industries Theatres, from his office in Beeville, Texas. Mr. Nance has written his bulletin around the activities of our Managers Round Table department so vigorously conducted by Mr. Charles E. Lewis. This recognition of this element of* Motion Picture Herald's *service is the sort of commendation which compensates for unending attention and effort. It is too a tribute to that large array of showmen whose contributions make the Round Table that alert, living, responsive mechanism that it is. Mr. Nance's bulletin appears below.---TERRY RAMSAYE.

TO ALL MANAGERS:

Please refer to Page 64, of the issue of August 15th, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, article headed "LANDERS USING MANY WORTHWHILE STUNTS TO SELL AZTEC." In it you will find a wealth of information, practical to your own particular community. There also appears in this same issue several other articles of particular interest to this section. I believe that each of you can line up some of these attractions and put them over to a good advantage, especially at this time of the year.

We have several new managers on the circuit who are not members of the MANAGERS ROUND TABLE CLUB, and to these men, an urgent appeal is extended to join now. It costs nothing to become a member. Just clip and sign the coupon appearing in each issue of the HERALD and mail it to club headquarters. DO THIS NOW. . . . Don't put it off another minute.

And boys, after you have become members of this club, don't think your duty is finished. Remember the slogan "ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL." Remember, you are gathering valuable information from its pages. When you pull a stunt, do your part by contributing this to its pages, so that others may be benefitted by your success.

Keep up the interest in this club. I am going to watch future issues for contributions from the Hall circuit, and each of you are pulling stunts each week that merit attention on its pages. Keep the ball rolling and help out all the other boys whose daily problem it is to sell entertainment to a most critical public.

Be optimistic. . . . Don't preach gloom. . . . Remember you are selling entertainment to the masses, not the classes. Reflect in your sales messages the general spirit of optimism. . . . Create a greater desire to see your shows, and do all you can to restore the general prosperity to this section.

Don't hesitate to call on this office for any aid that you desire. And, above everything else, read those HERALDS each week and cash in on the many exploitation stunts listed.

Sincerely,

F. D. Nance.

Long Delay For Writer Agreement

Indications at the moment in Hollywood point to a collapse of the plan for an agreement between writers and producers on studio writing practices. The agreement may be delayed for a year or more, and it is felt certain that none will be reached within six months.

The chief reason assigned for the breakdown of successful negotiations is the weakness of box offices at the present time. The producers are not inclined to continue conferences inaugurated by the Academy, writers seeing in the attitude a reluctance to enter into any agreements which will disturb studio working conditions.

The royalty idea is attracting much attention, the studios giving much attention to the proposals for paying writers percentages instead of carrying them on an annual payroll. The best writers are for a salary and percentage basis, and several studio executives have expressed themselves for the royalty system.

Rehabilitation of Color is Started

stern refusal to continue to feed the musical cycle with its box-office dollars brought the short-lived color era to a sudden end.

The past year has been needed to further develop the technical phases and it has given the public an opportunity to forget the mistreatment. Now, says Mrs. Kalmus, the stage is set for a slow, but certain adoption of color by the motion picture industry. That which was done in three or four months, in 1929, will be spread out over a two-year period.

Fifty Technicolor cameras are available in Hollywood. No longer is it necessary for Technicolor men to crank the company machines. Cinematographers of producers are being taught color photography, so that cameras may be rented, or leased, on a flat basis of $90 per week. The cameras cost $10,000 to build; formerly they represented a $15,000 investment.

Camera rentals, however, do not provide a source of profit. That comes from the laboratories at Boston, handling most of the print work; and at Hollywood, where negatives and first prints are developed. They have a combined yearly capacity of 90,000,000 feet.

The new Eastman supersensitive speed stock does not require special sensitizing by Technicolor. Formerly, this had to be done. The Eastman stock, with developments in the new color process, has results in lighting being cut down to less than ordinary black-and-white requirements.

Rush prints now are turned out in 12 hours and finished material in black-and-white time. Shooting schedules for black-and-white pictures can be applied on color films.

Technicolor, according to Mrs. Kalmus, views the industrial and non-theatrical field somewhat as the electrics, Erpi and RCA, who see both fields eventually becoming larger than theatricals. And although Howard Hughes has sewed up a number of commercial laboratories for his Multicolor, Technicolor plans a drive aimed directly at industrial concerns which use short reels in promotional work.

What is expected to prove an important factor in color is the re-coloring of the poor quality color pictures released in the cycle of 1939. Technicolor claims it can make new prints of these pictures with the new process, giving them all benefits of the new system.

Howard Hughes offers financing to Multicolor users, but Technicolor will not enter that phase of production.

A. W. Erickson, chairman of the Technicolor board, denied that the company is readying for legal patent action against other processes. The company was recently granted 230 patents at Washington and, according to Erickson, "these make infringers of every color process existing." He did admit that if and when other companies develop, action may be taken.

The three-color process now being developed by Technicolor will not be ready for market until late in 1932. It has yet several technical stages to reach before perfection.

Hollywood Is Blamed for Evils

and if they are found to be justifiable he may expect adjustments."

The producer's responsibility to the exhibitor, Feist said, makes it necessary to speculate and hazard with productions in attempts to find the new and different picture with box office value. He said that this is frequently an expensive procedure, borne almost entirely by the producer. He said that losses from Grace Moore and Lawrence Tibbett productions were not all borne by the exhibitor and intimated that "The Trail of '98" would result in a loss to Metro of more than $1,000,000.

"I could name 20 other pictures," he said, "on which Metro will incur losses because they were made for purposes of experimentation."

He said that changes of release dates were made because of the necessity for retakes, which, in turn, were merely efforts to improve productions to their fullest possibilities before releasing.

On the conclusion of his address, Chairman Vincent, who through a pooling of interests with Loew's and his own Wilmer and Vincent circuit in Norfolk, is, in a sense, a partner of Metro's, remarked that, "Mr. Feist could do no more and give no less. In his position you would do the same."

Some exhibitors saw in Metro's policy a defense move designed to protect the company's new product sales on a final basis comparable to that of last year. These exhibitors charged that the Metro product of last year "wasn't so good, and the company knew it." As a result, they said, Metro thought ahead and made its exorbitant demands with a view to ultimately compromising on a sales basis as good as it obtained last year.

M. A. Lightman stated that it was not the purpose of the meeting to tell Metro how to sell or to eliminate percentage playing entirely. "Percentage is not always unfavorable, but frequently desirable," he said. "However, there is need to obtain an adjustment of Metro's percentage demands and other phases of the contract. It would be desirable to get back to the basis of the company's last year's contract, against which there were few complaints."

Checking Bureau Flayed

Lightman described Metro's demands for seven pictures to be played at 35 per cent of the gross receipts, seven pictures at 30 per cent, and none at less than 20 per cent, as "unfair." He also asserted that Metro asked too many Saturday and Sunday playdates for its pictures.

Federal Checking Bureau and its operating system came in for criticism from the exhibitors, who stated that they seriously objected to "detectives" at their gates.

Chairman Vincent countered that it was the dishonest exhibitor who made the institution necessary.

The meeting adopted a resolution presented by Lightman placing the exhibitors in attendance on record as being opposed to further production of gangster "and other demoralizing pictures," and asking the producers to confine themselves "to clean and wholesome pictures, which the majority of the American public want."

Copies of the resolution were forwarded to all producers and to newspapers and trade publications.

A resolution was also adopted approving the 5-5-5 contract and asking that it be put into effect immediately by the producers.

The Continuing Committee was instructed to further negotiations with distributors and producers for the elimination of the score charge and the changing of release dates. The sentiment of the meeting, although not embodied in resolutions, condemned the practice of tying in short subjects with feature sales and intimated that in the event this practice was not entirely eliminated Federal authorities should be advised that distributors are departing from that particular of the trade practice agreement in several situations.

The objectives of the meeting were endorsed by Allied States in a communication from Abram F. Myers, president, who was unable to attend. Herman Blum was delegated by Myers to represent Allied.

The following theatre organizations were represented at the Metro protest meeting. Representation was either in person or by proxy, with an estimated 7,000 theatres involved.

THE NEW STRAND

AT GROVE AND MAIN STREETS, EAST ORANGE, N. J.

July 15,1931

Mr. Herman Robbins, President,
National Screen Service,
126 West 46th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Robbins:

I am sure you will be interested in the results of a test made recently in my theatre, The Strand, in East Orange, New Jersey.

Like all exhibitors, particularly in these times when every dollar must count, I was anxious to know what form of advertising was bringing me the most business.

For two days during the showing of "Skippy" and two days during the showing of "Strangers May Kiss" patrons were asked to indicate on the enclosed ballot their reason for attending the show. They had been previously advised of the test by a screen announcement.

In the four days there were 8134 admissions. I received 1265 answers, 80% of them, by mail. The results are enclosed.

Inasmuch as this is a second-run house and both "Skippy" and "Strangers May Kiss" had tremendous "word of mouth" advertising, I was not surprised at the showing this question made. I use thirteen newspapers, in surrounding towns - going as far even as Newark - and the high percentage for newspapers certainly was a complete vindication for this form of advertising.

But what surprised and pleased me most was the high effectiveness of the trailers. There were 218 patrons - 17⅓% - who came in solely because of the trailers. Considering that thirty-five admissions - about nine a day - paid their cost, they certainly are profitable.

I know that you and exhibitors in general will be interested in these figures and you have my permission to use them.

Sincerely yours,

Adolph J. Rettig

Directing Manager.

CANADA OPPORTUNITY SEEN FOR BRITISH FILMS

Patriotism, Probe and Publicity Vital Factors In Rare Chance For English Made Product

The British-made picture, which for the past 10 years is said to have enjoyed but indifferent success in Canada, has at the moment a rare opportunity to prove itself, in the opinion of exhibitors and exchanges throughout the Dominion.

The one possible drawback to a definite success of home product, as far as the Dominion is concerned, is the Canadian public's attitude toward English pictures. By reason of a more or less consistent succession of weak film efforts from English studios in recent years, Canadian picture-goers are said to be unsold on the idea of patronizing home product.

Many major factors lead to the belief that an exceptional opportunity faces British films at the moment. These include:

(a) The film probe report which aroused considerable discussion in favor of British films on patriotic grounds;

(b) Vocal boosts for British pictures by vote-catching politicians, both federal and provincial, also on patriotic grounds;

(c) Talk of film quota legislation in Ontario and British Columbia and also at Ottawa;

(d) Newspaper editorials favoring British films and condemning U. S. pictures, particularly the gangster films;

(e) The adoption of resolutions favoring British pictures at conventions of women's and educational organizations;

(f) Real activity on the part of British film representatives in Canada;

(g) Publication of British film departments in important newspapers of key cities and publication of news features regarding advancement of British production methods, with illustrations;

(h) Establishment of distributing arrangements for British pictures by important Canadian companies, such as Regal Films Limited, Canadian Universal Films and others;

(i) Lenient attitude toward British productions by censor boards in several provinces of Canada;

(j) Sympathetic treatment of British pictures by outstanding newspaper reviewers, such as S. Morgan-Powell of the Montreal Daily Star and Augustus Bridle of the Toronto Daily Star;

(k) Actual improvement in British talking pictures and the general knowledge that British players have made good in Hollywood on their own.

Taken in the aggregate, these are reasons enough. In their combined effect, they must get some results, it is admitted.

Canada never has had sufficient British films to make a quota law of any practical use but the time has arrived, it is felt, when there are enough British pictures of current release to enable Canadian film exchange executives to pick and choose what they wanted. Recent conferences have been held at Toronto to select British films for the coming season. Such men as Clair Hague, veteran manager of Canadian Universal; Oscar Hanson, recently of New York, and Arthur Lee, representing Gaumont British in Canada, have been holding a series of meetings to pick 15 pictures for the Canadian market.

Among others, there is Regal Films Limited, the president of which is N. L. Nathanson, former managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corp., and the man who is credited with building up the Famous Players' circuit of 200 houses in Canada. Nathanson established a British Films division within the Regal organization and appointed Dewey Bloom as manager. Regal has announced 25 British features, a large proportion of which are British International pictures, for Canada. Some have already had their first runs in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and elsewhere and encouraging results have been reported. They included "Speckled Band," "Uneasy Virtue," "Skin Game," "Plunder" and "Tell England." Objection was raised to the latter in some instances on the ground that it was too realistic and too brutal. These pictures, known as the "Victory Group," have "Dreyfus," "Carmen" and "The Ringer" coming, and these are confidently expected to be successful. Frederick S. Revell, the Canadian representative of British International Pictures, has been having interviews published in the daily newspapers that have added coals to the British fire. Incidentally, Regal Films Limited is the Canadian distributor for M-G-M and RKO-Pathe releases.

New Movietone House at Berlin

Berlin film circles this week celebrated the first anniversary of the starting of Fox Tonende Wochenschau, German Movietone News, and the opening in the German capital of another continental newsreel theatre. Fox is the backer of both enterprises.

The new newsreel house is a 500-seater, formerly known as the Oswald and is located on the Kurferstendam.

One year ago, Truman H. Talley, general manager of Movietonews, supervised the organization of the German newsreel, launching the project when he invited the German press to an hour's trade show of newsreel subjects.

Ben Miggins is European director for Movietonews, with Russell Muth, supervising in Berlin.

In addition to producing and releasing Fox Tonende Wochenschau, the Berlin staff makes up eight other reels for that many different countries. It also makes up a special reel for the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. Countries supplied with newsreel by the Berlin office are: Holland, Dutch East Indies, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Yugo-Slovakia, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark.

In addition the German reel protects the other four Movietonews centers, London, Paris, Sydney and New York, in the matter of news interesting to the reels assembled in those cities.

$1,500,000 Suit Expected Against Consolidated Lab.

H. J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film, this week confirmed reports that a suit is about to be filed against Consolidated in Los Angeles by Insurance Co. of North America, Royal Insurance, and other insurance companies, for approximately $1,500,000 on account of losses paid by the insurance companies to various producers whose negatives were destroyed in the fire, which occurred at the Melrose Street laboratory of Consolidated in Los Angeles, in October 1929, based on the claim that the negatives were destroyed on account of the negligence of the laboratory.

Yates said that Consolidated had been advised by the attorneys for the insurance companies that they intended to institute suit shortly against the company and its stockholders, under the California laws providing for stockholders' liability for corporate obligations incurred in the state.

"Our attorneys in New York and Los Angeles who have for several months past investigated the claims of the insurance companies, have advised us that these claims are without foundation," Yates said. "We are fully prepared to defend this suit whenever the insurance companies bring it, and we have no concern as to the ultimate outcome," he concluded.

Universal Will Produce In France; To Start With Three

At a Paris luncheon in honor of George Melles, French producer, Carl Laemmle announced that Universal is ready for French production. Negotiations have already been completed for the production of films with native companies, for distribution in Germany, England and France.

N. L. Manheim, general manager of Universal's foreign department, in New York, said the company will make three pictures in France, and indicated that Universal is making no extensive commitments in foreign countries, as yet. "We are going to feel our way and if they go over we will make more," he stated.

First Allied Reel Out

The first issue of the Kinograms-Allied newsreel was shipped by Educational exchanges on August 29, according to Captain G. L. McL. Bayne, producer. First subject is an advertising film showing the method of assembling Ford cars.

Stanwyck, Fay Out of Films

Barbara Stanwyck and her husband, Frank Fay, have announced at Hollywood that they are definitely through with pictures, following Miss Stanwyck's contract controversy with Columbia.

Paine Returns From Coast

Charles B. Paine, treasurer of Universal, returned to New York Wednesday from his annual trip to the Coast.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Business in theatres in 29 cities during the current week indicated a continuation of the increased grosses which featured returns in recent weeks, following a drop last week from the previous seven days. Grosses this week in 29 cities showed an increase of $6,000 over last, the figure being $2,260,729, as compared with $2,200,697 last week. Two new highs and only one new low for the current week, compared with no new highs and six new lows last week, is a further indication of the upward trend of box-office business.

Yorke In Charge of All Fox Theatre Advertising Work

Gabe Yorke of Fox is now assistant to Glenn Griswold, head of advertising and publicity, and takes charge of all advertising and publicity for Fox West Coast theatres and Fox Eastern houses, as the result of a shift in the advertising and publicity setup. His headquarters will be in New York.

Glendon Allvine continues as head of Fox Film advertising and publicity, with Lee Balsley in charge of accessories. Eastern and Western editions of the house organ The Last Word, are being combined under the editorship of Joel Swenson, assistant to Yorke.

Independent Branch Closes

Independent Pictures, Inc., had closed its Cleveland office, and all booking of Independent pictures is now being done through Selected. The Cincinnati branch office of Independent is still in operation under management of Chester Loewe.

MGM Buys Two Stories

M-G-M has purchased the screen rights to "Hot News," newspaper story by Emil Gaureau and Mokey Delano stories of Jennie Harris Oliver, a group centering about a juvenile character.

A Possible Shift of United Artists Foreign Setup Seen

There is a possibility in the near future of changes in the foreign distribution system of United Artists, and a general cutting of the number of exchanges abroad.

Decision will be definitely reached after a joint survey of the situation by Joseph M. Schenck and Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president of foreign distribution, abroad. Schenck will join him after three weeks in Hollywood for production conferences.

Louis Meyer to Coast On Oct. 1

Louis Meyer, of Meyer-Reiger Laboratories, has postponed his departure to Hollywood from New York until October 1, in order to complete details of a fall sales campaign.

Michael Hoffman resigned from the Warner music department to join Meyer-Reiger as director of musical and synchronization work.

Radio Set For Five

Five major productions are scheduled to get under way at the Radio Coast plant, between September 15 and October 1, including "Marcheta," "The Dove," "Penthouse," "Peach O'Reno," and an original by Louis Weitzenkorn.

Big 4's Schedule Adds 18 to New Feature Movement

Big Four is in the new independent movement to fill the feature gap expected from a shortage of product from major producers-distributors.

In addition to the group of independents listed in last week's survey of that field, all of which are rushing plans to get to market before Labor Day, John Freuler's Big 4 company is readying the first of 18 features for that date.

There are to be released, at the rate of one a month, 12 out-door films, divided into two series: six starring Bob Custer and six starring Buzz Barton. The first, "Headin' for Trouble," is now completed. J. P. McGowan directed.

The initial Buzz Barton Western, "Cyclone Kid," will go into production next week. Other Westerns include: "Lure of the Range," "Desert Spawn," "Rip Roaring Broncs," "Mark of the Spur," "Blazed Trails," "Highway Riders," "Hard Pan Gulch," "Rio Grande Raiders," "Guns and Saddles" and "Quick Trigger Lee."

Script is under way on "Dance Hall Kisses," first melodrama on the schedule. Casting will begin shortly, to be followed by "Big City Shadows," "Devil's Decoy," "Railroad Mail Limited," "Diamond Mystery" and "Midnight Prowlers."

Ohio Censor Seen Going As Exhibitors Ignore Edicts

Ohio state censorship is regarded by many as so full of loopholes and by others is so disregarded, that numerous exhibitors believe the beginning of the end of censorship in the state is not far off.

The censor, Dr. Beverly O. Skinner, or his two women assistants, are empowered to make whatever deletions they see fit, but they have no assurance that the deletions will be in the least regarded by exhibitors throughout the state, and often enough they are not, it is generally conceded.

Maryland Removes 21,250 Signs After Restriction

Approximately 21,250 signs, billboards and posters have been removed from Maryland roads in two campaigns following a legislative act licensing and restricting them under the Roads Commission.

Revenue from licenses has already amounted to $10,845. The Rivoli has just engaged 16 24-sheet stands for the reopening of the house in Baltimore. They are taken for two weeks at strategic points around Baltimore.

Vitalgo Opens Midwest Studio

A studio for production of theatrical and industrial subjects has been opened at Chicago by the Vitalgo Corp., manufacturers of sound-on-film equipment.

"Nevada Buckaroo" Finished

"Nevada Buckaroo," second in Tiffany's new series of 10 Bob Steele westerns, has been completed by Trem Carr. J. P. McCarthy directed.

IN the MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC just published by Quigley Publications of America, Martin Quigley presents for the first time in the Annals of the Trade an exhaustive analysis of the corporate structure of the industry, including details of the complete personnel of each company, the State in which it is incorporated, details of its organization, the authorized number of shares and their market value, banking affiliations, etc. In addition there is a complete "Who's Who" of production and studio executives and players, all classified and sub-classified, motion picture directors, cameramen, art directors and other technicians, besides a whole fund of information concerning various film stars, casting agencies, film publishing companies, laboratories and important recent film releases.

Of particular interest to British producers with an eye on the American market is the reproduction of the code regulating the production of motion pictures in America as recently framed by the Hays organization. It is, in fact, not so much a matter of what appears in this remarkable publication; it is difficult to discover anything of interest which concerns the many ramifications of the American industry which does not appear in MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC. It is correctly described as a reference book of the industry, and a most authoritative and reliable one at that. It will be in demand not only throughout the whole of the American film industry, but will be found invaluable to everyone connected with Motion Pictures in any country throughout the world.

Palmy Days

(United Artists)

Musical Comedy

Better than "Whoopee" was the verdict of a preview audience on Eddie Cantor's new picture, "Palmy Days." Samuel Goldwyn, producer, and Eddie Sutherland, director, have turned out a show which has just about the right proportions of story, comedy and music.

The splendid supporting cast, headed by limber-legged Charlotte Greenwood, aids Cantor to put over a world of typical Cantoresque antics, most of which take place in a bakery operated by a chorus of girls who out-Ziegfeld the best set of Follies girls for pulchritude and dancing talent.

Cantor, Morris Ryskind and David Freedman did the book with Harry Askt and Con Conrad on the music. Busby Berkley and the girls do the best dance ensembles ever seen on the screen. It looks like this ought to help President Hoover relieve any one of their feeling of depression.

Produced and distributed by United Artists. Story and dialogue by Eddie Cantor, Morris Ryskind and David Freedman. Continuity by Keene Thompson. Directed by Edward Sutherland. Cameraman, Gregg Toland. Film editor, Stuart Heisler. Release date, September 26, 1931.

Partners of the Trail

(Monogram)

Western

The audience was not noticeably enthusiastic at this latest effort of Tom Tyler, where he turns bad man for once.

Tyler plays Larry Condon, who murders the wife of another man in Boston and leaves for the West, there to steal whatever he is able to get away with, in a career of robbery. Durant, played by Reginald Sheffield, as the murder victim's husband, has meanwhile been arrested, accused of the crime and lodged in the Boston jail.

He makes good his escape and starts after the real perpetrator of the murder. They meet in the West, unknown to each other, and both fall in love with the same girl, a burlesque dancer, working as a waitress in order to accumulate enough money to return to her home in the East. Tyler finally reveals his identity.

Durant does not kill him, as he had planned to do, but lets him go after Tyler has confessed to the sheriff. Durant is absolved of the crime for which he had been imprisoned and gets his reward in the form of the girl, played by Betty Mack.

Produced and distributed by Monogram Pictures. Story by G. A. Durlam. Directed by Wally Fox. Recorded by Balsley and Phillips. Release date, July 11, 1931. Running time, 64 minutes.

Consolation Marriage

(Radio)

Drama

A rather frail story expertly told by Director Paul Sloane with an excellent cast including Irene Dunne, John Halliday, Pat O'Brien, Matt Moore, Myrna Loy and Lester Vail. Miss Dunne registers high in a characterization quite different from her previous ones. Halliday also looks very promising.

The story is about two young people (Dunne and O'Brien), who are fed up momentarily on their respective sweethearts (Vail and Loy), and in their moment of depression decide to marry for mutual consolation. Later both find renewed interest in their former lovers and their marriage almost goes on the rocks. Then a baby comes and all is well. The picture has wholesome, and at times whimsical flavor.

Produced and distributed by Radio Pictures. Directed by Paul Sloane. Story by William Cunningham. Cameraman, J. Roy Hunt. Assistant producer, Myles Connolly. Art Director, Max Ree. Assistant director, Charles Kerr. Sound engineer, John Tribby. Adaptation and dialogue by Humphrey Pearson. Release date, November 21, 1931.

A Dangerous Affair

(Columbia)

Comedy-Drama

An audience at the Fairfax on the Coast, where this latest Columbia Jack Holt-Ralph Graves effort was screened, was actually convulsed with laughter at some points and chilled by thrills at others, indicating real entertainment in the film, a combination of comedy, drama and mystery.

Murder, laughs, thrills, ghosts and all the rest have their share of time on the screen. The audience apparently enjoyed hugely the comedy lines throughout the film, and was equally taken by the mysterious moments.

Holt and Graves are friends, the former a police lieutenant, the latter a reporter. The neighborhood in which they live becomes so dull that Graves decides to stage a little excitement all his own, and steals a necklace, the property of Sally Blane. He plans to return it the next day, but some one again steals it and the two have to solve the mystery.

In the course of their investigation, they spend much of their time in a haunted house, where spooks and the usual strange doings are found in abundance. The family lawyer and a jeweler are killed before the crime is solved.

Holt and Graves were extremely well received by the audience. Miss Blane was considered attractive and appealing and others accorded praise for their work were Eddie Brophy, Susan Fleming, Blanche Frederici, William V. Mong.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Original story, adaptation and dialogue by Howard Green. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Cameraman, T. Tetzlaff.

The White Devil

(Talking Picture Epics)

Drama

The Russian-Caucasian troubles of 1853 form the central theme of this Ufa film, which is being handled in this country by Talking Picture Epics. It is a film adaptation of Leo Tolstoi's "Hadschi Murat," originally made in German and dubbed in English. Ivan Mosjoukine plays the lead. Lil Dagover plays the feminine role opposite as the dancer in whom the Czar takes a sudden and violent interest, but he loses in the end, as expected, to the star.

Infinite attention, comment indicated, was paid by the director to detail in unfolding his plot. At the opening sequence the Caucasian villagers are shown engaged in their joyous dancing and singing, when the town is bombarded and laid waste without warning. The dancer is taken prisoner. Hadschi Murat with a band of men, pursues and overtakes the army, and captures a number of them, though disobeying the orders of his superior, in so doing.

Ostracized by his fellows for his act, he joins the Russian army as a guest of the Czar, planning revenge on his hosts. He succeeds in wreaking his vengeance on the insurgents and at the same time escapes with the dancer. Though it nearly ends in his death, the hero comes through safely and is reinstated by the Caucasian general, father of the dancer.

Audience reaction was favorable.

Produced by Ufa. Distributed by Talking Picture Epics. Adapted from Leo Tolstoi's "Hadschi Murat." Directed by Alexander Wolkoff. Release date, August 27, 1931. Running time, 77 minutes.

The Road to Reno

(Paramount)

Drama

A preview audience in Hollywood received favorably this Paramount effort, which has for theme the divorce mill at Reno, and for central character, an habituee, played by Lilyan Tashman as the much divorced woman.

It is a highly sophisticated bit of film fare, and comment at the theatre was in praise of the deft manner in which director Richard Wallace handled his theme and players.

Lilyan Tashman goes to Reno to divorce husband Irving Pichel, and is accompanied by her daughter, Peggy Shannon. Peggy meets and falls in love with Buddy Rogers on the train. In Reno, Lilyan becomes involved with William Boyd, there to marry for money. When Rogers returns from the Coast to marry Peggy, he discovers her seeing Boyd frequently and warns her against him. She refuses.

Pichel is notified that Boyd is playing both Lilyan and her daughter, but he refuses to interfere. Tom, Peggy's brother, goes to Reno, and at the wedding ceremony of Lilyan and Boyd, comes the punch scene of the picture, when Tom, a neurotic, kills Boyd and commits suicide. Lilyan returns to Pichel and Buddy and Peggy are married, in a usual conclusion.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Richard Wallace. Adaptation by Josephine Lovett. Based on story by Virginia Kellogg. Additional dialogue, Brian Marlow. Cameraman, Karl Struss. Release date, September 26, 1931. Running time, 73 minutes.

Good Mourning
(Vitaphone)
Comedy-Sketch

Eddie Foy, Jr., stars in this Vitaphone sketch, assisted by Al Klein. Eddie and Al fake a duty to attend a wake for their "dear pal, Bill Thomas," in order to play hookey from their wives. While the husbands are drinking with two girl friends, the late lamented Bill Thomas phones for Eddie and the wives decide to wait up for an explanation. The husbands return tipsy and when they're checked up on the wake yarn they explain that they have been to a show. Eddie stands behind the wives and imitates various vaudeville acts to Al, who is describing the bill. Then the wives read a news dispatch that that theatre had burned to the ground, and the jig is up.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Tennis Technique
(M-G-M)
Splendid

This is number 1 of the tennis series featuring "Big Bill" Tilden and there is plenty in it. The tennis champion uses two, a boy and a girl, who know little about the game, as pupils. Tilden explains and demonstrates many of the game's fundamentals. Slow motion and stop shots with the camera vividly portray the points Tilden brings out. Tennis players will get much in the way of instruction and enjoyment from the film, and non-players will find it very interesting.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Navajo Witch
(Talking Picture Epics)
Interesting

This is a silent number with accompanying dialogue, picturing customs and habits of the Navajo Indian tribe. One interesting sequence shows an Indian boy capturing an owl as a playmate. An attempt was made to build a story around these pictures of the general life of the tribe, without always sufficient justification. However, an interesting effort.—Running time, 14 minutes.

Spring Training
Great

Here is the first of the Football for the Fan series, and it is great stuff. Featured in the short are Howard H. Jones, University of Southern California coach and several assistants. Pictured is something of the routine and detail work involved in spring training. Various other well known coaches have their places in the film. Football fans should get a real kick out of this.—Running time, 9 minutes.

A Mellon-Drama
(RKO Pathe)
Good Fun

A preview audience at the Coast Fairfax enjoyed this Clark and McCollough comedy number more than a little. The comic pair are here cast as a couple of private detectives supposed to be protecting Jimmy Finlayson from a bomb plot. The comedy moves along swiftly as a result of the comedians' particular brand of nonsense.

100 Per Cent Service
(Paramount)
Amusing

Burns and Allen in a fast moving, clever and funny short number. Of course it is nonsense, but that doesn't matter, since this vaudeville team puts its lines over in a really amusing style all its own.—Running time, 10 minutes.

SHORTS

Calling On Cairo
(Talking Picture Epics)
Good Travelogue

Distance shots and silhouettes were outstanding in the photographic work of this production, a travelogue as the title suggests. It was produced by Central Film Company. There is musical accompaniment and a dialogue discription of the scenes. Voice reproduction was cloudy at the presentation attended at the Cameo in New York. The modern and the ancient were contrasted in the scenes of Cairo's up-to-the-minute buildings as against the old sailing vessels of the Nile, the bazaar with its camels and water buffalo for sale, and the Great Pyramid and the Sphinx.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Old Songs for New (Welshay)
Splendid

Here is a new and wholly entertaining slant on the musical picture situation. Handsomely mounted and beautifully photographed in Technicolor, it is one reel of fast comedy, reminiscent of the "gay nineties" and old favorite tunes that thrilled our grandmothers, our mothers and—in some cases—us.

Bob Welsh and Frank Shea engaged Georgie Stoll's band, which is a pip, and built around it a clever little story of the Sousa march days, the Anna Held days, the Barber Shop Quartet days. It is a swell little revue, all packed into nine minutes. Full of laughs, tuneful numbers and fine color, it is excellent novelty.

The Voice of Hollywood
(Tiffany)
Interesting

Guest announcer in this number of the series is Lew Ayres. Among those introduced in the S-T-A-R group are Charles Chaplin, Dolores Del Rio, June Collyer, Carl Laemmle, Constance Bennett, Mitzi Green, Chester Conklin. Picture goers should find this number of interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Fur Fur Away
(Paramount)
Fine Comedy

Smith and Dale do a neat turn in this tale of the two comedians traveling to Alaska to get furs to bring home, and it may be rated as one of their best comedies. The theme in itself is amusing and the smart dialogue does the rest. A New York Paramount crowd seemed to get a real kick out of it.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Wild and Wooly
(M-G-M)
Fast Action

There is real and very fast action in this number, which pictures a Western rodeo with plenty of punch. Pete Smith supplies a running fire of humorous comment during the progress of the short. There is a kick in the film for anyone.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Success
(Vitaphone)
Amusing

Jack Haley gathered a host of laughs at a Broadway playhouse as the near sighted lad who is forced to become a baseball star in order to win the girl's hand, since the father is a rabid fan. Haley puts over his comedy in his own peculiar way, and it is a laugh-getting way.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Beau Hunks
(MGM)
Funny

Laurel and Hardy in a comedy which will probably be released in about four reels, longer than their usual laugh-gathering efforts. This one is a parody on the Foreign Legion, with Oliver, in the first reel, the lover who loses and goes to the Legion to drown his sorrow, taking Laurel with him.

In the second reel the two as rookies are sent to fight the Riffs. Lost in a sandstorm, they arrive at the fort in time to save the day by spreading tacks in the path of the enemy, which is barefooted. Jean Harlow's picture is exhibited by Hardy as that of the love he has left, but every one else in the Legion has a similar picture. Jimmy Horne, director, takes the part of a Riff chieftain, and does it well.

The Naggers' Housewarming
(Vitaphone)
Funny

An audience at the New York Strand extracted a number of hearty laughs out of this number, featuring Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, the Naggers of this comedy series. Inheriting a house in the country, the bickering pair attempt a rapid preparation for a housewarming with expected results. Their antics and the attendant excitement provide some little amusement.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Tilden Tennis Subject No. 2.
(M-G-M)
Sports

The forehand stroke and the three approved methods of serving are discussed and demonstrated by William T. Tilden II in No. 2 of the M-G-M series of tennis shorts. The correct and incorrect service methods are demonstrated both by slow motion photography, and then shown in practical application in a fast-moving set. Running time, 9 minutes.

Volley and Smash
(M-G-M)
Fine

"Big Bill" Tilden continues his instruction in this, the third of the series, part of the "Sport Champions" group. Here again, various types of shots are explained and demonstrated by the champions. Interesting and valuable to tennis players, enjoyable to others.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Audio Review No. 2
(RKO Pathe)
Interesting

This number of the review holds general interest well with its highlight in the form of old pictures of Teddy Roosevelt at a St. Louis aviation meet 21 years ago. He had just returned from Africa and was soon to be president. Shots of the old planes are interesting. Walter Damrosch gives the recipe for making children enjoy music and demonstrates with his grandchildren. Italian fishermen handle fish, several hundred pounds each, with ease. On a par with the regular audio issues.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Julius Sizzer
(RKO Pathe)
Funny

Benny Rubin takes the lead in the dual role of "Little Sizzer" and his brother from Russia. Scissors are used instead of guns in the gangster warfare, which in itself is a novel and humorous notion. Benny succeeds in extracting the most from the theme and his part, which is enough to make it a good laugh number.—Running time, 20 minutes.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 92

Answer to question No. 92.—The question was: (A) Describe the sound gate. (B) Name the various types of trouble which may occur with relation to sound gates. (C) Tell us just what attention the sound gate should have each time before threading in the film. (D) Supposing there is a deposit on the sound gate film track, how should it be removed? Just what should be examined with relation to the film track through the sound gate?

THE following made satisfactory replies: Herman Billings, Henry Edwards, Evers Stanton, Alex Lodi, L. D. Daniels, George F. Hess, Jack Billings, Tom Dunwoody, Richard Singleton, Peter Cermak, Alexander Tilson, T. Van Vaunkenburg, Tom Avery, Sam Peters, George Richards, G. E. Doe, Neut C. Tomlinson, Another Doe, Dan Graves, Phillip Matteson, Nic Granby, Henry Skolman, James Ledbetter, Wm. D. Hotaling, Will Peck, Bob Danning, R. S. Singleton, Thos. McGurder, James Devoy, F. T. Leroy, Dan Myers, George Bailey, Wm. Bogert, Robert Banning, W. D. Samuels, Frank D. Bates, Robert Cressman, Thomas Dunraven, Bill Doe, L. I. Iler, J. Williams, Frank C. Trueman, Toot Lavenburg, B. G. Anden, H. R. Roist, David Moses, Lem Cody, Larry Tipton and John Tipton, Wm. Baker, Robert Lester, Peter L. Love, G. R. Christenson, Frank H. Dick, H. L. Manning, Geo. Sanders, L. Samuels, Wm. Jameson, H. D. Saxon, Tom Harris and Richard Leroy.

Quite a respectable showing, out of which the answers of Herman Billings, George Bailey, G. E. Doe, Bill Doe, Henry Edwards and Jack Billings appear best. I have selected the answer made by G. E. Doe as best suited to the needs of publication.

He says: "We are in a terrible mess here, Brother Richardson, won't you try to help us in any way you can?

So, here goes:

(A) The sound gate consists essentially of the same elements as are found at the regular projector aperture, namely a gate, gate latch, aperture plate, aperture, film tracks, tension shoes and springs. The purpose of the sound gate is to hold the sound track perfectly flat as it passes over the sound aperture, and at exactly a certain pre-determined distance from the slit.

(B) Troubles at the sound gate principally will be (a) Dirt in the sound aperture. (b) adherence to film tracks or tension shoes. (c) Adherence to face of sound sprocket. (d) Variations in sound sprocket speed and (e) failure to properly close and latch the sound gate after threading.

(C) Each time before threading a film into the sound gate, the projectionist must make certain that (a) the sound aperture is free from dust or dirt. (b) that the sound sprocket is perfectly clean—no adherence to the face of its rim. (c) That there is no adherence to either the tension shoes, the aperture film tracks at the aperture itself. (d) That the gate is properly closed and latched when the job of threading is completed.

(C) This is answered in (B).

(D) Deposits such as gather on the sound gate tracks or tension shoes, or on the rim of the sound sprocket may best be removed with a wet cloth. Such adherences may usually be removed easily, merely by rubbing with a wet finger. Some men use a typewriter or tooth brush wet in water, followed by a dry cloth, but I regard that as unnecessary labor; also there is danger of lint from the cloth lodging in the sound aperture, or a stray thread catching, unnoticed, on the sound sprocket teeth. I had that happen once and it cured me using cloths around the sound gate.

Important Notice For Projectionists

The Fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be held at the New Ocean House, Swampscot, Mass., October 5 to 8 inclusive. There will be an exhibit of new apparatus pertaining to motion picture work. If you have anything new which you would care to exhibit, get in touch either with Herbert Griffin, 92 Gold Street, New York, or M. Harris, editor-manager of the S.M.P.E. JOURNAL, 33 West 42nd Street, New York.

Don't wait too long, however, or you may find yourself shut out, as there will not be unlimited space available.

PROJECTIONISTS, TAKE NOTICE

As most of you are aware, the Standard Release Print is very badly damaged in the process of doubling-up reels, which is done in thousands of theatres. I have discussed the matter of releasing films on 2,000-foot reels with the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. In a recent letter from Lester Cowan, executive secretary, one paragraph reads: "From your long work in projection matters you will realize that the problem of reel lengths is far from being a simple one. It is, in fact, complicated by economic, labor, safety, legal, disc reels and many other factors.

"For a number of months we have been conscious of the damage done, as you have pointed out, by the doubling-up of sound prints. However, there are arguments on both sides as to whether release on 2,000-foot reels is the solution.

"I could, for example, name one local union which is 100% for 2,000-foot reels. I could name another of equal size, in the same state, which would fine a member for even suggesting such a thing."

Further along in this letter, Secretary Cowan says: "I agree heartily with you in one of your recent comments, that placing the blame on any one group—projectionists, exchanges or producers—does little good, as the blame could be passed back and forth indefinitely. In this matter there are sincere differences of opinion and judgments. The opinion, particularly of projectionists, must be further crystallized before further action can be taken. Any thing you may be able to do in attaining this end will be a most constructive service to the industry."

If every reader would do his duty, the matter of determining the opinion of Projectionists would be quickly solved. This is a matter which is going to be soon settled, one way or the other. The final determination of the matter will probably depend largely upon what position the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences may take.

Just now the most important thing to know is whether the projectionists of this country and Canadian America want prints released on 1,000 or 2,000-foot reels. If any considerable majority of them prefer the 2,000-foot reels, certainly that fact will have considerable weight in determining the final action taken. I would therefore earnestly suggest that, reluctant as the average projectionist is to writing, you make an exception in this case and write IMMEDIATELY to Lester Cowan, Executive Secretary, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, Suite 210, 7046 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, Cal., advising him as to your individual preference as to 1,000 or 2,000-foot reels. If several projectionists are employed in one theatre, then one letter might be written, something as follows:

"The men in the Orpheum theatre, Noname City, Ohio, prefer to receive film on reels of the length indicated by the figures following their signatures. Each man then signs, in ink, writing 1,000 or 2,000 after his name, according to his preference."

In fact, any enterprising projectionist in a small city in which there is no local, or even if there be one, might draft such a letter and ask all the men in that city or town to sign it.

If there be a local union I would further suggest that the matter be taken up at its next meeting, that a vote be taken and the same forwarded to Secretary Cowan as the action of the local. The matter is of very real importance, hence it fully justifies action by local unions, but let individuals also express their preferences. Most locals meet only once a month, and it is desired that some expression of opinion be had as soon as possible. Now men, at least this once get busy. If you don't, then no one is going to be especially interested in your squawk if the matter is decided the way you do not want it decided, and once decided it won't be changed again soon. You may depend upon that.

Lester Borst, Projectionist, Rivoli Theatre, Two Rivers, Wis., accompanies his answer to the Bluebook with the following: "I just finished projecting the first feature photographed on the new super-sensative film developed by the Eastman, Du Pont laboratories. What a revelation! The feature was M. G. M.'s, "Just a Gigolo." I cannot justly describe the beauty and depth of this new film. It should certainly relieve the minds of all those many Projectionists who have been complaining about poor photography. It should be a joy to all of us. As a Projectionist, may I offer my compliments to M. G. M. and to Oliver Marsh, the Cinamatographer of this production."

It will perhaps be a revelation to the Powers That Be to know that Projectionists make note of and take real pride and pleasure in improvements which enable them to put better results on the screen. This letter comes, not from a Projectionist in a large theatre, but from one located in a small Wisconsin town something like 50 miles north of Milwaukee.

And that reminds me: I have several times of late been asked concerning the progress made in steroscopic motion picture production. So far as I know, viewed from the commercial angle, there has been no progress made. However, certain improvements in various things have tended to somewhat increase the depth of the picture. Mr. Spoor, head of the old Essanay Company, worked very hard and expanded large sums of money in an attempt to give us true steroscopic pictures.

While I have never personally viewed the results of his efforts, that he did not as yet succeed seems to be proven by the fact that up to this time nothing has come of it. All other efforts in this direction seem to have failed also. However, I still have faith to believe that some day, some how, some one will solve the problem, and we will have true steroscopic pictures.

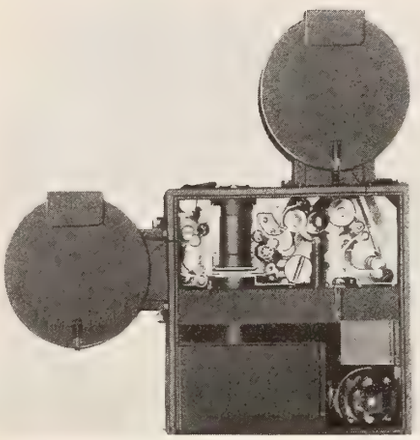
New RCA Portable Projector



RCA Will Market Portable Device Using 35mm Film

RCA-Photophone will market a new portable sound reproducing unit, designed primarily to meet demands in the fields of education and industry, although the new apparatus has been constructed to serve in any capacity where portable sound reproducing equipment can be employed.

The unit comprises a projector, amplifier, loudspeaker and a film carry-case, all having an aggregate weight of 200 pounds. The projection machine is 19 inches high, 19 inches wide and its breadth is 10 inches. The amplifier, which is built in a carry-case having a removable cover, is 26 inches long, 8¾ inches high and 11 inches in breadth. The loudspeaker, which is of the flat baffle type, is contained in a carry-case, the dimensions of which are 8½ x 19 x 14½ inches.

Standard 35 mm film is used and it is said adequate reproduction is obtainable in a room or hall having a content of 75,000 cubic feet when using the 8 inch directional baffle. A 6 inch dynamic cone speaker is supplied when the cubic content does not exceed 12,000 feet. A picture about 8 x 10 feet in dimensions is obtained upon the screen from a throw of 75 feet. The equipment is AC operated from an outlet of 105 to 125 volts, either 50 or 60 cycle, single phase power source. The total power required is approximately 12 amperes at 100 volts.

Connections between the various units are made by means of cables fitted with plugs and receptacles. For a complete set-up using one projector only four cables are required. One is for the power supply to the projection machine; one for the power supply to the amplifier which may be plugged into a receptacle in the projector; one to connect the signal circuit of the projector to the amplifier and one from the amplifier to the loudspeaker.

The projector is designed to accommodate a 1,000-foot standard reel, a standard series "I" theatre projection lens with limits of focal lengths of 3¾ inches to 8 inches, a one-thousand watt, 110 volt, pre-focused base projection lamp, a 10 volt, 7½ ampere exciter lamp and a UX868 photo-electric cell.

Photophone engineers collaborated with the engineering department of RCA-Victor to produce the unit.

It is understood that RCA-Photophone will employ dealer distribution along with its own selling organization in introducing the new portable apparatus.

DEAR HERALD:

WE note by a recent issue of this magazine that the editor and Mr. Walter Winchell, the editor of "The Daily Mirror," New York, have locked horns over the wording of a picture advertisement appearing in a former issue of this publication. It is to be hoped that the boys won't come to blows over a little matter of "syntax" or "split infinitives" or "genitive gerund" which might necessitate the janitor mopping the blood-stains off the office furniture with a sponge.

We agree with Mr. Winchell that ad writers for pictures are too prone to resort to sledge-hammer methods in the makeup of their ad copy, and, as grammarians, some of 'em, like ourself, would make good sheepherders, but why get all "het up" over so trivial a matter.

In writing ad copy, the use of too many adjectives, or the omission or addition of a word or two often changes the meaning, to illustrate:

Not long ago a dog fancier placed an advertisement in a county fair catalogue advertising his highly-bred airdale pups, and to make the ad impressive he wound it up in this manner. "Don't fail to come to the fair, and remember folks, I will have pups every day in front of the grandstand."

Now, if Mr. Winchell had written that ad he no doubt would have added the words "on exhibition" after the word "pups" which would have made a more correct sentence but which would have been less impressive on the reader's mind.

This is an age of progression, and in picture advertising they must hit 'em right on the nose with heavy stuff regardless of syntax, infinitives or genitive gerund or things like that, and picture advertising should be like home brew, the more sugar you put in it the sooner it will knock your hat off and the quicker the undertaker will have a job.

"LET'S DO THINGS" is a bang-up good comedy with Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd doing the most of the funny stuff, and when Zasu isn't funny, she's asleep. We missed seeing Zasu when we were in Hollywood a couple of years ago, but we met Thelma out on the Pathe lot when she was playing a bride part in a hill-billy story and she was decked out in a pink mosquito-bar netting which made her look like a million dollars to the hill-billy boys. We may be in Hollywood this coming winter, and if so, Zasu and Thelma can draw on us for a root beer anytime, but there will have to be two straws to each glass. Watcha say girls?

W. C. Weygint, projectionist at the State at Denver, was visiting relatives and friends in Neligh recently, and while here he paid us a visit and left his check for a year's subscription to the only magazine that carries ALL the news. "Billy," as he is familiarly known around these parts, operated shows at different points in Nebraska previous to going to Denver. He is a projectionist of recognized ability and the hum of a projection machine is sweeter music to him than the jazz orchestra in the pit. It ought to be or he might go crazy.

Our little grandson Bennie, went out to visit his Uncle Will on the farm and when it came time to do the milking his Uncle Will told the hired man not to milk the the spotted cow, that he wanted to dry her up, and Bennie said, "Well Uncle Will, if you dry her up how are you going to bring her back?"

Maybe it's that two weeks of intense heat we experienced up in North and South Dakota that affects our gourd that way. You will agree that something has, but anyhow, we can't get over the notion, Girtie, that this is the greatest nation on earth. We've got everything here but what we ought to have. We've got Republicans and Democrats and gangsters, and drys and wets, and pros and cons and several species not catalogued.

After Columbus discovered this country he left without apologizing for it. We have more laws and more law violators than any nation on earth. If a man steals a chicken the courts send him to jail. If he steals a million we send him to congress. The dry Republicans are scared to death for fear the dry Democrats will hijack their cellars.

The federal government will prosecute a man for non-payment of income tax on $200 or $300 he has made in an outlawed business and forget about the outlawed business so long as he puts up the jack. The Democrats claim that the Republicans are robbing the people and the Republicans claim that the Democrats haven't sense enough to run the government, and both are twitting on facts.

We send men to congress to make laws and we have more special committees appointed than is necessary to absorb the surplus. We fed the Belgians but we let our own people go hungry. The gangsters won't let a common bootlegger join 'em because they say he's too crooked. We will spend $10,000 for music and flowers for a charity ball to raise $2.50 for charity. We have a law against the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors, and yet we will loan the grape producers in California millions to make grape concentrates

No sir Gertie, you can't beat this country. We do things on a big scale here. We are getting more ego and less sense every day.

Maybe you want to know about the two new pictures we have seen.

One of these pictures was "BIG MONEY," a Pathe picture with Eddie Quillan, Robert Armstrong, Margaret Livingston, Myron Seegar, Robert Edison and James Gleason. This picture is semi- gangster, with a little love stuff and some comedy. The story isn't so very heavy but it is plausible and the picture, as a whole, gets by as very good entertainment. Eddie Quillan and Robert Armstrong are the ones responsible for most of the entertainment value, in fact we think Eddie does the best work in this one he has yet done, and our guess is that it won't be long until this youngster will be headlined provided he is given something to work with.

The other picture was First National's "MISBEHAVING LADIES," with Louise Fazenda, Lucien Littlefield, Emily Fitzroy, Lila Lee, Ben Lyon and Martha Maddox. This one is a comedy-drama built for entertainment purposes and isn't disappointing, in fact, it couldn't be with Louise Fazenda and Lucien Littlefield in it.

We doubt very much if either of these pictures will rate very high with city audiences because of the lack of suggestive and risque situations, they are not "spicy" enough to class as city entertainment, but rural communities will receive each of them favorably, especially "MISBEHAVING LADIES." If our opinion is worth anything to you exhibitors it migh be well to try these two with a little extra exploitation and perhaps you can persuade the public to forget some of the stuff you have been forced to run. But speaking of lumbago and hay fever—

We've got hay fever in our head
And lumbago in our side and back,
Our nose and eyes are both fire red
And we're about to jump the track,
And it's going to be most mighty tough
If we don't get rid of this damstuff.

When the waitress in a cafe up in North Dakota handed us a check for 95 cents for a half of a cantaloupe, two eggs over, a pork chop and a cup of coffee, we said to her: "Say Henrietta, wouldn't you feel proud if you were a hen and could lay eggs that would bring 15 cents apiece in this cafe while the eggs layed by the common barnyard biddy was selling for only 15 cents a dozen? Don't you suppose that that old sow would have felt mighty proud had she of known that she would be carved up and sold in here at the rate of one dollar a pound when common hogmeat was selling for twelve and a half cents? Where were you when the boys came back from France?"

She acted as dumb as she looked and she said, "Why, I don't know what you mean," and we replied, "Oh well, there's no use in rapping, there's nobody home." Then we paid the check and went out. Jesse James got his with a six-shooter, but some cafe proprietors get theirs through their dumb waiters.

Lend Me Your Ears!

WHENEVER some people have nothing else to do they decry the lack of new ideas in the exploitation of pictures . . . then along comes a picture or two to prove they are all wet . . . such was the case recently . . . everybody you met claimed the reason for bad business was no new exploitation . . . then came, not the dawn, but "Politics" and within ten days of it's release in various parts of the country we were being swamped with new slants in exploitation . . . not the usual stuff . . . no sir . . . but honest-to-goodness original gags . . . and they were clicking a hundred per cent everywhere.

Apparently competition is going to be keen in that race for prize money on the best exploitation for "Politics . . . We're featuring some half dozen of the campaigns already submitted in this week's issue . . . and several have appeared during the past week or two . . . Inasmuch as this picture is now being played all over the country, every showman ought to submit his exploitation campaign to M-G-M as an entry in this contest . . . We've been told that the closing date has been extended until Sept. 15th to permit later play dates to come in. . . .

If you're so old-fashioned that you "hide your light under a bushel" you are going to regret it some day. . . . Theatre operation in these days of circuits makes it absolutely essential for every showman to come out in the open and let the whole wide world know what he is doing. . . . The men who are getting anywhere nowadays, are the gents whose names are to be found in the trade press, not boasting of their accomplishments, but telling how they were able to do things, for the benefit of their brother showmen and the industry at large. . . . They're smart for taking that attitude. . . . If they kept themselves and their work under cover they would never have been heard of at all . . . and probably left by the wayside long ago. . . .

No medium exists in the industry today where a showman can express his views better than the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. . . . To contribute to these pages is to let the show-world know that you are on the job and doing things. . . .

Thirty-four hundred exhibitors, circuit managers and theatre-owners can't be wrong; . . . they represent the active membership of the Round Table Club and every one of them is proud to belong. . . . Their interesting activities are a source of valuable information on our pages week in and week out . . . get the Round Table habit . . . come out in the open and tell us what you are doing and how . . . . !

After making the rounds of some theatres during the recent hot "dog" days, Wally Allen went home and wrote a song which he dedicated to theatre managers . . . the title is . . . "I'm So Alone" . . . Mark Silver collaborated . . . Wally would also like to know what patrons thought when they saw this double feature up in marquee lights . . . "Caught Short" . . . "Under the Texas Moon" . . . and so would we. . . .?

What this business needs is more men like F. D. Nance, g.m. of the Hall Industries Theatres in Texas . . . There's a showman who inspires his house managers to do things with an eye towards prosperity . . . not gloom . . . and the answer is . . . they ARE doing business . . . (Home office chiefs, please note). . . .

The head of a national circuit told us, not so long ago, that his idea of a good manager was a man who had plenty of enthusiasm and imagination . . . did not cry over poor business . . . but tried harder for a better week . . . so keep that in mind when you find the bad weather or other causes holding down your receipts . . . forget the alibis . . . come through with enthusiastic new pep to make up for the bad break. . . .

If some of you muggs who like to kidd us about our so-called game of goluff will step in with your clubs, we'll take you out to the course and prove that we can run up the highest score. . . . We have a decided advantage . . . we don't tire as easily because we walk so short a distance between shots. . . . Anyone who would like to compete for the honors will find a customer right here. . . . Breakers of a hundred . . . or better . . . stay out of this argument. . . .

* * *

More things worth forgetting about: managers who stand around the theatre with several day's growth on their face . . . or snap their fingers at ushers and call them names . . . using the typewriter to write out the text for an ad . . . putting off 'til tomorrow what you ought to be doing today . . . visiting speakeasies with the riff-raff of the town . . . wearing a suit spotted with yesterday's gravy . . . or shoes that can't recall when they were last polished . . . giving the safe combination to the head usher so he can get change for the cashier while you are playing hooky from the house . . . or maybe I shouldn't have mentioned it at all. . . .

A B C's Of Selling Got The Dough For Clark On 'Politics'

"The A B C's of exploitation got the Do Re Mi on 'Politics'" is the expression used by W. A. Clark, publicity manager of Loew's Penn Theatre, Pittsburgh, to sum up his recent campaign on this picture. He is another entrant in the prize contest being run by M-G-M and now we'll tell you all about what he did to bring on a condition which warranted the holding of extra shows in order to accommodate the crowds.

A big torchlight parade, sponsored by the theatre and a leading newspaper, was undoubtedly a highlight of his campaign. Bands and gayly decorated autos, 40 of the latter, circulated through the downtown districts carrying Chester Hale Girls and Pittsburgh beauties. 750 banners lettered with the title of picture were carried by as many members of a press club and red fire enlivened the spectacle all along its way. Thousands witnessed the parade from the time it formed on the North side until it wound up in the downtown section, with bands playing and sirens screeching.

The reception accorded aviators Post and Gatty by the city, when 50,000 people attended the flying field, was also used to advantage by Clark. A huge banner advertised the picture and announcement was also made through the loud speaker system at the field. As the Post-Gatty parade neared the business section of the town, where thousands lined the sidewalks, it was preceded by a loud speaker truck announcing the flyer's arrival, concluding with a reminder not to miss seeing the picture.

Advance advertising included a special screening for a hundred local politicians who had just started their campaigns, including the Mayor, members of the City Council, etc. Newspaper men, reviewers and others also attended the showing. This produced an advance review in one of the papers, breaking on opening day and giving the picture a fine boost. Another paper ran a special "interview" story on Marie Dressler one day in advance. Radio broadcasts were made five days per week two weeks in advance and telephone girls reminded all 'phone callers over a period of two weeks that the picture was coming.

Special trailers also helped spread the news for two weeks in advance and all spots in the theatre were covered for the same period. Cards reading "Vote for Hattie for Mayor" were placed in prominent windows and voting machines, used in Pittsburgh for the first time, were displayed in the lobby. A chain of sandwich shops were tied-in with a guest ticket gag and cards were placed at each seat explaining how a customer could win a ticket. Another tie-up was made on the occasion of a city outing, winners of certain contests being awarded free tickets to the picture. 30,000 people attended the outing.

Additional effort consisted of big cutout displays, marquee flashes, house banners and a special 3x12 foot sign in lobby. An organlogue prepared by Loew's home office also proved effective aid for a week prior to showing. Special stories were run in thirty-three country papers, which with local coverage virtually blanketed every corner of the County.

All of which brought home the bacon to Clark and his theatre. The big parade must have been a corker and we're sorry not to be able to present a photo of it. A portion of one of the ballys, however, is shown on this page. There are a lot of managers putting forth some excellent efforts on this picture and Clark's work is right up among the front ranks. Good luck to you, W. A., and don't forget the Club on your next whirlwind campaign.

Smart Used Legal Questions To Sell "A Lawyer's Secret"

Interest in the legal questions involved in "Lawyer's Secret" was capitalized upon by Hugh J. Smart, manager of the Montgomery Theatre, Spartansburg, S. C.

He tied-up with the classified ad department of his paper for the insertion of a number of questions in special ads, answers appearing in the want-ad section, and all of them based upon legal terms. Three 2x9 ads appeared in the paper in advance of picture, showing photos of the principal members of the cast, title, theatre and playdates.

Prizes in the form of guest tickets were awarded to the ten people who turned in the neatest, most accurate and most original sets of questions and answers.

The general public usually responds to a contest like this because of its interest in questions of this nature and this fact is borne out by results attending Smart's effort. He secured a lot of valuable free space in the paper and also earned thanks from the classified ad manager on account of aiding his department to get in the spotlight.

David Walsh Tied With Telegraph Co. For Lobby Display

A tie-up with a telegraph company made it possible for an attractive display of telegrams in the lobby of his theatre when David J. Walsh, manager of the Strand Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., played "Women of All Nations." These messages were purported to have been received from all parts of the world.

One of the telegrams read: "Dear Vic and Eddie: Best of luck in 'Women of All Nations.' I still like you both, but am happily married with nine children.—Charmine." And another to Sergt. Flagg from Sergt. Quirk: "If you don't stay away from Dot, I'll kick you all over Sand Street."

Considerable word-o'-mouth advertising resulted from use of the above stunt and the telegrams were widely read by onlookers, helping in a big way to put over this picture. The telegraph companies generally always supply the blanks free of charge and also contribute printing for the advertising received. It is also possible to effect house-to-house distribution of this kind of message at a cost below that of postage. Contact your local telegraph company manager and he will undoubtedly explain just how far he can go in matters of this kind. In the meantime, we'll hope to hear further about Dave Walsh's work over in Pittsfield.

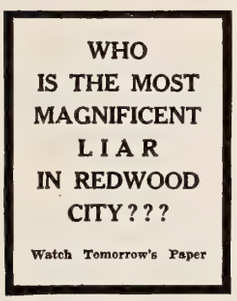
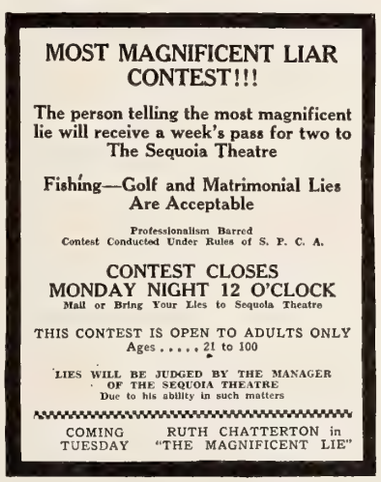
Most Magnificent Liars In Town Are Found By Tom Kane

It happened that a famous will case was on trial at the local court house about the time "Magnificent Liar" was due and due to the fact that much publicity was given to the alleged telling of untruths, Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Calif., concluded it was an opportune time to pull a liar's contest.

The accompanying illustration will give a good idea of how the contest was announced. Teaser ads were run in the papers and the idea was nicely tied in with the picture. Many people responded to the invitation to send in their most famous lie and the week's pass finally went to a soda-jerker of a local fountain. The papers gave first-class aid by playing up the unique affair and when all was said and done the results were way ahead of anticipations.



But that's not all Tom has been doing since you last saw his name mentioned in these columns. He put over a big campaign on "Daddy Long Legs," tying in for six fine window displays with leading merchants, and when we tell you that Artist Ken Miller and Assistant Manager Clint Eberly handled this end of the work you'll know that some unique displays were accomplished. The merchants also kicked in with give-aways and in return were granted individual displays in the theatre lobby, full page of ads, a good portion devoted to advertising theatre, picture and dates, was promoted with the tie-up.



MOST MAGNIFICENT LIAR CONTEST!!!
The person telling the most magnificent lie will receive a week's pass for two to The Sequoia Theatre
Fishing—Golf and Matrimonial Lies Are Acceptable
Professionalism Barred
Contest Conducted Under Rules of S. P. C. A.
CONTEST CLOSES MONDAY NIGHT 12 O'CLOCK
Mail or Bring Your Lies to Sequoia Theatre
THIS CONTEST IS OPEN TO ADULTS ONLY
Ages ..... 21 to 100
LIES WILL BE JUDGED BY THE MANAGER OF THE SEQUOIA THEATRE
Due to his ability in such matters
COMING TUESDAY RUTH CHATTERTON in "THE MAGNIFICENT LIE"

Kane's work generally carries a good sized kick to it and we feel that his "Liar" contest is one that other members may be able to capitalize upon when they play the above mentioned picture. Keep up the excellent work, Tommy, and let's know how that "Politics" campaign turned out. M-G-M's offering a Prize, you know, for best work. You might find the prize money useful.

Hemphill Ties-Up With Students And Autos To Sell Film

What could be more appropriate to advertise "Confessions of a Co-Ed" than to have a flock of Co-Eds around about the time you show the picture. That's just what W. H. Hemphill, manager of the Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, Texas, did and they helped a whole lot to gain valuable publicity.

Hemphill effected an arrangement with the agencies of the Plymouth, Dodge and DeSota cars whereby they furnished new models for a parade on Saturday afternoon, day before opening of picture. In each car was a co-ed from a local school.

Each car was bannered; something like this: "Miss Mary Smith, popular co-ed, confesses that the new Plymouth," etc. Also appeared theatre copy playing up the title of picture, name of theatre and playdates.

We take it for granted that Hemphill's Co-Eds were drafted from some local college, but even if they were not real, bona fide students, we don't think it would make a whole lot of difference. Main thing to do is get some attractive looking girls and make the tie-up. It was a good stunt and we thank him for passing it along.

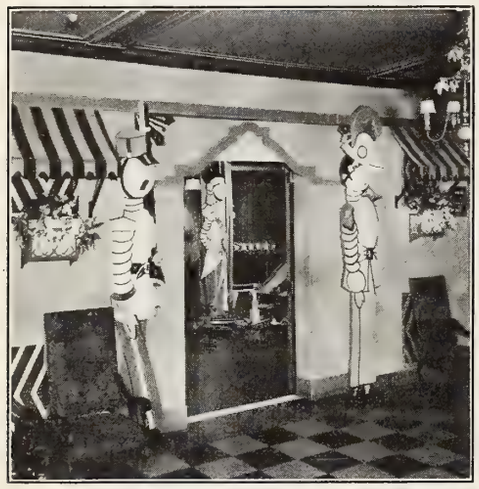
ICE COLD LEMONADE—CENT A GLASS!

And $2.20 worth of the beverage means that 220 glasses were sold by the youngster you see standing in the lobby of the Fox-Starland Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., when Manager Gene Bellin used this stunt as a means of attracting attention to "Skippy." That's a lot of lemon juice—and business was great! Novel lobby displays and a teaser campaign made this "natural" a super-natural. Flash copy, in preference to a dignified brand, was used throughout.

KIDDIES' PLAYROOM—A GOOD BET!

Passing through Boston on the return end of our recent vacation, we, naturally, stopped in at the Metropolitan (Publix deluxer in the Beantown) and as usual found many surprises. Here's one house where you can always expect to find something new or unique, and running true to form we had not strolled about very long before we came across their latest showmanship twist, a "Children's Playroom."

And when we tell you that no innovation of the year has proven more popular than the inauguration of this feature, we are merely stating facts, because, by actual count, more than 400 kiddies made use of the playroom in one single day.



The Entrance to the Playroom

This playroom is equipped with slides, swings, jungle bars, teeter tooters (if you know what we're talking about), parallel bars, miniature golf course, quoits, toy trains, fire engines and trucks, building blocks, and many other items all aimed to attract and amuse the youngsters of most any age, and probably a lot of the "youngsters" over twenty-one. We played with some of the stuff ourselves and enjoyed it too. (Who made that crack about second childhood?)

A great tie up between the theatre and one of Boston's leading department stores, as well as a large toy house, brought about the necessary equipment and Manager Harry Taylor, of the Met. is so delighted with the popularity of the playroom that he has secured the permission of home office officials to redecorate and enlarge the room.

The pictures show the entrance to the playroom and a "shot" of the interior. These will give you more than a passing idea of what we are telling about and possibly give you a bright thought to duplicate, on a smaller scale, this same goodwill booster for your house. It's not impossible. If you have the space, the battle is half won. A toy or department store tie-up will bring forth the necessary equipment (if you're a good promoter) and then the rest is up to you in the line of selling the idea as practical to your patrons. Don't forget the proper attendant to be placed in charge.

A Corner of the Playroom at the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston

Oh, yes. We almost forgot to tell you that we suspect Floyd Bell, publicity director of the Met., is responsible for this great gag. He wouldn't commit himself, being a modest sort of a gent, but we can suspect all we want to and no one is going to stop us unless it's someone who has had a share in this idea. Nice work, Floyd, keep it up but don't make us go running to Boston to find it out. Send it on yourself.

Joy Jubilee Was A Good Tonic Out In Dick Moss' Town

After putting over a very successful "Month of Super Attractions" at the Orange Theatre, Orange, Calif., Manager Dick Moss decided that a June Joy Jubilee would be a great tonic for every one in view of the widespread business depression. Orange was a community fortunate enough to be in a favorable condition financially despite suffering in other localities and it was his plan to encourage the spirit of optimism among citizens and merchants.

He put the idea up to the Merchants' Service Bureau at a regular meeting and it was decided to use "June Joy Jubilee" as their slogan, notice to this effect being sent to every concern in the city. The event was plugged by both theatre and merchants, the latter playing up the slogan in all ads and the former making announcements on the screen and in program. Radio announcement was broadcast and the press also gave generous mention to the affair. It was advertised that the opening night would be a gala event and stress was made that the line-up of pictures would be particularly strong—just as good as the "Super Attraction Month." We have before us a newspaper story of the opening of the Jubilee and it bears testimony to a most successful start. A small herald was gotten out for this occasion, thanking patrons for attending the first attraction.

Other recent activities of Dick's include the holding of a special P. T. A. matinee during which over 1,000 children saw "Skippy" and an especially arranged program, and a contest to decide whether a better title than "Daybreak" could have been given that picture. Free tickets for other showings were offered to those submitting a letter on this subject after seeing the picture.

We have not been advised by Dick whether he had some other stunt on for July or not, but we can generally count upon him doing something like this all of the time. He got a lot of valuable publicity from the Joy Month idea and sent it along for some other member to try, should conditions warrant such a move. Any stunt which will serve to stimulate business these days is surely worth consideration.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

A smart showman would pick out a city that boasted one of the largest gold mines in the world, so after trying it out along the Pacific Coast in various capacities, we find E. B. Clayton, managing director of Coliseum Theatres, Juneau, Alaska.

E. B. Clayton

He started in show business at the age of 16, after completing a high school course, so that makes him 25 years old at this writing. He went into the game because he liked contacting the public and it constantly offered something interestingly new.

Prior to locating in Juneau, which, by the way, is a city of 5,000 people and the largest city in Alaska, Clayton spent four and one-half years in Seattle, during which time he managed the Liberty Theatre and was connected in managerial capacities with the Sterling chain of theatres. Later on he went to San Francisco where he managed the Coliseum and after that spent two years in Oregon, Washington and Montana in the interests of sound installation.

At present he's using everything in the way of advertising, from handbills to loudspeaker bally. The latter is in front of the house and is played a half hour each night before start of the show. A tie-up with a local phonograph company supplies a constant change of records. He thinks this stunt is a good one for the smaller cities, so we're mentioning it to his brother showmen and will look forward to hearing from him again.

Solomon Stresses Certain Angles And Gets Good Results

Comedy angle, political background and drawing power of Dressler were stressed in the campaign made on "Politics" by S. S. Solomon, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, and with foremost opposition consisting of sex and action pictures his good judgment was reflected at the box office in second best business for the year. Intensive circulation and distinctive coverage also featured his work.

Newspapers, screen and lobby were all used to secure advance publicity, all lending effective support. The three papers came through with daily write-ups, special stories, six-column illustrated strips of Dressler making 'phone call, caricatures of principals and played up a popular driver contest which was tied-in with a local auto dealer

Ten days in advance the trailer was spotted as a separate unit behind the newsreel and the picture was also given a featured spot in a specially edited trailer one week prior to opening. The screen also announced the popularity contest tie-up made with auto dealer. The theatre front, marquee and lobby were, of course, appropriately dressed with banners, posters and easels holding stills from picture. The accompanying photo will convey an idea of how a portion of this was carried out.

As to billing, 100 imprinted litho cards were planted in downtown store windows; six-sheets were placed on buildings; all available art work placed in five and tens; 1,000 Dressler buttons distributed in restaurants, gas stations and to newsboys; theatre attaches wore political sashes and badges prior and during run, and 10 newsboys' aprons were handed out.

Boy Scout troops also played an important part, the city and suburban territory being divided into 44 zones with a Scout assigned to each zone. Each boy was given 250 calling cards which served as an introduction to a sales talk at 250 homes in each zone. Thus 11,000 cards were distributed, reaching approximately 55,000 people. Each boy was given a pass for a special preview, plus 50 cents for this assistance, and a capital prize was awarded the boy credited with the most cards returned to box offices. Seven thousand handbills on preview were distributed same day and 3,000 handbills were placed under windshield wipers of parked cars.

During the run, theatre attaches began 'phone call queries with a hearty laugh and balance of exploitation included a daily street bally of 200 newsboys on parade, with banners, baby carriages, trucks, noise makers and drum corps. This was preceded by an auto police escort. A Dressler double marched ahead of the parade.

Another stunt that came in for its share of attention was the parading of three boys dressed in night gowns, rolled trousers and boudoir caps. Signs on their backs proclaimed that they were paying an election bet. The accompanying illustration will show how they looked. Is this a good gag? You tell 'em!

The tie-up with the auto dealer was in the nature of a voting contest to pick the most popular female driver, the winner being crowned "Miss Plymouth" on final night of picture. This day was also billed as "Plymouth" Day and the dealer placed 50 cars at the disposal of theatre patrons. Voting blanks, prizes and incidental expenses were all paid by the dealer, in addition to buying newspaper space.

Radio announcements were made three times daily the last three days of feature and an announcer gave a six-minute talk gratis every day.

Thus Solomon becomes one of the leading contestants for the prize offered by M-G-M for best campaigns on this picture. That was good work, Sid, and the box office returns certainly justified all this work. All kinds of luck and keep up the excellent work.

GOOD BUSINESS—BUT NO PROFIT!

The manager of a small neighborhood theatre started out to put over a good picture and become so enthusiastic that, despite two big days, the picture actually made no profit for the house.

His fondness for making a splurge is the reason. He overdid the entire campaign. Where three thousand heralds would have been sufficient for his community, he used five; where a small ad in the best daily would have been enough, he used three times the space; where his regular lobby display would have answered the purpose, he spent 18 dollars for a special.

In theatres where receipts must be counted in small figures, expenditures must absolutely be figured the same way. Many a small house today takes in less than a hundred dollars on the day. Deducting the usual overhead for rent, lights and help, leaves mighty little leeway to spend money. If the entire cost of a campaign for the usual two-day picture starts to run up high, the possibility of a profitable return on any particular picture is reduced to a minimum.

It's great to be full of pep and enthusiasm, but don't let either run away with your common sense or sense of values. The smart showman is the man who can sell his attraction for the smallest amount of money; if he fails in this he is of little use to his house. Making money and then throwing it away will never get you or your theatre anywhere.

Full Column Used By Miller To Sell "Ten Reasons Why—"

A full column in his local newspaper was used by A. G. Miller, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb., to advertise current attractions, new summer price schedule and to set forth 10 reasons why the public should think first of the Lyric when thinking of motion pictures. A heavy black border was run all around the column, presenting an appearance which could not help but be noticed. The arguments in favor of the Lyric are as follows:

1. Western Electric Equipment.—Manufactured by the people who make your telephone. You get it all just like the picture was made—in a clear, NATURAL TONE.

2. Why is it better over Western Electric? Because all the large film companies use Western Electric apparatus to make their pictures and they want the best.

3. Our pictures are plainer, clearer and do not hurt your eyes. Our light equipment is the best money can buy.

4. Our projecting machines are the best on the market and project a steady, flickerless picture, life size.

5. Our programs are arranged to please the most fastidious customer—always playing the best on the market and giving our patrons variety.

6. Large, comfortable, upholstered seats for everybody to rest and relax in while enjoying the show.

7. It is always cool in our theatre. A large, air-washed fan makes it the summer resort of this city.

8. Our attendants are always courteous and it pleases them to give you service.

9. Our prices are within the reach of all.

10. Our aim is to give you entertainment, service and comfort because it is your theatre and we want you to always feel welcome and at home in North Nebraska's finest theatre.

We reprinted the above because some other Club member may wish to use the same idea to help sell his theatre to the public. It was of assistance to Miller, hence he passed it along for some one else to try out. To our way of thinking, the stunt was a good combination of picture and institutional advertising.

CHEATING!

The end of each subject generally has some sort of a musical finish. Of late we have noticed that many managers permit their projectionists to cut this musical ending short and switch to the next subject.

In our opinion, this practice spoils an otherwise perfect presentation and should be done away with. Let the ending finish up the way it was arranged and don't jump to the next picture so sudden-like. These few seconds of music give the audience an opportunity of relaxing and puts them in a more receptive frame of mind for the succeeding subject.

If your projectionist is doing this to save time, we doubt whether the saving warrants the spoiling of your show. What do you think about it?

Kislingbury Made Costless Tie With Local Auto Dealer

A twenty-four inch ad was obtained gratis by F. F. Kislingbury, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., through a tie-up made with a local auto dealer, on "City Streets."

In return for displaying one of the late models of a popular priced car in his lobby he convinced the dealer that the bulk of the ad calling attention to the display should be devoted to sell the theatre and attraction. His good salesmanship took effect to the extent that the dealer agreed to use only an inch of space at the bottom for his own purposes. In fact, the whole ad had every appearance of a regular theatre announcement.

Another worthwhile tie-up was effected with a department store when playing "Front Page." Three nights during the showing of this picture a "Bathing Suit Revue" was held at the theatre, sponsored by the store. Models appeared on the stage wearing well advertised brands of suits. The store featured this fact by a large box at the top of a full page ad and also ran smaller ads and stories during the week. The stage attraction undoubtedly helped the week's gross on this picture.

Kislingbury is another one of "Bunny" Bryan's boys down in South Jersey who is going along at a rapid clip. He's getting away with a lot of excellent advertising at no cost to the theatre and doesn't that sort of business please the Boss these days!

A Mammoth Parade Featured Gary And Lockard's Campaign

A mammoth parade that wound in and out of the business section and extended the length of six city blocks featured a campaign made on "Politics" by R. C. Gary and C. E. Lockard, manager and assistant manager of the Paramount Theatre, Omaha, Neb. And it made the whole town stop, look and listen.

And what a parade! A squad of motorcycle police formed the vanguard of the procession and next in line came a float with a boys' band of 26 pieces. The float was elaborately decorated with red, white and blue bunting and had an elevated platform for the musicians. Following the float, 100 men and women garbed in old fashioned linen dusters carried banners with copy reading, "Vote for Marie Dressler for Mayor—Polls Open at the Paramount Theatre for One Week Starting"——.

Twenty-six autos, promoted from local auto dealers made up the next division, all bearing banners bearing political copy, name of theatre and playdates. Following this were 100 local news-carriers, carrying banners lettered, "Hell Bent for Election—Polly Moran and Marie Dressler in Politics." Twelve more new autos, bannered on both sides, next came in view and these were followed by 100 additional newsboys, bearing appropriately lettered banners.

Advance exploitation consisted of the spotting of seven frames on screen one week in advance; one large circle placed in outer lobby two weeks ahead, bearing title of picture and names of stars; 20 banners hung in inner lobby, one week in advance (used later in parade); special set piece in inner lobby with cut-out heads of stars; 2 shadow boxes in lobby, with cutuout heads and playdates; advance stories carried in Paramount Weekly Theatre Magazine, 10,000 passed out and 500 mailed to patrons; distribution of 10,000 political cards to crowds attending Sells-Floto circus and 55-foot scenery truck with 20-foot banner on circus grounds with copy reading "Vote A Straight Laugh Ticket Thursday at the Paramount Theatre" (title and playdate); six special advance stories in main newspaper; additional stories in 29 country newspapers, and 14 announcements over radio station. 150 inches of advertising space were used.

For a special outside display over front of theatre three 4x5 banners were hung under the canopy and one 8x10 display, with airbrush head of Dressler, was placed in the centre, surrounded by 8x10 stills.

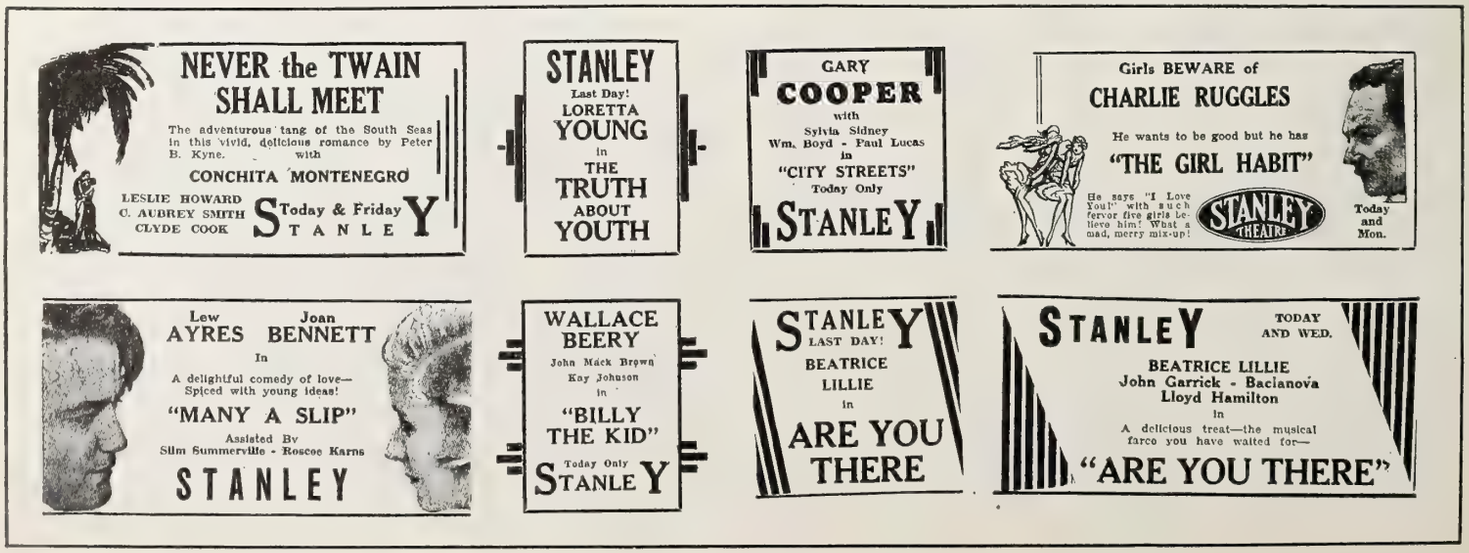
Well, Bob, that was considerable of a campaign you and Lockard put over and like all other entrants in the M-G-M contest for honors on this picture, we wish you a lot of luck

USING SMALL SPACE EFFECTIVELY!

YOU will find a layout of small ads on this page which, to our way of thinking, shows what can be accomplished in the way of striking display by the judicious use of certain type and borders. These were gotten out by G. B. Jeffrey, manager of the Stanley Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla.

Note that the ads do not exceed four inches to the single column and that even the small two-inch ads get the message across. The copy is brief and to the point, and the pleasing effect of white space is also accomplished. The rules and borders are nicely arranged, likewise the occasional use of an exchange mat and a strong feature lies in the fact that practically any size newspaper has the equipment necessary to produce a layout of this kind.

The above will be particularly interesting to Club members who are having difficulties obtaining satisfactory service from the small sized newspaper plant. We believe that if Jeff's patterns are adapted to local needs the result will be an ad that will be read. And that's all that can be expected.



WEEKLY SERVICE STAFF MEETINGS

Fine Suggestions Can Result from Friendly Sessions!

By EARLE M. HOLDEN
City Manager
OCALA, FLA.

This article was originally published over a year ago in the Club section, but repeated requests for something along the lines of staff-organization prompted us to reprint it now.

Earle Holden knows how to run a theatre; and a most important phase of his methods includes a service staff that will pull for, not against, the house.

How he achieves his aim is carefully set worth in this timely and interesting story. We do not hesitate to recommend something of this sort for every theatre in the country, regardless of size or location, because we honestly feel that it will help build up the morale of the theatre and lay the foundation for future showmen.

Will Help Develop Future Man Power For Your Theatre!

Do you have a weekly meeting of your service staff? This question has been asked me more than once. I do. As a matter of fact our meetings prove to be the big event of the week at this theatre. They are interesting, instructive and, above all things, we try to make them entertaining, entertaining in the sense of the word that they do not become monotonous for the young men of the ushers' staff who attend.

If a theatre is of the size that it requires an ushers' staff, and we use 10 at our house not including a doorman, ticket taker, chief and assistant chief usher, a weekly get-together meeting of the manager and his assistant with these men is most essential. It is for the betterment of the theatre and at the same time it proves to these young men that there is something in his work, that there is a future for him, provided, of course, that he wants to stay in the theatre business, and the type of young man picked for duty as an usher should be one who intends to make the theatre business his future work.

Our weekly meetings are held promptly at 10:30 p. m. every Tuesday evening. By this time the box office has been checked, the men have had a chance to change from their uniforms into civilian clothes.

The first thing on the program is a roll call. This is done by one of the service staff who acts as secretary and who takes notes on the meeting and the following day writes a full report to be handed in at the manager's office. After the roll call the regular meeting is called to order by the chief usher and then turned over to the manager.

All Must Attend

If an usher is late, or if he is an extra man and fails to show up for the meeting he is usually given from one to two extra hours' work per week. But all members of the staff are usually on hand.

We do not then attempt to tell them the wonderful advantages of the organization. This they have already been told at the time they enter the employment of the theatre.

The first thing is a discussion of the program now playing. Each man present is asked his opinion of the feature and short subjects. He is given full reign in his discussion and the set-up of the program is also discussed at this time.

Next the comments of the patrons are then discussed. Each usher is required to listen carefully during the week for patrons' comments and make a full report at the regular weekly meeting.

Then the following week's program is discussed and also the proposed set of this attraction. Its selling points are pointed out, the featured players are mentioned, so that when each man leaves the meeting he is able to converse intelligently with future patrons about the next week's attraction.

Selling the Shows

Then follows a discussion of forthcoming bookings. And tentative plans for the selling of these pictures are discussed. Every usher has a part in each week's selling campaign, and every usher is able to carry out the part of the exploitation campaign assigned him. He gets his first working start from these meetings. If he has to make cut-outs he makes these from the plans as outlined at the regular weekly meetings. If he is assigned window trims he also makes plans for these at the meeting. And window trimming means that he also goes out and sells the merchant on the idea of placing in the trim.

Next follows a discussion of the physical appearance of the theatre. If there is anything wrong with the theatre from a physical standpoint it is brought out at these meetings, as each usher is responsible for a certain section of the house and he reports anything wrong at these meetings unless the wrong is an emergency one, at which time it is reported immediately.

Educational, Too

And now the meeting is half over. Much more has been discussed than could be placed in type. We have had our discussion of the program, the audience reaction, the ushers are familiar with the names of the stars in the next program, they know every unit coming from the news up to the feature. They know three weeks ahead coming attractions, they know how we are going to sell each individual picture.

Then comes a half hour of school. This has proved to be the most important part of the meeting. It is held the same as an old-fashioned spelling bee, but instead of asking them to spell words, questions of the theatre from every angle are asked. When a man misses he goes to the head of the class. And these questions are not at all easy. When one man misses, the question goes the rounds until it is finally answered, and if there be no answer it is explained and answered by the manager or the assistant. And almost without realizing the men are learning many details of the theatre business that they would not know.

Here are a few of the questions that were asked at the last meeting:

1. What is meant by a projection machine?
2. What kind is used at this theatre?
3. Why is it necessary to have more than one projection machine?
4. What is meant when the picture is out of the frame.
5. What is a travel ghost and what would you do to remedy the cause?
6. Who is the division manager of this company?
7. What is the function of the exciting lamp?
8. What is the photo-electric cell?
9. What is the difference between high and low intensity lamps?
10. What time does the new reel start?
11. What is meant by a unit of a program?
12. How long is the program for next week?
13. Why is the comedy placed for showing after the feature.
14. Had the feature not been one of a heavy dramatic type, where would the comedy be placed.
15. What is the width of our stage?
16. What is meant by the "grand drape"?
17. What is meant by the "scrim"?
18. What is the magnascope?
19. Explain its operation.
20. How many seats in the balcony?

Open Forum

Usually there are 50 questions asked each night and by the time the last one is over it is time for the meeting to adjourn. Questions are always new, with new things being discussed each night. However, in the event that some prove very hard and require a long definition, it is usually asked several weeks later. These questions, while they may seem hard to the average person who thinks ushers should not have any idea as to their answers, however, are very instructive, and there is very little about our theatre operation that the usher does not know.

For instance, how many managers really know the working and function of the photo-electric cell? They should know, and why should any usher have to wait until he becomes a manager to find out. If he did not know what a "travel ghost" was, how could he check the picture on the screen properly, and wouldn't it be annoying for the manager to always have to have an usher report some defect in projection without the usher knowing what to do to remedy the cause?

Any usher knows when there is a "travel ghost" and instead of notifying the manager he calls the booth telling which way the lines are running.

However, each theatre uses its own method of conducting meetings. Ours has proved very successful and the men look forward to their regular Tuesday night meetings. And it is a real pleasure for a manager to have some definite set plan of conducting these meetings without them becoming boring either to himself or to the ushers and others who might attend.

Holden says,—".....the type of young man picked for duty as an usher should be one who intends to make the theatre business his future work."

This same thought ought to be kept in mind when a manager engages a young man for some position in his theatre. In this way we will be helping some worthwhile prospect up the ladder.

The amount of time devoted to meetings of this kind is up to the manager. Number of employees, size of theatre and other surrounding factors should be your guide. Even the small house with half a dozen on the staff could accomplish much for the theatre by weekly get-togethers of this sort. And it will cement a friendly feeling between all.

PROGRAM READERS!

(Editor's Note: Here is another of the program readers used by Dick Moss of the Orange Theatre in Orange, Cal. Other theatres may find this type of reader useful in their own house organs. Similar material is solicited for this department.)

WE'RE TELLING THE WORLD!

Here is a statement that I can positively make: There has never been a theatre—I don't care when, where or how—that has ever presented a line-up of attractions such as we are featuring during this Joy Jubilee.

During the past week, we showed several knock-outs . . . but that was just a warm-up for what was coming. In this program is a group of pictures that has broken records everywhere. Just look for yourself . . . Norma Shearer in "Strangers May Kiss" . . . Wallace Beery in "The Secret Six" . . . "The Public Enemy" . . . Robert Montgomery in "Shipmates" . . . "Young Donovan's Kid" with Richard Dix and Jackie Cooper . . . "Charlie Chan Carries On" . . . John Barrymore in "Svengali." Have you ever seen a greater line-up of pictures? . . . Do you know why we can show these great pictures at our low prices? . . . Because . . . we are a part of a great organization . . . with a tremendous picture buying power . . . with executives that know their business . . . with this policy "The finest for our public." That is the reason that you are seeing these great pictures. And, we will never be satisfied . . . you will always receive the benefits of our efforts . . you will always see the finest in the entertainment field.

Press Cashes In On Made-To-Order Local Situation

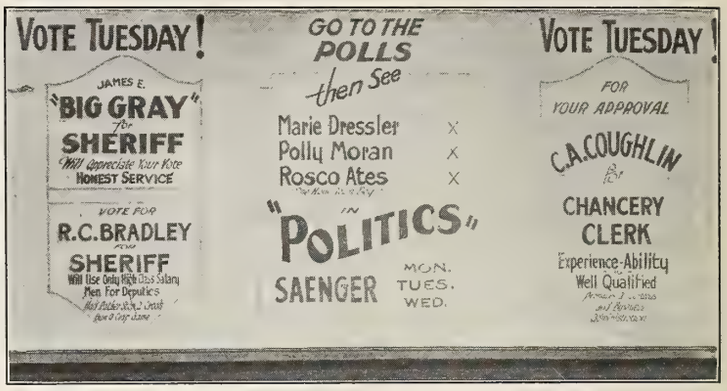
Everyone in town was election minded about the time Matt Press, manager of the Saenger Theatre, played "Politics" and maybe he didn't take advantage of the situation! A gubernatorial campaign was just about to end with the usual ballyhoo and a more fitting time to show this picture couldn't have been specified. More power to Matt's showmanship.

For advance publicity the trailer was shown five days ahead of playdate, followed by special slides, and the marquee was dressed with a sign six feet high by sixty feet long, illuminated with copy reading, "Vote The Laugh Ticket—Dressler & Moran—Politics—Roscoe Ates—Politics—Elected By A Million Laughs." This sign faced the City Hall, which was the principal voting booth in the city during the election. Cut-out heads of Dressler and Moran were placed in the foyer and lobby four days in advance of showing.

He also tied up with local politicians, as per photo, for 24-sheet board one week in advance and three vacant store room windows were secured in prominent locations and were lettered in white paint with copy, "Go To The Polls Tuesday—Then See Politics—Marie Dressler and Polly Moran—They'll Win Your Vote On The Laugh Ticket."

The candidate for governor was a local resident and during the wind-up of his campaign upon the Court House lawn where approximately 4,000 people had gathered, cards reading—"We're Playing Politics at the Saenger—You'll Vote It The Biggest Laugh of the Year"—were thrown from the top of the building. The following day girls covered every voting precinct in the city with the cards. Sidewalks were also stenciled with title, star and playdate and busses carried banners lettered, "Play Your Politics—Then See The Politics We're Playing at the Saenger To-day."

When the election returns were flashed on the screen from the newspaper office, these were augmented with slides pertaining to current attraction, approximately 3,000 people being in attendance. And as a final splash in the local newspaper, he secured a full page merchant co-op, the theatre receiving a fine break on space. Fifty guest tickets were offered to writers of letters on "Why Every Citizen Should Vote." With further cooperation from the newspaper, Press was able to flash election returns a full night ahead of public expectations.



The local election certainly was a great break for Press but good break or otherwise he was on the job when it came to taking advantage of this situation and we're sure his fellow Club members will appreciate the above suggestions. Matt is another entrant in M-G-M's contest for best work on this picture and we and all other Round Tablers join in wishing him luck. We haven't heard from him in quite some time and hope he'll be a more active contributor in the future. Any manager who can put over a campaign like the one outlined above, surely will have other examples of constructive showmanship to pass along to his fellow members.

J. Hesse Made Good Use Of A Newspaper Contest On Picture

One of the stunts carried out by J. Hesse, manager of the York Theatre, Athol, Mass., in exploiting "Lawyer's Secret" was a newspaper contest.

The newspaper showed the form of a clock on which appeared the heads of the various stars in the picture. Prizes in the form of guest tickets each went to the first 10 persons correctly guessing the party or parties guilty in committing the crime in picture.

The contest proved unusually popular as was evidenced by the number of answers turned in—over 200 in all.

Two stores were contacted for co-operative window displays in which appeared stills from the picture as well as cards announcing title of picture, name of theatre and playdates.

Aside from an award of guest tickets, all of the above was executed at no cost to the theatre and we are taking this occasion to compliment Hesse for his efficient handling of this campaign. It's been some little time since we've heard from this Club member, but we know he's always on the job. By this time he probably has another show tip up his sleeve for his fellow Club members and we will expect to hear from him regarding it.

SOME MIGHTY GOOD ADVICE!

After an intelligent policy is arrived at, I think the manager of a small house should make himself an expert in seeing that small details are nicely carried out. Three things patrons of a community house dislike: neglect, overfamiliarity, and machine-like punctilio. Many theatres that I have visited are as inhuman as an art institute. Others are frumpish or slovenly, still others make a show of exaggerated discipline. The manager of a community house should avoid all of these mistakes. But he can not do it from the office. He must be on the job, know his people,—many by name, know their likes and dislikes, greet them, thank them, and be willing to listen to them. He will set the pace for his staff by showing kindly, human interest in all patrons. He will train his staff so that the show will proceed in a quiet, well-ordered manner; lights dimmed and raised correctly as the curtain is operated, musical phrases finished between short subjects, sound properly modulated on each subject. It would be foolish to enumerate all the details that should be looked after. But the one responsible can set an ideal for himself: He has the theatre, the equipment, the staff, and the program,—often a good organ. With that combination he should be able to present something more than a "moom-pitcher" show. If he can't, he's no manager.

Bill Adams Puts Over Two Examples Of Costless Co-ops

We interestingly note two fine examples of what has come to be popularly known as "costless" publicity in connection with recent activities of William Adams, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Brockton, Mass.

One was the promotion of a page of ads on "Smart Money," a cut of which we are showing along with this story. We think you'll agree that this is one of the most attractive layouts of this type ad that has appeared on these pages in some time. Note the effective use of the black borders, setting off all the ads and giving each one an equal chance of being read. There are approximately a dozen, all told, and this is ample evidence that when Adams goes out to promote a co-op his merchant friends give whole-hearted support to the scheme. The gag of using a half portion of stars' faces was tied up with the ads.

The other example we have reference to is a piece of publicity on the above picture that appeared on the editorial page of a Brockton paper. It runs under a boxed head entitled, "Little Walks and Little Talks About Brockton" and consists of two full columns of comment on theme, cast and incidents of the film.

All of which goes to show that Bill is very much on the job when it comes to landing free space in the way of publicizing his theatre and current attractions. The page of ads is a corker and if that story on the editorial page isn't getting away with something, then we don't know what. More power to you and keep up the excellent work; it helps your brother managers too.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Fifteen years in show business classifies Don Nichols as one of the veterans in our organization and, although he's a new contributor to this department, his trade paper correspondence dates back many years when he used to send accounts of his campaigns to the old M. P. News and World.

Don Nichols

He began his career in show business in stock and went through all ends of the game—vaudeville, legit and pictures. Most of his activities have centered in southern cities and date back to a time when he was city manager for the Pryor & Leitch Enterprises in Durham, N. C., a firm subsequently taken over by Publix-Saenger.

Following his resignation from this company he opened his own house in Durham, which was a theatre built by the city and operated as opposition to his old company. One year after opening he and the city sold it to the opposition. He then engaged in a similar enterprise in High Point, N. C., which again resulted in profitable management and sale to the same opposition after a year's operation. Later on he was given the management of Warner's Theatre in Charlotte, N. C., where we find him at the present time.

Don is keenly interested in this Club and from what he tells us in a recent communication his brother members may count upon the receipt of many valuable show tips. He also states, we'll be able to find him at the above address for a long time. Why? Because he likes his job.

GIVE EICHENLAUB A GREAT, BIG HAND! HE CAN FIGHT TOUGH COMPETITION!

The editor of the local paper in Canon City, Colo., paid Arnie Eichenlaub a marvelous compliment when he had the following to say about this aggressive showman:

"Arnie Eichenlaub, manager of the Fox Jones Theatre, is giving a fine example to those business men who find themselves beset with stiff competition.

"This week Eichenlaub finds himself confronted with one of the poorest periods of the year for the show business. Only the holiday week exceeds it.

"In addition he faces a rodeo and air circus and the Brunk road show.

"Instead of laying down on the job Eichenlaub has contracted for some of the best pictures ever shown in the local theatre. He has started an active campaign of advertising and is making inducements which will prove tempting to amusement seekers, particularly stressing the coolness and pleasant surroundings of his theatre.

"The rodeo and the air circus have arranged some first-class programs for their two days' attractions on Eight Mile Park. They are making a strong bid for a crowd which they deserve.

"So in face of all of these counter attractions, the merit of which Eichenlaub recognizes, he is going to bat with the biggest all-star programs he has ever had. His theory is that the way to get business is to go after it, no matter what the odds. People want to be amused and entertained during a holiday period and Eichenlaub believes he can get his full share if he gives a super program in the right way.

"Such enterprise is commendable and should be a hint to others whose business is suffering from summer complaint and a few other complications.

"It takes pep and vinegar to stay in the game these strenuous days.

"Eichenlaub seems to be well supplied with these condiments."

This ought to give a lot of managers something to think about, especially those "babies" who can always raise their voices to shout the alibi blues. Take a lesson from a showman who doesn't know the meaning of "taking a back seat," a man who battles his way through all kinds of opposition—and comes out on top smiling.

Amos Busy At The Paramount; Pulls Classified Ad Gag

There's the usual hum of activity around the Paramount Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., where Charley Amos holds forth as manager, his recent show-selling stunts including ad tie-ups with his newspaper and several contests.

All it cost him to effect a classified ad page tie was a few guest tickets and in return he secured a two-column by six and one-half inch cut of Janet Gaynor on the page, with copy relative to the picture. Readers were invited to answer five questions which could be solved by looking through the want ads. By cutting out questions and answers and writing a short letter on which ad carried the most appeal, the contestant became entitled to a pair of guest tickets. Further exploitation of "Daddy Long Legs" consisted of a tie with a leading book store for a window displaying a large set piece for background, along with other material on picture and books. The store also bought tickets to give away with each purchase of the book.

He secured further effective cooperation from the newspaper when exploiting "Women Love Once," the paper contributing a 30-inch display ad every day for four days in advance of picture. In addition the paper gave an organ solo built around a slide reading, "Harmonize With Banner Want Ads." Several other stunts were used to help popularize this attraction, among them being the mailing of 1,000 personal letters to a selected list of married women; 200 small cards reading, "Women Love Once," placed in windows two weeks in advance, and a still display used in jewelry and ladies' ready-to-wear windows.

And before we close it must be mentioned that Amos did not neglect to circularize lawyers and judges in advance of showing "Lawyer's Secret." This letters pertained to the legal aspect of the picture and many belonging to this profession personally thanked him for calling attention to the facts as presented in the picture.

From the foregoing you will all know that Charley Amos is still on the job down in Nashville and it's a cinch to observe that he's keeping up that good stand-in he has with the local papers. Keep up the good work and remember that your fellow members will be on the lookout for further accounts of your work.

"ROXY" MANAGER JOINS THE CLUB

Charles W. Griswold, manager of the 6,200-seat Roxy Theatre in New York City, long an interested reader of the Club pages, has decided that he has been on the outside long enough and filed his application for membership.

This adds one more representative showman to the Club and we feel certain that our other members and readers will benefit by Mr. Griswold's coming in by reason of the fact that he is in charge of the world's largest theatre.

Interesting material pertaining to the operation of a de luxe house like the Roxy is what we are going to look for from Mr. Griswold. We know we will not be disappointed.

Smith Circularized Single Men When He Sold Bachelor Film

A novel idea was used to publicize "Bachelor Apartment" by R. N. Smith, manager of the Amherst Theatre, Amherst, Mass.

A small quantity of postal cards were mailed to bachelors, the cards containing the following copy, "As a member of the male nobility—bachelorhood—enjoying to the full the pleasures of single blessedness, we are sure you will be interested in witnessing what one bachelor found to be true about life and how he found out about it. We suggest that you see 'Bachelor Apartment' and what goes on behind its doors. You will find 'Bachelor Apartment' at the Amherst Theatre, Thursday, July 2nd."

As far as it was possible the above cards were circulated among offices where bachelors were extensively employed and this was a means of stirring up quite a bit of conversational fun. Thanks, R. E., for sending this along. Keep the Club posted.

P. J. Poag Still Turning Out Fine Fronts In Del Rio

The cost of making the photo accompanying this article exceeded that of the two fronts constructed for "Trader" and "Ten Cents a Dance" by Manager P. J. Poag and his able assistant, J. W. Kessler, both of the Princess Theatre, Del Rio, Texas.

The letters are always carried in stock and palm leaves down in this part of Texas are plentiful. So Poag just had a truck load of the latter gathered up and carted to the theatre where they materially helped carry out the jungle atmosphere for "Trader." Stock letters were also used for the other picture, along with standard cutouts of dancing couples.

This pair of showmen have an enviable reputation for constructing attractive fronts at exceptionally small expense and it is always a pleasure to present examples of their work. Not long ago we published a piece of work they did on "Front Page," using a replica of a newspaper's first page across the entire front, with the added novelty of gaining the good will from their local paper by crediting it on the big masthead. This made a decided hit with many of our readers and we are going to look forward to further samples of their work in all branches of show-selling work.

FRANK WHITTAN, former theatre manager and recently with the Warner sales force, is now in charge of the Dickinson Theatre, Osage City, Kan. William Jenkins, who had been manager the past few months, will be transferred to another location on the Dickinson circuit.

A SHOWMAN'S DREAM!

By Teddy McDonald

One night a showman dreamed a dream
And, dreaming, dreamed he died;
And straightway to the Gates of Heaven
His sin-stained spirit hied.

And there before the saints he stood,
With downcast head and low;
"My record's very bad," he said;
"I guess I'm bound below."

The good St. Peter looked at him
With kindly smiling eyes;
He shook his head, "Don't ask," he said,
"For a mansion in the skies."

"But let me see, I think you said
You are a theatre man?"
The sinner bowed, then in this strain
The aged Saint began:

"You've had to dodge the hot days,
The circus and the fairs;
You mostly went to bed each night
Too tired to say your prayers;

"You've had your letters sent astray;
Your stunts wandered, too;
With porters, ushers, and office boys
You've been in constant stew;

You've had to see all kinds of folks,
And please them every one;
And when you've screened your pictures
They've said your life's all fun;

"Occasionally you saw your wife;
Now tell me, is that so?"
"It is," replied the showman
As he took his hat to go.

"Ah, well," said good St. Peter,
Opening the portals wide;
"We're very glad to meet you;
Just kindly step inside.

"We'll try to make you happy;
We'll do the best we can;
You've had your punishment on earth;
You've been a theatre man."

Herman Used New Slant On Old Gag And Got Results

A local jeweler paid for five gross of the article you see reproduced here as the result of copy writing done by Harry Herman, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, when this showman played "I Take This Woman."

True, the wedding ring novelty is an old gag, but where the new twist comes in is the "costless" angle. Harry used to buy the rings and pay for the cost of cards and printing, but these days make managers scratch around for ideas that help build up the black figures. So he framed his copy to tie-up with a jewelry store, as you will note in the accompanying illustration. The rings were attached to the upper left-hand corner of the card.

Old or new, the gag was a natural for the above picture and a donation of five gross of cards and rings, with printing thrown in, is an item not to be laughed off these days. It worked very nicely for Herman in the way of publicizing his show and the jeweler was more than satisfied with the advertising he received. And so we're passing it along for the benefit of other Round Tablers to use with this picture, or any other to which it can be adapted, and will hope to hear more about what Harry is doing.

Parades and Other Stunts Featured In G. Sharp's Campaign

Parades, a corking window gag and several other good stunts featured the campaign made on "Politics" by George Sharp, manager of the Fox-Wilson Theatre, Fresno, Calif. George is another contestant for an award to be made by M-G-M for best work done in connection with this picture and his efforts, as outlined below, brought splendid returns to the box office.

For advance advertising and publicity, block 28-sheets, printed locally, were posted one week ahead of playdate with copy reading, "Marie Dressler—Polly Moran, Hell Bent for Election in M-G-M's 'Politics.' Posting of this paper was also made on two 28-sheet boards erected in V-formation for marquee display. Five days in advance he had two women carry banners through the business section of the city, copy reading, "Elect Women to Public Office—Let's Elect Marie." Timed with this bally, voting booths were obtained from County offices for display on lawn of Post Office and girl attendants distributed voting blank novelties which featured, "Marie Dressler, for Governor of Gladness; Polly Moran, for Mayor of Mirth." The booths were also appropriately bannered.

A window stunt that was pulled in cooperation with a local drug store proved a most effective means of attracting attention to theatre and picture. Four days prior to opening a masked girl, clad in a bathing suit, appeared as shown in the accompanying photo. Explanatory tie-up cards advised that "Between the hours of 12.30-1.30 P.M. Miss Politics would take snapshots of people gathered in front of the window and that a select 10 who made 'funny faces' would be awarded tickets to see Politics." A pastel head of Marie Dressler and a kodak display completed the tie-up.

Two parades were arranged through permits from the Mayor, one on Saturday noon preceding opening of picture and the other at night to publicize the Saturday midnight matinee. The noon parade was escorted by police on motorcycles and featured a band wagon of 10 musicians garbed in silk frock coats and hats. An auto company was tied-up for transportation, one car carrying 10 Fanchon and Marco dancers dressed same as the musicians. Serpentine was thrown at pedestrians along the line of march. During the night demonstration 12 girls with red fuses lent to the occasion by marching ahead of the parade. This came to an end in front of the theatre where a political and musical rally was staged. The Mayor appeared as guest of honor for the midnight show.

Additional effort consisted of sending a truck bally into adjacent communities for distribution of voting blanks; use of voting blanks in parked cars at air circus; distribution of herald paid for by ad tie-up with United Grocers; circulation of local newspaper bearing red imprint as tie-up; 22x28 posters on dash boards of all street cars; daily radio announcements, and the heading of a department store ad with copy relative to picture and playdates.

Like all campaigns we've read about on this picture the above is another example of well rounded-out work and it produced excellent results for Sharp. We particularly like the window stunt in that this can be used with any number of pictures. In addition to having a display of "funny face" photos in store window, another set of prints could be displayed at the theatre as a means of attracting further attention.

SUNNY THOUGHTS

I believe that today is better than yesterday and that tomorrow will be better than today.
Be brief; for it is with words as with sunbeams, the more they are condensed, the deeper they burn.

A Post Mortem On Rosenthal's Political Stunt

Just recently we published an account of a campaign made on "Politics" by Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., in which this erudite showman injected a number of humorous stunts that made half the city's population laugh and the other half take seeriously. Wilkes-Barre, as you will recall, is an inland city and Morris advertised himself as a candidate for Supt. of Docks. After presenting himself at the newspaper office, armed with a petition signed by the Mayor, Chief of Police and other important officials, the following "Evening News" story broke, head and all:

M. ROSENTHAL CANDIDATE FOR ODD POST

MANAGER OF CAPITOL THEATRE WOULD BE SUPT. OF DOCKS AND PIERS

PLANS MASS MEETING

Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Capitol Theatre, walked into the editorial room of The Evening News today and handed the city editor a petition.

It conveyed the information that he was a candidate for the office of superintendent of docks and piers in Luzerne County.

The city editor arched his eyebrows and began to scan the names on the petition. Heading the list was Mayor Daniel L. Hart, Oscar Tischler, John Ruddy, William B. Loftus, sports editor of The Evening News, and others, who are men about town, were included.

"What's this all about?" the puzzled city editor inquired. "There is no such office. We have no docks here."

"I know that," explained the crafty Rosie. "But if I'm elected I'll have some built."

"Let us in on the joke," the city editor urged.

"It's no joke," Rosie assured him. "It's politics. I want you to announce my candidacy."

He was adamant about the whole matter.

He added:

"You might also include in the notice that I'm having a public mass meeting in Public Square at 8 o'clock Saturday night. There, I will reveal my platform.

"The rally will be old fashioned with a German band, automobile parade and flares."

The city editor suggested that Rosie was merely angling for some publicity—that his candidacy was to advertise next week's picture, Politics, at the Capital.

Rosie denied this indignantly and threatened to walk out until he was assured that he would be considered seriously.

That's all we know about it.

He not only planned the Mass Meeting but executed it. After an officer crashed through the crowd and ordered "campaign manager" Bannon from his truck in the city square, it developed that he would be charged with "disorderly conduct, resisting an officer, congesting traffic and false pretense"—all on account of a tiff with the Chief of Police in regard to obtaining a permit to make speech. This, he disregarded (it was all framed up) with the result that Fred Hermann, district manager for Publix, had to post bond the following morning to secure Bannon's release. A two column story appeared in next day's paper.

We're reprinting this story for the reason that it did not appear in the original yarn and because it impresses us as to originality, etc. We think other Club members will get the same kick from reading it that we did—and it may also furnish some other manager with a like inspiration. And it all goes to show what a fellow can get away with by KNOWING City Officials.

HOUSE INSPECTIONS NOW IN ORDER!

In preparation for the coming winter season we cannot urge too strongly the necessity for a careful house inspection from top to bottom. Among the items to be looked after are:

Heating plants.
Roofs to be free of leaks.
Seats to be tightened and repaired.
Carpets to be gone over and put in good condition.
Lobbies to be brightened up and displays to be checked.
Booth and sound equipment to be in tip-top condition.
Signs to be relamped (if necessary) and cleaned up.
Curtains and drapes to be thoroughly cleaned.
Uniforms to be cleaned and prepared for present staff.
Retiring rooms to be free of odors and kept spotless.
Plumbing to be gone over carefully.
Ticket machine and chopper to be looked after.

In addition to the above few items, make up an inventory of your supplies and spare parts to be sure that you have everything on hand for emergency purposes. This includes janitor and toilet supplies, tickets, lamps, etc.

Thos. Berta Gives Views On What Is Best Advertising

In line with the recently published expressions of what constitutes the best form of theatre advertising, we hear from Thomas Berta, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Rock Springs, Wyo., who sets forth his views as follows:

"I am especially interested in the several articles that you ran on 'Best Forms of Theatre Advertising.' While I quite agree with Frank Whitbeck, and Gabe S. Yorke, that newspaper advertising is the best medium, I believe it depends a good deal on what picture you are trying to sell—and where.

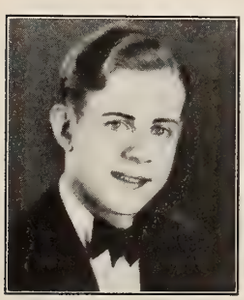
"Unfortunately, we have nothing more than two weekly newspapers in Rock Springs, and while these papers carry local news, they are not looked upon as the NEWSPAPER; Salt Lake and Denver papers have a larger circulation than our own local weeklies. We use the local weeklies, billboard, trailer, and ballyhoo in our town. Having no radio, we use the telephone and find it a big help in putting over some outstanding show that we can give a personal guarantee on.

"I have a thought I would like to pass on to those who are handling publicity for theatres, in larger towns and cities that have daily newspapers, radio broadcast and every other medium at their command if they care to use them. When you try to sell a picture by newspaper advertising, that has received a terrible panning by Liberty and other magazines, has it ever occurred to you that you are bringing your message to the same people (those who read magazines are also the newspaper's readers), and thereby cause a 'clash'—will they believe the review in the magazine, or will they believe your flowery advertisement? Possibly they will even stamp your advertising as untruthful and false! The magazines seem to go ahead of us—once a picture is classed as only fair or even poor—it is not going to be easy to sell it to your people with newspaper advertising. I believe all managers or publicity managers would do well to watch the reviews in the magazines, when planning their publicity campaign, and if the picture has not had a fair rating, use some other medium of advertising and try to catch the crowd of people who do not read, and merely carry an announcement of the picture and cast in the papers. You can't sell an argument on a billboard—neither should you try to argue that a picture is GOOD when it has been declared as being poor.

"A ballyhoo, or some freak stunt that will arouse curiosity, will sell tickets, yet those who allow themselves to be sold in this manner are not too critical, and will no doubt be satisfied with the show."

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

When a young fellow leaves high school at the age of 14 to follow a carnival show it's a safe bet there's a strong yen for show business in his system. And Harry M. Sweet, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., admits such was the identical case when he concluded that life held little else for him except a career in the amusement world.



Harry M. Sweet

After following the circuses for several years, during which time he ballyhooed side-shows and acted as an equestrian rider with three shows, he secured a job as usher in a Fox theatre in New York City. Following this he was promoted to Chief of Service at the Capitol Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. He then went another step up the ladder when he took over the assistant managership of the Riviera Theatre, Rochester, finally making the grade to his present managerial post at the Rialto.

Sweet is only 24 years of age at this writing and apparently he's in the game for keeps. Looking back, he's sure he made the right move when he entered it. Looking ahead, he can't find a reason why he should ever leave it. You'll hear more about this member in future issues of this department.

18 MORE BUSINESS BUILDERS!

RAM KRISHNA SHARMA is the General Assistant at the Universal Picture House in Srinagar (Kashmir), India, the country so efficiently publicized by that great showman, the Mahatma. Like Britain's claim that "the sun never sets on the British Empire," let us paraphrase this saying with the statement that this Club can boast the same distinction. Round Tablers are all over this world, and we predict that other members will soon be informed on how shows are sold in India.

JOE W. SEABOLD states that he's way out in the "sticks" but that's no reason why he shouldn't become a member of this organization. Joe manages the Centennial Theatre in Warsaw, Indiana, and admits that he has been following the activities of Round Table members for some time. Now it's his intention to contribute some information about his own work. And as you say, Joe, you'll be black-balled, or possibly black-"bawled," if you don't.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. A. HESTON is the manager of the Oakley Theatre, Lake Worth, Fla., and he, too, sends along an application for Club membership. There's a host of Round Tablers in your state, W. A., and we're mighty glad to include your name among them. Just keep up the standard they've set in the way of shooting along some helpful show tips and everybody will be happy. How's the past season been down your way?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. A. HUTCHISON is in charge of the Strand Theatre, a Publix house in Spartanburg, a busy little city right up among the cool South Carolina hills. We're mighty glad to have "Hutch" with us and trust that he'll soon be sending along some interesting information to pass on to his brother showmen. Show your hand, A. A., and Club headquarters will do the rest.

DORSEY McAVOY sent the Club his application from the Star Theatre in North Birmingham, Ala., where he holds the post of manager. Glad to have you with us, Dorsey, and if you will shoot along some stuff on what you've been doing to put shows over at your house, we'll see that other members are tipped off. What was that last good stunt that brought S. R. O. business?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. CHAMOW is in charge of the Rialto Theatre, Glendale Square, Everett, Mass., and is another New England showman who promises to get in step with other Round Tablers. That means, Chamow, that we will expect you to tell the Club how you are handling competition with other New England showmen. Can we depend upon hearing from you regularly?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK BLITT hails from the famous city of Chicago, where he manages the Century Theatre. Jack, there are enough Club members in your city to fill a big banquet room and your application makes one more in your much publicized city. As you are in one of the liveliest show cities in the country, we know that we can depend upon you for some interesting material. Now, don't forget to send it along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEONARD GROSSMAN is the manager of the Atlantic Theatre, Chicago, Ill. While we received his application for membership some little time ago, only recently were we able to clear our records confusing him with another manager who bears the identical name. It's all straightened out now, however, and Leonard is listed as an active Round Tabler. Prior to locating in Chicago, he was in charge of the RKO Majestic in Springfield, Ill., where he put over some live-wire stunts. We will hope to hear about what he has accomplished since taking over his present job.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARLTON L. BEALS is the manager of the Bijou Theatre, Pittsfield, Ill., and he not only forwarded his membership application but sent along some information concerning his activities in the show-selling line. This will be published in a forthcoming issue and in the meantime, we hope this new member will continue to keep this department posted about his work. We can use one of your photos, Carlton, if you have one to spare.

H. O. MARTIN is in charge of the Rialto Theatre in Stinton, Texas. His house is one of a large group operated by Hall Industries Theatres, an aggressive Texas organization which is running along with flying colors these days. A number of this organization's managers are members of this Club and we are more than glad to include Martin's name among them. Don't forget, H. O., that you can keep in touch with all that your associates are doing in show selling through the medium of this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN F. PIVAL manages the Senate Theatre in the city of Detroit, Mich., and the Club welcome is cordially extended to this new member. Now that you're one of us, John, come through with some good, live show tips in order that we may pass them along for the benefit of other members in this Club. We'll be expecting to hear from you soon.

FRED V. GREENE is another Publix manager to become a member of this Club and his job is managing the Penn Theatre in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. Your application, Fred, must make it practically 100 per cent for this organization in your town and we're mighty glad to introduce you to the rest of the "gang." Your only dues will be a show tip now and then to pass along to the other members. We hope that you will become an active Round Tabler.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. L. STRATTON'S application for membership in the Round Table Club swells the list of owner-managers in this organization. He recently bought out his partner's interest in the Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho, and now has the entire responsibility. He's running an up-to-date house and it's a great pleasure to have him with us. Keep us all informed, Stratton, about what you are doing in the way of selling your shows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DeFOREST SWANSON manages the Isis Theatre in Lamar, Idaho, and with the receipt of his application to become a Round Tabler we are introducing him to his many brother showmen who make up this Club. He's an old subscriber to the Herald and has been following this department for some time. Now, he's going to help his fellow members along by letting them know what he's doing.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BILL BOSTON is the manager of the Egyptian Theatre in Scottsbluff, Neb., and unless we're greatly mistaken the Club's in for some interesting accounts of what this manager and his two able assistants are doing to promote the art of showmanship. At least, so judge we from a collection of snaps showing attractive fronts, posters and other advertising. We will tell you more about Bill in future issues and will now pass on a little information about his two assistants.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

"BRICK" BOSTON not only assists his brother Bill in the management of the Egyptian Theatre, Scottsbluff, Neb., but also has the responsibility of keeping the sound and lighting systems up to the mark, which is plenty of work for any one man. Between times, he's active in many other capacities around the house. We're glad to have you among us, "Brick," and be sure to keep us posted.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. L. McREYNOLDS holds the title of exploitation-organist at the Egyptian Theatre, Scottsbluff, Neb., and this means that when Mack is not tickling the stops and keys on the big Marr & Colton, he's helping Bill Boston sell shows. We'll also tell you more about what he's doing in the poster and exploitation line. His poster work smacks of originality and in order to have samples of his work show up well in future issues we're going to ask Mack to shoot along some good sharp photos, larger than snaps.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. H. LEAHY manages the Paramount Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., and by the name of his house you'll guess right away that Leahy is one of the Publix boys. Many of your large organizations are members of this Club, M. H., and we are more than glad to receive your application for membership. You can now swap show selling yarns with your brother managers through this medium.

MUSIC AND TALENT

Stage Shows

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending September 2

Glen Welty and the Wisconsin orchestra offer "Radio Hits" as a prelude to Fanchon & Marco's "Vacation Days" Idea, which opens with a lake shore setting. The chorus is attired in red jackets and berets with yellow skirts and go through the paces in fine fashion.

Lee and Ralph combine nonsense with dance-sense and patter through their part of the program with several laughs. Kathleen Kay, who doubled for Mary Pickford in "Kiki" inserts her personality with some fancy tricks.

Next, the chorus is attired in checked blouses, straw hats, overalls and armed with fish poles. Miss Kay does a tap dance and is followed by "Three Jacks and a Queen," adagio foursome, who work against a dark background. As a result the fourth member of the troupe is invisible to the audience, the female member apparently being tossed into space, suspended in mid-air, and other such tricks.

Kirk and Lawrence come back again with their two "hosses," stage a rodeo and Buffalo Bill scene to fair applause. The chorus for its next number represents a galaxy of reindeers.

Zelda Santley gets the biggest hand. She sings first, and then impersonates Eddie Cantor, Fanny Brice, George Arliss and gives her impression of "Ten Cents a Dance." The girl is clever.

The finale represents a flower garden with a desert in the background. All members do their bit, while the chorus is attired in costumes to represent a diversity of flowers of various hues.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending August 26

Walt Roesner and his Fox Orchestra offer something different. Instead of the usual arrangement of classics there is an arrangement of post-war music under the title, "Remember When." We have no difficulty in recognizing "Dardanella," "Tea for Two," "Margie," "Remembering" and "Moonlight and Roses." The latter is sung most effectively by Joaquin Garay, who also sings a new song, "Sweet and Lovely." The potpourri is enjoyed and the individual numbers come in for unstinted applause.

The Fanchon and Marco "Black and White Idea" opens with an original song by Rose Glesby, dramatic soprano, dressed in black, who sings while eight girls in white present a dance in which use is made of large scarfs.

Clifton and Brent, best described as "rubber necks" and "rubber legs," put on a laughable turn, doing a little singing, a little dancing and some acrobatics. This gets a little tiresome, but ends with a flash of speed that helps put the act over.

The girls, in costumes of black and white, parade in a garden to match, and get a lot of laughs with the manner in which they manipulate their large bustles. These bustles prove to harbor other dancers who do a dance of their own. Rose Glesby sings "Dancing with the Daffodils at the Garden Wall," with Dolly Kramer, a tiny comedienne. This proves one of the real hits of the show.

George Dewey Washington, former San Franciscan, and favorite here, sings "Dream Your Troubles Away," a negro spiritual, and "On the Road to Mandalay." His voice is at its best.

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ended August 21

"Eddie's Bag O' Tricks," featuring Harry Rose, Broadway Jester, is a rollicking stage show in which Ed Lowry shares honors as master of ceremonies with Rose.

David Ross and the Mastbaum orchestra present a splendid selection of Victor Herbert Melodies.

The Mastbaum ballet and the Canadian Rockets provide some novel costumes and interesting dance routines.

Harry Rose with his quips and sophisticated banter, draws the spontaneous applause of the audience from the moment he is introduced by Lowry until he gracefully accepts a beautifully boxed bunch of carrots presented to him with compliments of the stage band boys. He and Lowry throw verbal bouquets at each other each trying to outdo in flowery language.

The Five Hot Shots, negro dancers and among the best of their kind, offer a novel brand of tap dancing that brings them back again and again.

Richard Montgomery in an unannounced return engagement was given an enthusiastic reception and his splendid voice brings several encores.

Martie May entertained with her clever patter, assisted by Jean Carroll, an unusually agile tap dancer.

Lina Martini's singing received a good share of applause.

Philadelphia Fox

Week ended August 21st

Fanchon & Marco's "Pep Idea" lives up to the expectations of those who know the Hollywood Collegians, who are almost the whole show. These boys are versatile and besides playing all the instruments of the orchestra, they dance, sing solos, duets, trios and quartettes and for good measure give several little sketches or playlets which are very amusing.

The lighting effects are unique—sometimes the whole stage is flooded with blue light, sometimes the light flickers unevenly and sometimes the instruments are electrically illuminated and the stage in darkness. At one point the boys gather about a campfire and sing. While they are singing in the semi-darkness, Dorothy Crooker appears in a spot light in the background. She comes gracefully to the front of the stage and does some very difficult dance balancing. She moves very slowly, holding each pose, a far more difficult feat than passing swiftly from one balancing pose to another. She is an expert in her line and draws the spontaneous applause of the audience.

The Collegians then take a trip around the world, giving a short sketch typical of each country. Two of the boys burlesque an Apache dance in Paris that is truly laughable. The acting is all amateurish and collegiate, which perhaps adds to its charm.

As an added attraction to the regular unit, a fashion show is introduced and in spite of the midsummer weather the living models display fur coats and other creations that appeal to the feminine portion of the audience.

Organists Out In New Orleans

Sixteen New Orleans organists are out of work, since contracts between the local musicians' union and United Theatres, operators of a circuit of subsequent runs, were not renewed.

The owners served notice on the union that no renewals would be made when the contracts expired August 31. No action has been taken by the union. The Strand, Publix first run, has not renewed contracts of two organists.

NBC Buys a Partnership In Chicago Station, WMAQ

The Chicago Daily News has formed a partnership with National Broadcasting in the ownership of the newspaper's radio station, WMAQ.

The management of the station will be under supervision of NBC, which took a portion of stock in the station, a subsidiary of the newspaper firm. No change of policy is contemplated.

Radio Corp. Has New Quarters

The E. F. Albee building at Montreal, former home of all exchanges in Montreal, has been reopened after remodeling as the Radio Corporation building. Film firms now have their own groups of buildings in the West End.

Playing Vaude With Films

Publix-Dubinsky houses in Springfield and Joplin, Mo., de luxe houses, have shifted to two vaudeville acts and films and a six-piece orchestra, with business said to be increasing.

Cantor On Stage, Radio

Eddie Cantor, due in New York Thursday, will make several stage appearances, then be featured in a radio program for seven weeks, after which he expects to make a European tour.

Oakland House Adds Band

The recently reopened Roxie in Oakland, Cal., has added a band to its bill, headed by Hal Girvin. Midnight shows will be a house feature under the new policy.

Orchestra Reported Cut

Loew's Ohio in Hamilton is reported to have been instructed to discontinue the relief organist and dispense with a banjoist, violinist and saxaphone player as a means of reduction in overhead.

Mastbaum to Have Own Shows

The Mastbaum in Philadelphia inaugurates a new stage show policy September 4, having engaged a staff, headed by Le Roy Printz, stage director, to produce its own shows.

ORGAN SOLOS

ARLO HULTS (New York City 86th Street) presented a novel and entertaining presentation called, "The Columnist," in which he incorporated and used the names of well known columnists and their line of work. Hults opened the solo by playing and singing a special travesty on columnists to the tune, "Moonlight Saving Time," words of which lead up to the audience singing of "Love Is Like That," "Now You're in My Arms," a special incorporating the titles of several popular tunes, "Crazy Song," three choruses of "Up and Down the Hill," and a final chorus of "Moonlight Saving Time."

The "Columnist" proved to be a cleverly worked out solo which the audience apparently enjoyed.

G. HOWARD SCOTT (Asbury Park Convention Hall) presents a varied program of classics and popular music twice daily at this civic auditorium. All of his programs are made up from requests received from the patrons and are usually of an hour's duration. Incidently, each performance is broadcast from the city's own radio station.

The auditorium is situated directly over the ocean and Scott has appropriately adopted as his theme song, "To the Sea," and opens and closes each of his programs with this number.

This is a report of one of his recent programs, both for the afternoon and evening performances. "Largo From Xerxes," "Prelude in C Sharpe Minor," "The Old Refrain," "Little Gypsy Sweetheart," "In a Monastery Garden," "Spring Maid," "Orpheus in the Underworld," "Kamenci Ostrow," "Gavotte, Louis XIII," "World Is Waiting For the Sunrise," "Polonaise Militaire," "Sweethearts," "Ave Maria," "Valse Intermezzo," "Deep River," "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen," songs from "Rhapsody in Black," "Whistler and His Dog" and a group of popular numbers.

Mr. Scott's programs are always enthusiastically received and his admirers and patrons, who come from all over the world, are in the thousands.

KEN WRIGHT (Rhinelander State) who has just opened this latest house on the Lloyd Circuit presented for his first midnight performance a cleverly written song-fest novelty entitled, "When Shall I Marry?" Opening with a medley of popular tunes, which he played on his piano-accordion, Wright then showed the patrons what he could do in the way of entertaining them with an organ novelty. This opens with gags in rhyme, explaining his lonsesomeness and the ever-attending problem of restaurant food versus home cooking. To get him married the audience are invited to sing. For the present year, Chinese characters were flashed on the screen. Needless to say, he escaped matrimony on that one. Then he played the "Toreador Son" in the original. No one had the nerve to sing that one so he again escaped. Then a comedy chorus to that song, followed by "Tie a String Around Your Finger," made them sing, so he loses his freedom. A comedy chorus to the above, entitled, "Tie a Rope Around Your Neck Dear," was sung by the dissatisfied married folks to each other. The novelty closed with a chorus of "By My Side." The entire novelty was based on tunes having love and marriage as their themes. The entire performance clicked very well.

TED MEYN (Jersey City Jersey) presented a song-fest of singable songs which were built up with smart chatter and the title of "Confidence." A special introductory chorus of "Don't Talk About Me," which was worded to create confidence in the organist was followed by a regular chorus of the same tune and "Have You Forgotten." Two specially written choruses, plugging next week's picture was used to the tune, "Wee Marie," and "Tears in My Eyes." Six or eight choruses of the popular novelty song, "Up and Down the Hill" and a closing chorus of "Nevertheless," was sung and enjoyed by the audience. Meyn's smart chatter between songs and his hard work building up his presentations together with his fine playing have the audience always looking forward to his bit on the program.

PAUL H. FORSTER (Syracuse Eckel) had the audiences singing old and new "moon songs" this week, with his song-fest that was entitled "A Trip to the Moon." Forster starts the fun with a slide explaining that songwriters seem to use but two themes for their songs, namely, "love" and the "moon." Inasmuch as he had a solo recently about love he chose the moon for his theme this week. The program consisted of the singing by the audience of the following songs: "Get Under the Moon," "Lazy Lou'siana Moon," "Moon Is Low," "Moonlight on the Colorado," "Wabash Moon," "Moon Comes Over the Mountain," and for the grand finale, he swings into the old favorite, "Carolina Moon." His receptions prove his popularity.

MARLIN (Brooklyn Metropolitan) introduced an interesting and entertaining novelty entitled, "Minstrel Follies," for a recent presentation. The audience at the show caught were made up, mainly, of older folk who, from the way they joined in the merriment, enjoyed themselves more than the younger folk, who joined in the singing but apparently were not old enough to enjoy some of the characters Marlin introduced. The solo was really a revival of old time minstrels and the songs made famous by them in their time. The songs played by Marlin and sung by the audience were: "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Darktown Strutter's Ball," "Ida," "When My Baby Smiles At Me," "Ain't Got Nobody," "Dinah," and a final chorus of "Baby Just Cares." The entire solo was very well received.

HELLO EVERYBODY

The popular demand of all my (two) readers forces me to write a column even though I am on my vacation..... Well here goes.....

"Good Time Charlie" Davis and his versatile novelty band, who are the "fair-haired boys" of the Brooklyn Paramount apparently are gluttons for work. . . . They have been putting in an average of seventy hours work a week at the theatre and now they have gone and got themselves choosen to play the dance music in the ballroom of Brooklyn's finest hotel every night from 11 'til 2. . . . Needless to say they are at the St. George. . . . Their dance music will be broadcast over two radio stations, on Wednesdays over the local Brooklyn one and on Fridays, over WABC and the Columbia network of 39 stations. . . . These boys are plenty popular in this town and now they are going to prove to the rest of the country why they warrant this popularity. . . .

Recently a Japanese vegetable gardener in California discovered a new planet with his home-made telescope and is already famous among the scientists. . . . Another newly discovered star who is getting famous among the radio fans is Connie Boswell, of the vaudeville team, known as the Three Boswell Sisters, who are at present playing RKO houses. . . . Maybe you've heard her and her theme song, "You're My Only Sweetheart." ' ' ' Connie is good—so is this Feist song. . . .

Ted Healy, Broadway's famous comedian and his gang, are scheduled to join Benny Meroff and His Orchestra for a few days merrymaking at the Dells, Chicago's smart roadhouse, three miles west of Evanston, on Dempster Road. . . . Looks like hot competition for the chain wire into the Hotel New Yorker, for the Coon-Sanders Nighthawks broadcasts starting October 1st. . . . NBC has a wire into the hotel and would like to handle the Coon-Sanders broadcasts, while CBS is making a strong bid for ether rights on the famous orchestra. . . . The hotel management, according to reports, is impartial and will give the wire to the chain offering the best facilities and service. . . .

The Fanchon & Marco-Fox Theatre Free School of Stage Arts, featuring absolutely free instruction in dancing, singing, playing musical instruments and other stage arts, bids fair to become a very popular institution in Philadelphia and the beginning of an idea which may be adopted nationally. . . . The idea is that the Fox theatre and Fanchon & Marco will supply expert teachers, music and a spacious school room, with the only expense for the pupils being the regular admission fee to the theatre. . . . Talented pupils will be given an opportunity to appear before Fox theatre audiences and there will be special performances by the students of the school. . . .

Thank goodness that's over, now I can go back an' sleep. . . . I'll be see'n you.

SHORT FEATURE

Dolle Circuit and Fox Albany Houses Buy Vitaphone Shorts

The Fred Dolle circuit, Louisville, has contracted for the entire short subject program of Vitaphone, in its theatres in Louisville, Indianapolis, Kokomo, Lafayette, Logansport, Marion and Terre Haute.

Contracts have also been signed for the showing of the Vitaphone "Adventures in Africa" series of two-reelers in all Fox theatres in the Albany zone. Nine situations are included.

State Distributes Educationals

Boyd B. Rakestraw, acting director of the University of California Extension Division at Berkeley, Cal., reports that more than 1,500 reels of educational films are available for distribution, in addition to entertainment films. A new group of films dealing with athletics, recreation, hygiene and physiology has been added to the university's film library.

Nick Harris Series to Radio

Bringing what RKO says is a novelty to the screen, Spencer Gordon Bennet, pioneer of the industry, has signed with Radio to produce and direct a series of six two-reel Nick Harris detective stories. Options on an additional series have been retained.

The first, "Facing the Gallows," has been completed.

"Vagabond" Material Arrives

Fourteen thousand feet of film have been received by Van Beuren from Asia and the Settlements, as part of the new crop of scenes for forthcoming releases of the "Vagabond Adventures." The film comes from three Van Beuren units that are traveling throughout the interior.

New Policy on Football Series

All of Educational's six subjects in the new "Football For the Fan" series will be ready for release and available to exhibitors by the time the football season is ushered in. The reason for this change is so that the exhibitor may cash in on the public interest in football during the gridiron season.

Interest in Rockne Films

A. H. Schnitzer, RKO-Pathe short subject sales manager, reports increased interest on the part of exhibitors in the Knute Rockne football series. Prints on all six subjects are now available.

Willie Hoppe to Make Short

Willie Hoppe, billiard champion, has been signed by M-G-M for a special short subject on the game to be directed by Zion Myers.

Zeidman Ready to Shoot

Bennie Zeidman has leased space at the Coast Tec-Art studio for his new series of independent productions, and will operate as B. F. Zeidman Productions, Ltd.

150 Features and Shorts from Epics

Talking Picture Epics has lined-up a program of 150 shorts and features during the coming season. First three of the features, which total 20, with six additional novelties, have already had Broadway openings, via road showing.

The shorts include the Ditmars "Wild Life" group; "Ghosts of Other Days," "Snooky Monkey Comedies" and a Lowell Thomas series.

Vitaphone Completes 1930-31 Product; 240 Films Were Made

August 31 marked the close of Vitaphone's 1930-31 production season. A total of 204 one-reelers and 36 two-reelers were released.

During the past two weeks, Norman Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, released "Rhythms of a Big City," "In Your Sombrero," "Baby Face" and "Rough Sailing," which completed the season's line-up.

HOLQUIST

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

YOUR movie-going public is, at the present, on the mat, and it has to defend itself! For many years we have heard loud clamor against the menace of the movies to the country's youth; the screen's undermining influence on family life. With an occasional mea culpa the guilt had to be acknowledged—the movies have been known to sin.

Now the producers, by unanimous consent, have risen to meet the challenge. Every studio is hard at work on exceptional types of juvenile pictures and outstanding examples of family audience entertainment. They are doing this in spite of the fact that the fickle public can be notoriously ungrateful. They have witnessed four outstanding pictures of the past year fail to bring in adequate financial return. "Byrd at the South Pole"; "Abraham Lincoln"; John McCormack's "Song o' My Heart"; and the distinguished "Disraeli" were notable examples of box office inconsistency where great pictures are concerned. The public, judged by its past performances, fails to measure up to its own demands, when they are fairly met, and this presents a serious economic problem to the companies investing fortunes in the making of pictures.

There is another angle to the problem, and the theatre men are in its perspective. If there is a nation wide demand for any given picture, the film may be shown in as many as 14,000 theatres. Without that demand, orders for bookings may come from as few as 1,400 theatres. It is in this connection that local requests presented by clubs or groups interested in bringing better pictures to their community can be directly influential.

Then, the question of the picture's fate after it reaches the theatre has to be faced squarely. Of course a "Disraeli" is not going to register in the little towns as it did on Broadway, New York. But with some support, "Byrd at the South Pole" should have done so. The answer to this lies in the degree of co-operation the theatre manager wins from his local club groups, schools, Legions, scout troops and through the active exploitation of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S free service SCHOOL AND SCREEN.

For several months this department has been making a careful study of the organizations and schools over the entire country that have registered themselves as being actively interested in better films. If you are not in contact with the groups in your own community with whom you might co-operate constructively and profitably, a letter addressed to us will bring you names, addresses and letters of introduction. This tediously compiled information is at your service. It may pay you to make use of it.

Behold the Ladies' Hats!

Within the past six weeks the pert Empress Eugenie hat has blossomed into being, and every gay young thing with a softly waved coiffure is wearing one with her early fall finery. Low of crown and with tip-tilted brim, they carry, in most instances, a flattering, soft tuft of feathers somewhere behind her left ear. And behold her with new chic and a new air of assurance in her carriage.

Are you asking yourself what a tip-tilted hat has to do with motion pictures? Surprisingly, there is a connection, and it may cheer you. At a recent meeting of executives of the wholesale millinery trade in New York City it was admitted that the daring little hat with its essentially feminine trimming has sold to the tune of five million dollars worth of business in the past six weeks, which means, translated, that times are not so stringent that the public will not stop to purchase what it fancies. And, of course, the girls have to wear their hats somewhere, so why not to the movies.

Even in hard times, it is a long lane that has no interesting by-ways. Consider the feather manufacturers. For years we have not seen a feather on dress, or fan or hat. Suddenly, a small, coy headpiece requires them, and ostrich plumes, heron's wings, quills and breasts of birds, all of African habitat, are on Broadway's hats over night. Yes, there is spending money available if one has the divining rod to locate it! In the meanwhile the feather makers are riding delightedly on a flood tide to prosperity.

The Musical Film

Another phenomenal example of public willingness to buy what it likes is the extraordinary success of the tuneful Viennese operetta, "Two Hearts That Beat in ¾ Time." When it opened in New York many months ago, the critics treated it with indifferent politeness. They smiled behind their hands at its impossible German title. The melody, they admitted, was provocative, and the theme gay; it was fair entertainment if you understood German and care for that sort of thing. But the public, with that uncanny discrimination that is its own, poured into the theatre. The play's lilting waltz theme, reminiscent of "The Blue Danube," remained with them. Soon it was whistled and sung everywhere.

On the thin thread of a tune a charming and light operatic motion picture with an impossible title, and in a foreign language, has played for more than 1,900 consecutive performances in the city of New York. And the end is not yet in sight!

Theatres Booking Special Programs

This department is especially interested in the increasing number of theatres promoting Junior matinees and Family Night programs. In these columns (issue of March 7th) we listed, by states, the number of theatres booking and exploiting selective programs for young people. At that time we could account for a total of 287 theatres. Since then, hundreds of letters stimulated by MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S SCHOOL AND SCREEN service have poured in to this department asking for help in the building up of Junior clubs, and in the selection of appropriate pictures for young people. Our present accounting shows us that there are now 349 theatres holding regular, frequent matinees for children; that 41 theatres are catering to the family audience through carefully planned programs; and that 160 theatres hold occasional children's matinees. The total of 550 does not include many theatres of which we have heard, but of whose activities we have no definite record.

This astonishing leap forward deserved some analysis. In every instance, we have found one fact to stand out. Wherever children's matinees are frequent, and successful, some organized local group is working with the theatre manager toward the desirable end.

A Compliment for Us

Constance Cameron, syndicated writer for Hearst's International Feature Service, sent out within the past week an editorial of which the following excerpt is part:

"Some time ago we considered the motion picture and its bearing upon children, and I made the suggestion that you who are parents request a list of approved pictures from one of the many committees which preview pictures and recommend those particularly adapted to children's needs and pleasure.

"If you have not sent for your list of recommended pictures as a guide for yourself and your youngsters, drop a line to Rita C. McGoldrick, LL.D. (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, 1790 Broadway, New York City). The lists are valuable and free."

Featuring Short Features

Warner Brothers are blazing an important new trail for proper recognition of the short feature. They have understood the asset the clever short picture may be in balancing and rounding out a program. They have spent generously in making their one and two-reel subjects something better than ex-vaudeville fillers. At the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio where they are intensively engaged in making better quality short subjects, the vaudeville acts of earlier days are definitely out.

The directors at Vitaphone are selecting casts for their series of pictures with careful diligence. More than 500 applicants were interviewed or tested before the leading parts were awarded for the Booth Tarkington series of thirteen juvenile films, and more than 200 tests were made before a satisfactory cast was gathered for the twelve two-reel S. S. Van Dine mystery thrillers. In addition to these, the studio is giving particular attention to the production of some high grade musical shorts in which well known stars are to be featured.

The company has announced that these finished products will be properly advertised with the feature pictures. It is time for the other major companies to follow this lead!

Casting Thrill-O-Drama

"Mounted Fury," seventh Sono Art "Thrill-O-Drama," is being cast on the Coast. John Bowers, Blanche Mehaffey, Lina Basquette and Robert Ellis are featured.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

Vol. 104, No. 11 — September 12, 1931

The Shoemaker's Last

THE habit of picking on Hollywood as the source of all the difficulties in the motion picture industry is discouraged by a pleasantly sane discussion and definition of fields of authority in the current bulletin to members issued by the Allied States Association. Plainly Allied says to its members that Hollywood's business is making pictures, while theirs is buying and selling them.

"Exhibitors put themselves in a weak position," says this bulletin, "when they engage in sweeping denunciations of Hollywood and the methods by which pictures are made. Hollywood has some faults sufficiently apparent to justify criticism from any source. Imitativeness, which leads to the production of too many pictures of the same kind, is one. Bawdiness—the result of making pictures primarily for the downtown affiliated houses—is another. But generally Hollywood is doing a pretty good job.

"The point is that the making of pictures calls for a peculiar talent which ordinary business men do not possess, and the critics of Hollywood not only could not take over the job themselves but are incapable of offering helpful suggestions. Such criticism can not be other than destructive.

"We hold, however, that the marketing and distribution of films is a matter on which theatre owners possess intimate knowledge and on which they are entitled to be heard. Also that virtually all of their legitimate complaints reside in this feature of the business. New York, not Hollywood, is the source of their troubles."

Zero in Publicity

PUBLICITY for mere publicity's sake gets nowhere. A great deal of motion picture publicity belongs in that category. A case in point, not so especially destructive as some others, but amply dumb, is afforded in a Publix story out of the West which gave rise to an Associated Press dispatch from Kansas City announcing that wheat was being accepted at theatre offices for admissions. An inquiry fails to find that wheat bins, or elevators, have taken the place of cash drawers at any of the houses concerned. But the story goes marching on, inspiring editorial writers and spreading abroad a poignant impression of violent depression in the grain belt. One fails to discover in what manner such publicity might possibly contrive to add to the drawing power of any picture or contribute to the good will of any theatre or circuit of theatres. It got in the papers and it will help fill the scrapbook. Meanwhile where the yarn reaches back into the wheat belt it will in its dim dull way impress the farmer that an attempt has been made to patronize him. Flying the publicity kite on a string of pessimism sells nobody anything.

A Minister Investigates

AT Leesville in Florida is a clergyman who does not believe everything he hears and reads. The Reverend Mr. Randolph F. Blackford, having observed much in the prints for these several years about the iniquities of the motion picture, set out this summer to do some first hand scientific research. That decision alone sets him apart from many of the critics of the motion picture, who are in the main all too ready to pass judgment on the basis of somebody's synopsis. The Reverend Mr. Blackford for three months made it his business to see every picture exhibited in his town. He took them "mine-run" as they came to Leesville. In a letter to "The Living Church," a leading Episcopalian organ published in Milwaukee, he reports that he found in three months of picture going just three minutes of screen time, measured by his watch, of material in which he might have found objection. Interested further, he took a look into the juvenile delinquency situation and determined he would "keep careful tabulation on boys and girls who came into conflict with the law, and found the lawbreakers in every case practically never went to the movies, i.e., went less than once a month. The picture crowd kept out of mischief. This was personal investigation in one town, but in another small town a number of prominent citizens said the same situation held."

100 Per Cent Talk

SOME vigorous observations on the art of the talking picture come from Mr. Louis Gasnier, now a Paramount director, who remarks that: "In the beginning talking films were ninety-five per cent dialogue and five per cent action. My formula for successful pictures calls for a maximum of forty per cent talk. Any more makes a photographed play. And the motion picture can never compete with the theatre in its realm." If that is the case the dominance of the motion picture among the arts of expression is hard to understand. Meanwhile Mr. Gasnier is mistaken about the percentage of talk. When he appeared in the 1905 Pathe masterpiece, "The Runaway Horse," pictured in five hundred feet, in France, he talked all the time. The picture was silent but Mr. Gasnier was not.

ALLIED GIRDING FOR NATIONWIDE FIGHT ON PERCENTAGE BOOKING

Allied at Meeting Fires Opening Gun Over Percentages

The first gun in what may prove to be a national fight on percentage contracts by Allied States Association was fired this week at the annual convention of Northwest Allied Theatre Owners in Minneapolis. where resolutions were passed condemning unfair percentage terms and hitting at the Federal Theatre Accounting Service, a branch of which was only recently established in the northwest territory.

With Abram Myers, president of Allied States; Al Steffes, Allied official, and H. M. Richey, Allied Michigan district director, conducting the meeting of 300 exhibitors from six northwest states, the Minneapolis convention assumed national significance.

The subject of protection also came in for serious discussion at the meeting, with heated arguments resulting in splitting up the committee on protection into two factions. Disagreements are reported to have arisen over the demands of country theatre factions to make a stand against enforcement of protection of any kind and representatives of metropolitan theatre interests insisting on adjustment rather than elimination of protection. The two factions split up the committee and conferred separately.

Wisconsin delegates reported that the State Marketing Commission at Madison had been appealed to by Wisconsin exhibitors to conduct a survey of protection practices in that state with a view to obtaining legislative adjustment of protection schedules there.

Following the opening address of President Myers, in which an appeal was made to support the Hays-sponsored unemployment aid measures, the convention indicated that its support and co-operation would be forthcoming.

The M-G-M contract was the target of bitter criticism in early stages of the meeting.

Mayor W. A. Anderson of Minneapolis received delegates from the convention who protested Anderson's recent letter to Tom Maloy, indicted business agent of the Chicago Operators' Union, in which Al Steffes was described as a "professional strike-breaker." Steffes played a prominent part in the fight of Chicago independent exhibitors against the two men in the booth demands of the union there. Mayor Anderson replied that he would respond to the convention by letter.

THE STILL OF THE MONTH

With this issue MOTION PICTURE HERALD begins the monthly publication of the most interesting still photograph from current production submitted in competition for this special attention. It is the purpose of this page to give recognition and encouragement to the sheerly pictorial side of motion picture production and those who contribute to it. The art of the camera has been invaded and to a degree shadowed by the invasion of the microphone, but fundamentally a motion picture really ought to contain both motion and pictures. The still photograph is one of the most important instruments of picture exploitation, and is important to a degree that impatient producers and directors have seldom recognized. The well made still usually can say more about a production than several adjectives. MOTION PICTURE HERALD will for this monthly pictorial page be glad to consider stills pertaining to any current production made anywhere in the world. The stills will be considered on their own individual importance as photographs, apart from the weight or merit of the production to which they relate. The essence of importance in this instance is in pictorial composition and quality. —TERRY RAMSAYE.

Opposition Now Seen as Organization Policy

Wall Street to Get Data Charging "False Economy" in Maintaining Checking Bureaus

Evidence that Allied States is girding itself for a nationwide fight on all percentage playing is contained in an official bulletin to members from Allied's national headquarters at Washington.

The bulletin intimates that Allied's opposition to all percentage exhibition contracts, manifested in the official representation of the national organization at the exhibitors' M-G-M protest meeting in New York two weeks ago, is now definitely recognized by Allied as an organization policy. The bulletin reveals further that Allied is engaged in a collection of evidence of a nature designed to represent percentage playing as "harmful, wasteful and uneconomic," and that national Allied headquarters already has such evidence.

Called Wrong in Principle

The evidence already on hand, and that which remains to be gathered, it is indicated, will be the basis of Allied's national fight on all percentage contracts. The bulletin also indicates that Allied's action, on the completion of the gathering of evidence, will be directed at the Wall Street organizations associated with motion picture industry financing. Allied will attempt to prove, it is intimated, by its presentation of evidence to financial houses, that current economy efforts within the industry are insignificant when compared with "the true economy of eliminating the costly checking bureaus saddled on the industry."

The bulletin states in part that "there is an accumulation of evidence that percentage playing is wrong in principle; that it is having a harmful effect on the industry and is wasteful and uneconomic.

"One feature (of percentage playing) that has received too little attention," the report continues, "is that percentage playing necessarily involves checking. Apart from the annoyance and friction created by the checking of theatres and auditing of their accounts is the economic waste incident to maintaining large and costly organizations for that purpose. There is need in the industry today," it is said, "for the large sums of money being paid to these checking bureaus for keeping the theatres under a provocative surveillance."

Wall Street as the Court

Definitely revealing Wall Street as the court before which Allied may present its collective evidence against percentage playing, Abram F. Myers, president, says in the bulletin that "if pictures were sold on a flat rental basis for what they are fairly worth, this heavy burden (checking)

INDUSTRY TAKES RANK AS SECOND GREATEST EMPLOYER OF AIR SERVICES

12 Per Cent Gain Monthly In Air Mail Usage

Film Represents Half of Volume of Merchandise Handled by N. Y. Air Express Concern

Use of the airplane by the motion picture industry for mail, express and passenger transportation has increased so rapidly within the past few months that the industry now ranks as the second largest user of air transportation, a survey reveals.

Passenger traffic between New York and the Pacific Coast ranks the industry high among those using the transcontinental lines for business purposes, and over a period of years has advanced in accordance with improvements made in aviation. Maintenance of regular plane schedules of 28 hours between the east and west Coasts have served to bring aviation into greater favor with an industry whose unique separation of executive and production locations makes speed in travel a factor of great importance.

Likewise, the same separation of industry activities tends to make the picture industry one of the largest users of air mail service. Not only is this true of correspondence between executive offices and studios, but the maintenance of large numbers of exchanges throughout the country also requires speedy transit of mail matter.

Efforts in the interests of economy to reduce operation costs by eliminating unnecessary long distance telephone calls and telegraph messages have also shown their effects in marked increases in the volume of air mail originating within the industry. Postal authorities estimate that use of the air mail by motion picture companies has shown a monthly increase of 12 per cent for the past six months, probably attributable, at least in part, to current economy efforts.

Transportation of film by air express is a newer phase of the industry's utilization of speed in transit, although it is developing rapidly and already represents an estimated 50 per cent of the volume of merchandise handled by the New York office of Air Express Service, a subsidiary of Railway Express Agency.

Seventy-five per cent of the film volume outgoing from New York is estimated to be newsreel prints. Of the newsreel companies, Fox is the largest user of air express, closely followed by Universal. Pathe and Paramount are infrequent users of the service. John Hamill, Paramount manager of exchange operations, estimates that not more than five to ten per cent of the company's express shipments are made by air.

Definite figures on the amount spent by the industry for air express service are not available in view of the fact that the shipments made from New York are despatched

Another True Story!

Yes! Hollywood is stepping right into British film production. She has a good deal to teach Great Britain—if producers of Great Britain will listen. There's the story of the British International unit which set out for Tripoli, the Mediterranean gateway to the Sahara, there to do location shots for "McGlusky the Sea Rover." Directors, artists, and technicians, went they all, but no one had been sent hence to prepare a place for them. They found that in these distant lands film men were not as wise men of the East, nor of the West: they were unwelcome strangers not worthy to damp the yellow sands of Sahara with the sweat of their white bodies. And after much dialogue (unrecorded) they did depart, returning to the land whence they came, their quivers still full; their arrows unshot. They were so near to the promised Land, yet so far from the unpromised locations. McGluskey is on the shelf meanwhile: maybe until Hollywood brings its own Californian Sahara to this happy land of quibbles and quotas.

Paramount Will Not Close Eastern Plant of Long Island

With at least two features in work monthly for the next six months, decision has been made by Paramount to continue in operation the Astoria, Long Island, studio. A corresponding increase in production of short features will also be made.

Six two-reelers from producers other than Paramount will increase the shorts lineup this season to 32 two-reelers, in addition to the regular group of 52 singles.

Frisch-Rinzler Deal Brings End Of Fox Brooklyn Operations

On October 1, Frisch-Rinzler will acquire the remaining 13 Fox theatres scattered throughout Brooklyn. The deal, already reported, gives the independents 41, all previously operated by Fox, which now has only one, the Brooklyn, in that borough.

Six others were sold in Brooklyn to Jack Hattam and Henry Siegel.

Radio "Trust" Suit vs. RCA Continued by Government

Suit of the United States against Radio Corporation and other electrical and radio firms scheduled in the United States District Court at Wilmington was continued by Judge John P. Nields this week. Defendants are charged by the government with having maintained a "radio trust."

Loew's 40-Week Earnings Over Nine Millions

Net profit of $9,829,482 for 40 weeks ended June 5, 1931, is reported by Loew's, Inc., which includes MGM and other subsidiaries. This is $1,952,442 lower than the net for a corresponding period in 1930, but represents $1,614,448 more than the 1929 period.

Depreciation and taxes for the 40 weeks in 1931 totaled $4,122,203, the highest in three years; 1930 taking $3,786,932, and 1929, $3,130,908.

Operating profit for 1931 was $13,951,-685, as compared with $15,568,856 in 1930, and $11,345,942 in the 40 weeks of 1929.

Publix Must Redeem at $75 Shares Now Worth Only $24

Paramount-Publix will have to pay $75 per share for its stock, now worth $24 per share, in redeeming 65,000 shares under a court order in the action of Joseph Balter, Boston stockholder, against the company.

Supreme Court Justice Frankenthaler dismissed the action against Paramount, which sought an injunction restraining it from redeeming the shares paid out to the Kunsky Theatre interests in Detroit, when Paramount bought a controlling interest in that circuit.

Lowe Forced to Leave Work; Near Breakdown from Illness

Edmund Lowe, Fox star, on the verge of a nervous breakdown, has been forced to quit pictures for an indefinite time, and has by his own request, been removed from the cast of "Cheating." Another partner for Victor McLaglen will be sought for "Disorderly Conduct." His contract with Fox expires October 1.

At the doctor's orders, he will rest for at least three months, before attempting further screen work. He and his wife, Lilyan Tashman, may go to Europe.

Pomeroy Starting Technical Institute, Coast Laboratory

Roy J. Pomeroy, formerly head of Paramount's technical department, expects to conclude negotiations this week for the establishment of a motion picture technical institution on the Coast.

It will be an outlet for his various devices, and will be used as a laboratory for the solving of various studios' technical difficulties. A machine shop, experimental laboratory and storehouse for miniature contrivances will be part of the institute.

TRADE COMMISSION STILL DELVING INTO "UNFAIRNESS" OF AD FILMS

Hays Office Denies Knowing of Plan to Offer 5-5-5 Choice

Officials of the Hays organization disclaim any knowledge of a plan reported to be under consideration by distributors for offering the 5-5-5 contract as a choice to exhibitors already sold on new product.

"I know nothing about such a plan," said C. C. Pettijohn.

"I not only know nothing about a plan of that kind, but have not even heard of the report," said Frank Wilstach.

The report stated that the distributors were considering the contract-choice offer in order to forestall complaints from exhibitors against the 1931-32 contracts, and added that if the offer was not made there was little likelihood of the 5-5-5 contract being placed in use until the next sales season.

Pathe, Cameramen Settle Dispute

William H. Strafford, business manager of local 666, Chicago, of the Cameraman's union, has stated there that an amicable agreement on all points of difference has been reached with Pathe News, following a conference between Strafford and J. S. Connolly, general manager of Pathe News. The newsreel and the union had been in controversy for several weeks, with strike threats and many bickerings.

According to Strafford, Pathe News will retain two crews, comprising four men, in the Chicago territory.

At the Pathe News home office in New York, it was stated an amicable settlement had been reached through the employment by Pathe News of one crew, comprising two men, members of local 666 of Chicago, to cover that territory.

Breen Returns from Sierras

Joseph I. Breen of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America has returned from a sojourn of a fortnight in Hollywood, Tia Juana and other producing centers. He found the weather in the Los Angeles sector as unusual as usual. He reports the Indian pottery industry at Albuquerque on a normal basis.

Trying to Establish Their Advertising Status

Informal Inquiries Now Being Made, With Decision For or Against an Investigation to Come Later

The Federal Trade Commission still is holding under advisement the advisability of making a thorough investigation of the sponsored reels field, despite reports to the contrary which stated that a probe of the ad film situation had been called off by the Government agency.

While it is true that the more important producer-distributors several months ago stepped out of the ad reel market, there are countless others, widely scattered throughout the country, which engage in production of these shorts. In most instances the companies concentrate in local territory.

That production and distribution by a number of companies of sponsored films is under the secret scrutiny of the Commission was verified this week at Washington, where Federal authorities are attempting to determine whether the showing of industrial subjects, or other types of shorts, without bearing labels of advertising, constitutes an unfair practice or is deception of the public.

Although officials of the Commission refuse to discuss the investigation, they did admit that inquiries were being made. These inquiries, they stated, will remain for the time being in the "informal" stage.

However, it is intimated, there is a strong belief that the showing of industrial or sponsored shorts is advertising, when shown publicly, and as such, they should be labeled in the same manner as are advertisements in newspapers, which is governed by Federal statutes.

The sponsored reel has been the subject of a number of complaints to the Commission, majority of which are believed to have emanated from newspaper circles where feeling is high against this form of competition to advertising columns of newspapers. This agitation exerted considerable influence in decision of important motion picture distributors to discontinue their production and screening in company-owned theatres.

By the use of such films, it is pointed out by those favoring a government checkup, manufacturers of the advertised products secure high-grade coverage at moderate cost, as compared with similar coverage through magazines at comparatively higher rates. In addition, the Government, it is understood, questions the fairness of placing an audience in the position where it cannot avoid the forced screen advertisement without leaving a theatre.

The producer, even though he may not distribute the reels, is expected to come in on the investigation if it materializes, inasmuch as he is made a party to their exist-

158 Musicians In Philadelphia Union "Walkout"

A strike of motion picture musicians went into effect in Philadelphia September 8 with the withdrawal of 115 men from all Stanley-Warner theatres in this city and 23 men from Freihofer-Paramount theatres. The latter interests appear to be working in conjunction with Warner Brothers, so 23 musicians were withdrawn from the Tower, Frankford and Roosevelt theatres. The Fox will continue the summer personnel of 23 men for the purpose of negotiation. At the present time there are but 35 musicians working in motion picture houses in Philadelphia, 23 at the Fox, seven at the Carman and five at the Keswick. The total on strike is now 158.

According to Adolph Hirschberg, president of the Musicians' Protective Association, the men are prepared to stay out indefinitely or until the motion picture officials decide to accede to reasonable demands. The musicians will meet the Fox officials in the near future and it is expected that a satisfactory agreement will be reached regarding the winter personnel. The independent theatres, including the Carman and the Keswick, will continue to employ the same number of men as last winter. The musicians feel it is strange that independent theatres, which charge a lower admission than houses belonging to large corporations, can afford to employ the same number of musicians as formerly while the corporations claim that they cannot afford to do so.

William Goldman, Stanley-Warner general manager, stated that his company would be glad to employ as many musicians as it could use; that while he regretted the impossibility of arriving at an agreement with the Musicians' Protective Association, the situation was the result of world-wide changes in the amusement industry, particularly the increased popularity of sound pictures. Last year he said that as a result of its contract with the union, the Stanley Company paid more than twice as many musicians as were needed. Last winter's personnel in the Warner theatres in the city was 135 men but the musicians have been informed that only 50 men can be used this year.

Hirschberg stated the next move in the negotiations would have to come from Warner Brothers. The Freihofer-Paramount interests have stated that unless there is a change in policy they will employ no musicians in the Tower, Roosevelt and Frankford Theatres.

FILM STOCKS CLINCH "BLUE CHIP" RANK

Industry Stands Ahead of Steel, Autos and Petroleum in the Net Worth and Per Cent of Return

By THE ANALYST

Motion picture companies have clinched the right to have their stocks listed among the "blue chips" of the market by the showing in earning capacity they made during the first six months of this year. Statisticians of The National City Bank of New York, in grouping the operations of 555 companies during the first half of the year, disclose a showing in the amusement field that ranks this industry in the van of "big business" ahead of steel, automobiles and petroleum in two important financial positions, viz.: increase in net worth of assets and per cent of return on net worth.

National City's tabulation takes the net worth of the companies as of January 1, last, as the capitalization upon which to figure the percentage of return shown by the net profits for the first six months of the year. Upon this basis the amusement industry shows a return of 2.6 per cent compared with 1.3 per cent for the United States Steel Corporation, one-tenth of one per cent for the remainder of the iron and steel industry; 1.4 per cent for the automobile industry aside from General Motors Corporation, and no return at all in the petroleum industry. General Motors Corporation is credited in the tabulation with a return of 17.4 on its net worth, and is the only company in the four industries which shows a ranking above the amusement field as a group in the percentage of return.

In the matter of increase in net worth, however, the amusement industry shows an expansion during 1930 unrivaled by any of the individual companies or groups, with an increase of 23.9 per cent. The nearest approach listed by National City is drugs and sundries, chiefly comprising the chain drug stores which went largely into the restaurant business in 1930, with an increase in net worth of 10.9 per cent. Among the four major groups, however, the petroleum industry stands next to the amusement field with an increase in net worth of 9.8 per cent compared with an increase of 7.3 per cent for United States Steel; a decrease of nine-tenths of one per cent for the rest of the iron and steel industry; an increase of 1.3 per cent for General Motors, and a decrease of 11.2 per cent for the rest of the automobile industry.

National City includes Madison Square Garden Corporation and Consolidated Film Industries in its amusement group. The remainder of the group comprises Paramount Publix Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Universal Pictures Corporation, Radio Keith Orpheum Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, a group which, while not including all the motion picture companies, represents a fair cross section of the industry. The other companies were not included as reports for the first half year on a comparative basis were not available.

The inclusion of Madison Square Garden Corporation and Consolidated Film Industries in the grouping does not distort the picture given of the motion picture industry in comparison to the other groupings. The net worth of Madison Square Garden Corporation showed no change for the year with a combined stock valuation and surplus of $4,240,993 while the net worth of Consolidated Film Industries was $11,380,491 as of January 1, last, compared with $7,911,236 as of January 1, 1930. The deductions of these amounts from the net worths of the entire grouping would not materially affect the standing of the five motion picture companies remaining.

In the question of net earnings the decrease shown by all the groups is large but, with the single exception of General Motors standing alone, the decrease in the amusement field is less than that shown by the other three groups. The decrease in earnings in the amusement field is shown as 74.5 per cent compared with a decrease of 79.2 for the United States Steel Corporation; a decrease of 98 per cent for the remainder of the iron and steel industry; a decrease of 81.2 per cent for the automobile industry exclusive of General Motors and a decrease of more than 100 per cent for the petroleum industry which showed a deficit for the first six months of this year.

Despite this favorable showing of the amusement field a comparison of the first six months of the year puts this industry at a great disadvantage, as the other three groups reach their peak of business for the year in this period while the motion picture industry is approaching its low point for the twelve months. The automobile and petroleum industries do their greatest volume of business during the early spring and throughout the summer, while the steel industry also has its greatest volume of sales during the early spring and summer due to the arrival of weather compatible with outdoor construction work. The same weather which augments the use of automobiles and gasoline and steel, mitigates against attendance at motion picture theatres.

Undoubtedly a comparison on the same basis for the remaining six months of this year will show a still greater enhancement of the standing of the motion picture industry. Steel is still in the doldrums of inactivity, petroleum has no solution of large sales with ever larger losses, while the future course of the automobile industry is still a matter of conjecture. In contrast to these, the motion picture industry has started the last half of the year with a spurt in increased profit, declared due to "better pictures and more favorable weather." The truth would seem to be that the motion picture industry has a greater resistance and resiliency to unfavorable factors than any of the other industries which deserve classification as "big business" or "blue chips."

THE CAMERA REPORTS

AUTHOR AND STAR. Louis Weitzenkorn, former editor of a New York tabloid and author of the stage play, "Five Star Final," from which the Warner Brothers' production was taken, with the star of the picture, Edward G. Robinson. The film opened in New York Thursday.

SISTERS OF THE FILMS. And in real life, too—Polly Ann Young, Loretta Young and Sally Blane—combined in a family portrait during a recent studio meeting while Loretta was working opposite Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in his latest First National picture, "I Like Your Nerve."

NOTED PLAYWRIGHT. And an equally noted executive of the film industry, Irving Thalberg of M-G-M, posing for the cameraman with Frederick Lonsdale upon the latter's arrival in Hollywood from England to begin writing a group of original stories and dramatizations for M-G-M productions.

HOME AGAIN. Jack L. Warner, vice president of Warner Brothers in charge of production, and also head of production activities at First National, upon his arrival in New York with Mrs. Warner and Jack L. Jr., on the Bremen, following a vacation trip to Europe.

STRIPED FOR ACTION. It's a strange game that can't inspire strange togs, as witness these links pajamas worn by Anthony Bushell, Warner Brothers player, and Zelma (the Mrs.), ready for gulluf.

PENSIVE. (Below) An eye-full of Lois Moran in a new study of the M-G-M featured player, who is John Gilbert's feminine lead in "West of Broadway."

HOW IT'S DONE. (Above) The business of finding the exactly suitable spot for exterior sequences is a scientific business. Here is a step in the process, as executed by Herb Hirst, location expert for RKO-Radio.

A COMEDIAN'S FUN. At any rate, this daddy is making his public believe it is as the cameraman catches him devoting some of his time off the set to the youngest of his heirs. This is the nursery in the home of Joe E. Brown, First National's celebrated comic, with Joe and Mary Elizabeth Ann and Baby Bunny having a party all of their very own.

SUNDOWN. Two lovers meet at twilight beside the sea—a striking "still" of a scene in Warner Brothers' "Chances," showing the star, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and his feminine lead, Rose Hobart.

MODERN BRONCHO. (Above) And about to ride the thing, was Winnie Lightner, Warner Brothers star, when Benjamin Warner, father of the Warner brothers, chanced around a corner to give her a bit of fatherly advice.

ALERT. (Below) Again the eyes have it in this new portrait of Leila Hyams. She is now opposite William Haines in his latest MGM picture, as yet untitled.

HER OWN FRONT YARD. Another film celebrity at home—Madge Evans, M-G-M featured player, on the spacious lawn in front of her California residence. Her latest role is in "West of Broadway."

QUICK ON THE DRAW. That's what the showmen who have a host of Western fans say about Bob Custer, shown here in his latest Big Four production, "Headin' for Trouble."

COUNTRY GENTLEMAN. George Arliss is being just that these days while spending a lengthy vacation in his native England. Here the Warner Brothers star is shown at his estate at Maida Vale, which is just outside London. Arliss is expected back in America shortly, when he will immediately begin production of "A Successful Calamity," an adaptation of a stage play by Clare Kummer.

BRITISH INDUSTRY FEARS NEW TAX AS NEW CABINET TACKLES CRISIS

Theatres Already Hit by Decision to Cut Dole

Question is Whether New Burdens Will Be Reasonably Bearable Or Will Cripple Entire Trade

By W. H. MOORING, London

BULLETIN

England's crisis budget submitted Thursday levies an additional entertainment tax, raising the seat tax two pence, making a total of 16 2/3 per cent. of the receipts.

The political and economic crisis which has overtaken Great Britain has put into power the most mottled collection of ministers ever called upon to govern.

Their ascension to the throne of power has set the film industry by the ears, if only for the reason that the new national government includes a strong representation of the Conservative Party which stands firmly by the general policy of tariffs, besides having a definitely anti-American complex.

A Further Complication

There is the further complication that Ramsay MacDonald—never committed to a strictly free trade policy—may, in view of the fact that $600,000,000 is wanted for revenue account, and wanted quickly, be very easily swayed by his new Conservative colleagues. Especially may this operate against America because MacDonald was finally put into the financial cart by the refusal of American banking interests to provide financial assistance except on condition that he effected a cut in the unemployment dole, the principle upon which his Cabinet split.

Even politicians have a spleen, so MacDonald may very well decide that a little extra taxation against U. S. A. would provide a neat reply to his monied friends across the blue. That is the real basis for the ugly rumors which, immediately on the appointment of the new Government, began to keep Wardour Street awake o' nights. The first official statement as to how the new Cabinet proposes to raise the necessary funds is awaited with the most gnawing anxiety. The trade expects to "get it in the neck."

Luxury is always arguable as a logical source of state revenue: very few people can see that even luxury has to be provided, and that in its provision employment and trade are created.

Cinema takings are already going to be hard hit by the decision of the new Government to cut the unemployment dole by 10 per cent, because in many of the industrial areas nearly 50 per cent of cinema audiences are in receipt of this form of "income." They will have to take that 10 per cent off the "luxury" end of their six dollars a week—which is about all a small family has to get along on even before the cut is made.

Question of How Heavy

It is almost certain that the entertainment business will have to face some additional burdens: the only question is whether they will be reasonably bearable or whether they will be enough to cripple the whole trade.

Sir Philip Cunliffe Lister, that friend of U. S. A. (?) who was responsible, as president of the Board of Trade, for the introduction of the Films Act of 1927 (Quota), is back again at the Board of Trade, and it is possible that he may now ask the industry, for which that piece of legislation has done so much (sic), to show its appreciation by handing over some of the "swag." So the F. B. I. doesn't know yet whether to be glad or otherwise now that Cunliffe Lister is back in office!

British Companies To Distribute 140

English distributors during the current year will market nearly double the number of films required by the Cinematograph Films Act, or British quota law. Some 140 pictures will be available to the British exhibitors by the close of the year specified in the Act, which began last March.

British International Pictures and associated companies plans 35 features, with an equal number from Gaumont-British Corporation; Gainsborough will produce 12, British and Dominions will make 12, and British Lion will make about eight. The remaining 40 will come from Paramount, Associated Talking Pictures and various independent producers. This total may, however, be even higher, chiefly because of the increasing activity of American producers in the English field.

Miami Independent Operators Form Separate Organization

Operators in Miami, Fla., independent theatres, where a strike is in progress, have formed a union known as the Local Association of Motion Picture Operators of Miami, Fla. Roy Mitchell has been elected president and B. C. Hofstutler, business agent. The local is picketing houses employing I. A. T. S. E. members, and vice versa.

The new group claims it desires to cooperate with the theatre owners and advocates one man in the projection booth. The Miami Theatre Owners and Managers Association claims Local 316 violated the contract and arbitration agreement recently entered into.

Film Paper Editor Sees Opportunity For British Films

Miss L. H. Clark, editor of Today's Cinema, English motion picture trade paper, who returned to England this week from New York, stresses the importance of British producers devoting their efforts to films embodying simple stories made against the national backgrounds of England.

Miss L. H. Clark

Miss Clark sees the unusual and "obvious opportunities" for British pictures in America at the moment, based on the "dearth of worth-while product." The editor believes the American public eager for novelty, and asking for as little dialogue in talking films as possible.

Fox Managers Are Told to Cut Cost

"The Last Word" Fox Theatres house organ, has published a request from an executive for a 10 per cent reduction in all light, heat, power and water bills, by individual houses in the circuit.

The notice cites numerous specific instances where substantial savings may be effected in house operation, for example house lights, marquees, vertical signs and cooling systems. With cooperation by the house staffs, says the bulletin, hundreds of dollars annually can be saved for the company.

Cuts in supplies, repairs and renewals made only when absolutely necessary, discrimination in the use of telegrams and long distance calls and holding down items usually listed as "miscellaneous expense" are noted as a means of reducing house operating cost.

B. S. Moss Takes 12 Tiffany Films for New York Theatre

Tiffany will have 12 first runs on Broadway this season, as the result of B. S. Moss having signed for the entire "quality group" of the company for the B. S. Moss theatre which will reopen September 19 as a combination de luxe film and vaudeville house.

Among the Tiffany films to play the house will be "The Last Mile," "Race Track," "Leftover Ladies," "Murder at Midnight" and several others. The new house has undergone extensive alterations.

FOX MIDLAND CIRCUIT DROPS FIGHT AGAINST INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS

Roxy Will Tour Europe Getting Radio City Ideas

Samuel L. (Roxy) Rothafel, and a group of architects, builders and engineers will sail on the Bremen, September 23, to study latest European developments in the fields of music, drama, architecture, lighting and acoustical and sound-proofing effects.

The tour will last one month, and is for the purpose of gathering ideas which may be applied in the development of the Radio City project in New York, sponsored by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and of which Rothafel is an executive.

He will also scout for new material on the Continent, signing particular dramatic or musical talent for the International Music Hall, which will be the world's largest theatre. It is scheduled to open in October, 1932, and will be operated by Radio-Keith-Orpheum.

AMPA Boys Honor Jack Harrower

Jack Harrower, Film Daily's representative, "Phil M. Daly," was guest of honor at a bachelor dinner and testimonial banquet given at the Dixie hotel in New York on Thursday evening, when several score press agents and others in the Eastern film fraternity gathered together at a "ball and chain" party staged by George Harvey, Paul Benjamin and others. Harrower will be married on Saturday afternoon at the Riverside Church in New York.

National 16 mm. Exposition Set for September 21 to 26

The first national 16 mm. motion picture exposition will be held at the New York Hotel Victoria, September 21 to 26, with representative of major producing companies present. The affair is under the auspices of the 16 mm. Board of Trade.

More than 100 products in the 16 mm. field are expected to be on exhibition. Julius Singer is the Board of Trade president and A. B. Ayers, Quincy, Mass., vice-president.

French Commission Appointed To Control All Phases of Films

A Superior Cinema Commission of 87 was appointed in Paris on Thursday to draft legislation regulating and controlling the French motion picture industry. There will be no official censorship, the new commission operating directly under supervision of the Minister of Beaux Arts.

A Time Saver

Paramount's Coast studio has an innovation in outdoor location work, which is intended, and successfully, as an efficient and time saving measure for units working away from the plant. The unit carries with it an interior film setting for emergency use outdoors, when the weather is such as to make outdoor shooting impossible, and permits filming under conditions similar to those prevailing at the Hollywood studio. All companies working inland will carry these emergency indoor sets, to be set up in barn, dance hall, auditorium or any other available space for shooting while waiting for the skies to clear. The walls of the temporary "sound stage" are draped with woolen blankets to deaden reverberations.

Incidental Music Will Be Used By Fox in Features

Fox will in the future use musical numbers incidentally in films as an aid in developing the plots, which is in a sense in line with the recent trend toward a moderate return to musicals.

Among the leading films to contain music is "Delicious," Gaynor-Farrell picture which will feature musical contributions by George and Ira Gershwin, though it will not be a musical comedy. George DeSylva has written a number for "Heart Free" in which James Dunn and Janet Gaynor will be starred.

"Merely Mary Ann," "Stepping Sisters" and "In Her Arms" are other productions which will feature musical compositions.

British Isles Has 5006 Film Houses; 3693 Wired For Sound

Latest census reports from London indicate the number of motion picture theatres in the British Isles as 5,006, of which 3,693 are equipped for talking films, leaving 1,313 not yet having sound apparatus.

There are now in England, according to estimates, more than 30 sound stages in the various studios of the country, with an anticipated total, by the end of September, of 40.

Sarnoff In London

David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, is in London and has been spending most of his time there in conference. He will return to New York shortly.

Threat of Appeal to U. S. Is Cue for Decision

National Significance Seen in Shanberg's Action Rescinding Move for More Protection in Kansas City

Fox Midland Theatres, one of the largest and most important circuit operators in Kansas-Missouri, this week abandoned its battle for increased protection over independent exhibitors in Kansas City. M. B. Shanberg, operating chief of the Fox subsidiary, took this action after the independents, taking their cue from owners at Cleveland and Lincoln, Neb., threatened to appeal for relief to the Federal Trade Commission. There have been rumblings for months of seeking government aid in independent ranks. These crystalized at Lincoln and Cleveland, followed by Kansas City, where owners formally indicated they would file official complaints.

See National Significance

It was in answer to the Kansas City complaint that Shanberg decided on abandoning Fox Midland's requests for increased protection over last year's schedules. Circuits named in a suit filed at Lincoln have yet to answer. Cleveland's exhibitors have not passed the threatening stage.

At Kansas City, it is felt in independent exhibitor circles that the victory over Fox Midland has national significance.

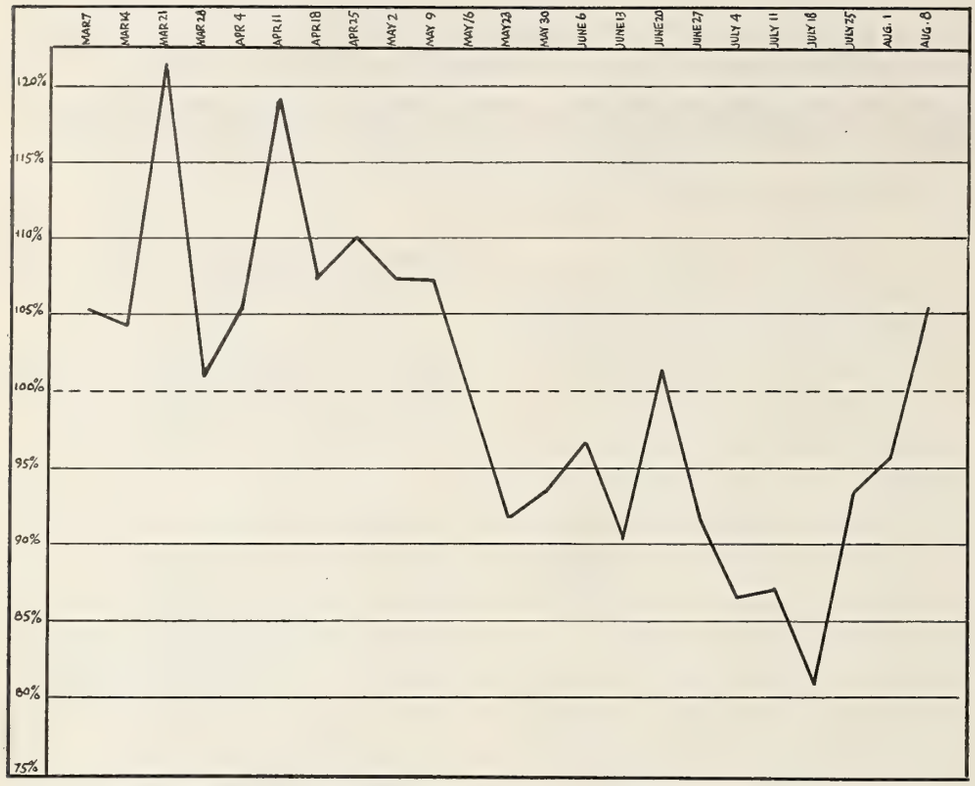
Shanberg this week notified exchanges to reinstate last season's protection schedule, and to disregard the plan he had submitted to distributors under which the new season's product was being booked at the time the independent theatre owners association of Kansas City threatened to file charges alleging restraint of trade.

Main Purpose Achieved

Whether the charges against Fox will be pressed has not been decided by the independents, according to Rick Ricketson, Hughes-Franklin division manager and member of the committee of exhibitors handling the fight. It is pointed out, however, that while the independents may not go through with their intention to obtain a test case of unreasonable chain protection, they have achieved their main purpose in Shanberg's voluntary abrogation of his schedule.

Spokesmen for the independents declared themselves as gratified with the victory, but not entirely satisfied as the reinstated schedule still gives Shanberg protection over competitive houses in certain situations. The independents will not be entirely contented until Shanberg agrees to a more advantageous schedule as to these situations, it was said.

Paramount entered into negotiations on Kansas City chain protection when John D. Clark, western division manager, arrived there Sunday to make Paramount's position clear in the controversy.



This chart shows the box office receipts in five Western cities from March to August, 1931. The five cities are Denver, Hollywood, Los Angeles, Portland and San Francisco.

Oldest Continuously Run House In Canada Remodels for Sound

Toronto Red Mill, "First Nickel Show in Dominion," Opened in 1906 by Late J. J. Griffin

The Red Mill in Toronto, Ontario, is closed and that's real news. It will reopen in September and that's more news.

The fact is that the Red Mill is the oldest continuously operated moving picture theatre in Canada, or at least it was until a few days ago when the house went dark for remodeling purposes. Strange, too, that the original owner of the Red Mill, John J. Griffin of Toronto, died August 14 in his 78th year after an illness of six months. It was Griffin who opened the Red Mill in 1906 when it was reputed to be the first "nickel show" in the Dominion. Griffin eventually owned 47 theatres in the Province of Ontario and gained the reputation of being the first chain theatre operator in Canada.

Big things are now happening for the Red Mill. For 25 years it has got along nicely with 200 seats but, in the alterations, the capacity is being raised to approximately 225 seats. The old Red Mill won't be what it used to be when it reopens in September because it is being wired for talking pictures, having relinquished its distinctiveness as the only silent film house in downtown Toronto. More still, the screen is being brought to the front of the house and the projection room is at the very back. The slope of the floor has been reversed and the badly-worn floor has been replaced by a solid concrete layer. Between the rows of seats the old floor has been hollowed out by the feet of thousands of patrons.

Out front, the box office is being brought forward to the street line while the old poster frames have reached the discard at last, as they will be replaced by framed panels for up-to-date advertising cards. It had become increasingly difficult for the manager, J. J. Collier, to obtain appropriate posters for his fronts while the silent pictures were fast running short. The last attraction at the Red Mill included "Michael Strogoff" and a Tiffany picture, "Lingerie," starring Alice White.

During the early years the Red Mill got along nicely with one operator but, with the present transformation, there will be a squad of four projectionists, two to a shift. Collier claims that the Red Mill was the first theatre to run morning shows. For years, performances started regularly at 9:30 a. m. and finished 10:30 p. m., a half hour before most other houses called it a day. This policy will be continued with the reopening of the wired house in September.

Collier argues that there is just as much room and opportunity for a small theatre as there is for a great picture palace. He points out that the public prophesied the early death of the Red Mill Theatre when Marcus Loew built a double-decker picture and vaudeville house of giant proportions only a few doors away. That was 18 years ago and both have survived. Loew's theatre was wired two years ago. The Red Mill, in fact, was practically the last stronghold of the "silents" in Toronto, Collier asserted.

A rather significant thing is that the price scale which had prevailed in recent years, namely 15, 20 and 25 cents, will continue. There will be three changes of program weekly whereas, in the past, a picture played at least a week and then might be brought back for one or more engagements.

The Red Mill has not been a part of the Griffin chain for some years. It was sold to the late L. J. Applegath and is now operated by the Charles Howarth Estate. According to Collier, the Red Mill is good for another quarter of a century at least. The reason for the temporary closing now is that the theatre was just about worn out through usage.

A New System of Lighting Control In RKO Theatres

The Thyraton-reactor theatre lighting control system has had its first application in a motion picture theatre at the new RKO theatre in Schenectady, N. Y. The system, which eliminates the bulky backstage switchboard, simplifies the entire theatre lighting control.

RKO will also install the same system in houses in Albany, N. Y., and Denver, Colo., to open in October and December, respectively. Thyraton tubes are the basis of the new system. By splitting the lights into various circuits, various groups can be controlled individually, and related groups of circuits can be controlled collectively through master circuits.

A novel addition to the lighting system in the Schenectady house is a "panic" control by means of which the full brilliance of all the lights in the house can be turned on instantly by the turn of a switch. The Denver and Albany houses, having vaudeville in addition to pictures, will require an even greater number of circuits than in Schenectady.

Rogers' Option Is Dropped; Will Enter Stage, Radio Work

Paramount has refused to renew its option on Charles "Buddy" Rogers at the terms stipulated in the contract. However, the actor plans a return to pictures following the completion of his radio and stage engagements.

When his contract expires December 1, Rogers will leave Hollywood for New York to organize his own orchestra and take up radio and stage contracts. He is said to be assured a salary of $10,000 per week from these engagements. He will make two or three more pictures for Paramount before he leaves.

Carl Laemmle Due This Week After Some Weeks in England

Carl Laemmle is expected to arrive in New York from England on Thursday. While in England the Universal president completed plans for the production of films in France and Germany.

He also handled some reorganization of the company's British distributing personnel, and spent some time with his biographer, John Drinkwater.

ADOPTION OF WIDE FILM AWAITS FAVORABLE ECONOMIC CONDITION

"Gone is the Boom-Time, Whoop-de-do Press Agent; Meet the New Type—a Business Man"

Fox, in "The Last Word," circuit periodical, introduces the new type of press agent:

"He is a business man, and figures percentages. The only things lacking in his office are charts showing the monthly trends of show business. Perhaps they will come later.

"This new business man-press agent has a cold, calculating eye. The advertising solicitor from the neighborhood paper wonders what has come over him. He is not the same genial client with a minimum of sales resistance, and a tongue that responded with a ready 'yes.'

"In these depression times, leading economists prescribe no curtailment in advertising for general industry; rather they urge the need of sustained volume in advertising, as one of the tonics for sick business.

"For obvious reasons, the theatres cannot maintain past standards. Advertising in show business has been on one glorious, exhilarating sleigh ride for the past few years. Easy sledding prompted the party.

"It took a bump in the form of hard times to give it a rude awakening, and cut short its passage.

"The effects of an unhealthy background of extravagance, carelessness, and waste must now be counteracted by three remedies, reducing, a careful diet, and the acquiring of a normal perspective of advertising values. The press agent must now be quick to realize that, and apply the cure.

"Even his meticulous desk and office reflect the great metamorphosis he has undergone.

"Percentages. Advertising values. Eliminations. Savings.

"Ever so often he dozes off a little, and dreams. He visualizes a glorious spectacle of days past—an open pocketbook and a campaign planned in the round thousands, with hundreds of blaring 24's, 6's, and 3's, thousands of heralds, window cards, spacious advertisements, and the like.

"Ofttimes his reveries are disturbed by the appearance on his mental horizon of a large S with two vertical stripes running through it.

"Gone is the boom-time, whoop-de-doo press agent. Meet the new type—the business man."

Foreign Pictures Tested on Coast

Efforts to promote the showing of foreign films in San Francisco and Northern California have not met with any marked degree of success and fewer are being shown than a few months ago. The reason assigned is that while this territory has a large foreign population, English is universally understood.

For a time the St. Francis in San Francisco was given over exclusively to foreigns, but they were dropped when attendance slumped. The Verdi, in the North Beach district, experimented by showing an Italian or a French subject one night a week, but interest in this likewise lagged. The Mexico at Sacramento tried the showing of Spanish films for two days, but has cut this to one day.

The most marked success with foreign language films in this territory has been at the Columbia, San Francisco, where German features have been shown most of the summer. These pictures have had runs of two and three weeks.

An Admission Tax Renewal Unlikely

Reports reaching Washington indicate that the possible imposition of some of the taxes in force during the war to offset the government deficit or aid the unemployed, is being discussed in circles throughout the country. Washington, however, has given little or no consideration to the matter.

With three months until the opening of Congress, administration leaders are waiting to see what conditions are at that time before advocating any additional taxation legislation.

The administration, it is felt, plans to get along without added taxes if possible. When business recovers, if existing tax rates do not provide a surplus which will eventually wipe out the deficit, increase of taxation may be resorted to.

50-mm Recommendation Leads the Way

Believe Projector Mechanisms Could Be Made at Price The Exhibitor Can Meet in Normal Times

General adoption of wide film as the motion picture's next advance now hinges upon the return of favorable economic conditions with both film producers and projector interests keeping ready to take immediate advantage of the arrival of that time. This is the situation following the long-awaited recommendations of the S M P E, to which the confusion over a standard width and ratio had been referred.

50-mm. Based on Economics

The recommendation of 50-mm., instead of 65 or 70, as the standard width, was itself based largely on economic considerations, and it is now expected that further developmental work, which has been pursued despite a belief that wide film had been temporarily forgotten, will proceed with the 50-mm. width, a film track of two mils and four standard apertures to the frame, as the type having the greatest support.

Production of projector mechanisms capable of handling both 35- and 50-mm. film, as provided for in the S M P E recommendations, could be promptly placed on a scale, it is believed, that would permit a price small enough for the change to be met in normal times by the average exhibitor. According to Walter E. Greene, vice-president of International Projector Corporation, that company's 70mm. projector head could be easily adapted to the 50mm. width, and facilities already have been provided for placing the wide film mechanism in large scale production.

Retentions and Changes

In the substitution of the projector heads, the same intermittent movement, shafts and gear ratios as in the 35-mm. head, may be used, the changes required being sprockets that may be lengthened or shortened for either width, interchangeable aperture, guide and gate, and magazines widened by the substitution of a new door.

The controversy that still continues over the ratio between the dimensions of the frame is not expected to attain important proportions, since the S M P E considered the major objection to the 5-to-3 ratio, raised by the studios, in arriving at its recommendation of a ratio of 1.8 to 1.

50 Feet Wide, 28 High

The latter ratio would make an image 50 feet wide have a height of approximately 28 feet, while the 5-to-3 ratio would give an image of that width a height of about 30 feet.

While images of such extreme widths

INDEPENDENTS FIND THE STUDIO FIELD RIPE

Zeidman Among Veterans Convinced That Good Films Can Be Made at Reasonable Cost

Independent producers, convinced that there never has been a more favorable time for them to act, are striking out for themselves and they are thanking the major companies for bringing about the very conditions that make the moment propitious for individual production.

These men, all with years of experience with the larger companies, say that they have learned that mass production of pictures is not the most economical, that the tremendous overhead from year to year must be charged to something and therefore is placed against the current production so that costs are all out of proportion.

Zeidman a Pioneer

Bennie F. Zeidman, Lewis Milestone, David Selznick, Cecil B. DeMille—these names are representative of the producers who are waiving the steady week in and week out pay check in favor of producing on their own. These men know that good pictures can be made at a reasonable cost, and with most of the money spent on the picture itself.

Zeidman, among these independent leaders, is a pioneer in the field. Some ten years ago he produced a program of eight pictures for the independent market. Later he became assistant general manager of Universal Pictures and next associate executive to Jack L. Warner for Warner Brothers studios. He also was an associate producer for Paramount for three years or more.

Thus Zeidman, in launching independent production now, brings with him the weight of experience of years of making pictures individually as well as for large companies.

Can Watch One Picture

And with the richness of that experience he sees great opportunities in single-handed production. He believes that the independent can meet the major companies more than half way in making box office attractions. He points out, for example, that the 35 or 40 per cent overhead tacked onto major company made pictures is eliminated. The independent can make a production, carefully select the story and stay with the writer in its treatment and continuity. He doesn't have to divide his time among three or four pictures at once. This eliminates the process of having several writers working on the same story and having a fifty thousand dollar accumulation cost attached to the picture before its start. In other words, when he spends $150,000 to $200.000 on a picture it is reasonably sure that picture will have 90 per cent production value of the amount expended.

Another important phase cited is that with the independent making only six to eight pictures a year he can take his time in the selection of suitable material, a proper script, cast and director without the strain of meeting release dates on sixty pictures a year. In other words, instead of turning out a picture every four days, many of which are made in the hopes that the shooting will correct story and script faults, the independent with a picture schedule of one every two months can be reasonably sure that everything is in readiness for the actual shooting without spending additional time, which means additional cost, in trying to correct continuity faults.

Zeidman cites as examples of this the first two pictures he is to make for the 1932 market. The first is a seasonable subject that has been flaming in headlines for the past three months and will continue for the next year. This is a story based on the Wickersham report and is called "Juvenile Court." This was written by James Whitiker, author of "The Demi-Bride" and many other popular novels. Junior Durkin, who recently scored in "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer," will play the lead. He is to make this before returning to the Paramount lot for two more pictures. The directors will be Howard Higgin, who made "The Racketeer" and others for Pathe and First National.

Start Shooting by October

Higgin and Whitiker are working out the script now and will have everything in readiness to shoot by October 1. They are in daily conference with Zeidman.

A special exploitation campaign is now underway which will cover the entire country in selling "Juvenile Court" before it reaches the exhibitors market.

The second on the Zeidman program is as yet untitled. The story is an original by Al Boasberg and is being adapted and put in script form by Luther Reed. It is a comedy drama. Lines are out for signing one of the biggest names on the legitimate stage for the feminine lead.

RKO Planning Six New Houses During the 1931-32 Season

RKO theatre division plans, during the coming season, the opening of six new houses: RKO Hollywood, Fort Worth, Texas; RKO Plaza, Schenectady, N. Y.; Paramount, Cincinnati, O.; RKO Palace, Albany, N. Y.; RKO Orpheum, Davenport, Ia.; RKO Orpheum, Denver, Colo.

Hiram Brown, in announcing the circuit additions, termed them evidence of the company's confidence and optimism in the business outlook for the ensuing months.

J. E. Otterson Due Here Next Week After Stay in London

Ufa Making Four Multi-Linguals; Jannings In One

Four multi-lingual films are included in the present production schedule of Ufa in Berlin, the first to be shown in Berlin and a print sent to England, where an option is already held on it. Title will be "Monte Carlo Madness."

The second is an historical costume play, an Erich Pommer production, to be directed by Charell. The third will be "Slave of His Passion," featuring Emil Jannings; fourth is to be an operetta called "Ronny." The first two are already finished.

French capital is understood behind the renewal of production by Emelka. There is no intention of opening German language theatres in either France or England, it is reported, though more will be opened in the United States.

Ufa plans the production of 30 films for German consumption during the coming production year. The company reports profit of approximately $1,750,000 during the last 12 months from foreign sales alone.

ERPI Acoustic Head Is Named Fellow of American Society

S. K. Wolf, director of the acoustic consulting service of Electrical Research Products, has been elected a fellow of the Acoustic Society of America, and appointed a member of the Society's standardization committee.

Wolf has added G. V. T. Burgess to his Erpi staff. He will specialize in the application of acoustic principles to construction work.

John Goldstein: Attention!

B. Ehrenreich, Saldernstrasse 1, Berlin-Charlottenburg, Germany, is seeking the address of John Goldstein, theatre owner originally from Budapest, Hungary.

Baird Plans Set For Low Priced Television Sets

Sydney A. Moseley, director of Baird Television, of Great Britain, upon arriving this week in New York, announced that the company would begin television broadcasting within a few weeks, in cooperation with WMCA, contingent upon the granting of official sanction of the Federal Radio Commission, which is expected.

The company plans television sets for the American home at a moderate price, as stated in last week's issue of Motion Picture Herald. The sets will be priced in the neighborhood of $100, according to Moseley. Many existing radio sets can be easily equipped with a television device for receiving purposes, he said.

Moseley also announced the recent development in London of a portable television transmitting set, no larger than a picture projector, making it possible to "tele-broadcast" outdoor events, such as the landing of airships, fights and football games.

The possibility that this development may do away with or limit the radio broadcaster, is being very closely watched by those interested in the future of radio.

The Baird Corporation, according to Moseley, is prepared to share the developments with American interests, with whom Moseley is at present negotiating. Several offers have been made for the American licensing rights, and decision accepting one of these will be made very soon.

F. D. Craven Acquires Film Rights to Two Plays

Frederick deTrafford Craven has acquired the motion picture and dialogue rights to the original American version of "The Harlequin King," adapted by Duquesne from R. Lothar's play. He also has bought "The Yankee Amazon," an original by Duquesne which had a long run in Europe under the title "Mademoiselle Corcoran."

"The Harlequin King" never has been produced in the United States though it has had extensive runs in various non-Royalist European countries. It was prohibited by most of the crowned heads of Europe as an insult to their class and an attack on their prerogatives. The Craven version of the play was copyrighted in 1904. It was the first play produced in Madrid after the recent revolution.

3 Indiana Theatres Combine; Two Were Bought From Publix

The Indiana, Sipe and Isis, three theatres of Kokomo, Ind., have been consolidated under the management of the new Kokomo Amusement Corporation, with Sam Neall of Indiana in active charge. The Indiana and Sipe were acquired from Publix and a merger was affected with the Isis.

All three houses will show films, with additional vaudeville at the Sipe. The new corporation lists capital stock of 1,800 shares. Board of directors is composed of S. J. Gregory, Tom Chamales and Thomas K. Valos.

DISTRIBUTORS BALK ERPI'S 5 YEAR PLAN

Sponsors Say Large Sales Companies Refused Needed Concessions In Individual Situations

Inability of Erpi officials to effect a general agreement among distributors has definitely halted the equipment company's plans to formulate a management enterprise for 3,000 small theatres which were to be equipped with Western Electric apparatus and supplied with film on a five-year percentage basis. Unless an eventuality occurs which would force distributors to adopt the plan as a new business resource to offset the effects of a prolonged depression period, the now dormant proposal stands little chance of ever materializing.

First conceived by Erpi officials last January as a move which would benefit distributors, exhibitors and the equipment company, the participation of all of whom was necessary to the success of the plan, it encountered obstacles immediately. J. W. Roberts, an Erpi sales executive who was designated to develop the plan, found that most large distributors balked at the film distribution arrangements which it conveyed. Although substantial benefits to distributors would result from the plan as a whole, its sponsors declare, the distributors were found to be unwilling to make essential concessions in individual situations in order to obtain its general benefits.

Benefits Claimed

Benefits to exhibitors, it was claimed, would ensue from the expert central management which would be set up, from the reopening of dark theatres and from the changeover from silent to sound-equipped houses in some instances, and the replacement of old equipment with new in others. Distributors could expect to benefit from increased sales and from better theatre earnings due to sales of sound prints instead of silent or from improved sound reproduction with new equipment. Distributors, however, balked at gambling with a situation already under contract in order to obtain purportedly better deals elsewhere, which the plan demanded and promised. Other distributor objections also arose.

Meanwhile, Erpi's new low-priced equipment was placed on the market and the resultant sales are reported to have accomplished much for the company that it hoped to achieve by putting its management plan into work. The new low-priced equipment found its market in the small theatre, both silent and sound, that Erpi had hoped to reach with the realization of the management plan.

Doubt General Agreement

"We believe that there are still between three and four thousand theatres which might be benefited by the management plan," an Erpi official said. "In view of this, Erpi stands ready to inaugurate the plan at the moment that a general agreement with distributors is reached."

Little hope of such an agreement is held by this official, who declared that only an eventuality which made it imperative for distributors to open new markets might force them to attempt it.

Evidence that Erpi's low-priced equipment is reaching the field which originators of the plan had in mind was offered by a sales official who said that during the month of July Erpi sales reached an all-time high, and that a large proportion of the business done was with 400 and 500-seat theatres.

A further explanation of why Erpi has permitted the plan to lie dormant for the last several months is seen in the vast increase in importance of the company's non-theatrical business, requiring a new concentration of executive and sales effort to the exclusion of much else.

Planning Before Shooting Now an Established Fact

Extravagant atmospheric scenes which are cut to brief flashes are being ruled out on the West Coast, and dollar-for-dollar values, visible in the finished negative, are resulting in substantial gains to exhibitors.

This is but one of the rigid economies which John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, states are now being effected at the studios.

"Careful planning before shooting is a trick that Hollywood is just learning. With the elimination of hit-or-miss production, retakes are becoming unnecessary and are now properly considered more the watermark of inefficiency than artistry. If each production were made to show the actual effort and money invested, there is no doubt but that the result would be—better pictures.

"Elimination of waste is a more constructive program—and one that will prove of more lasting good—than ruthless and often harmful cutting. When the picture situation has definitely improved the practice of careful planning and watchful saving will be a lesson not easily forgotten."

Six Melodramas From Big Four

Big Four, headed by John Freuler, will no longer concentrate on Westerns and action films for neighborhoods exclusively, but will produce six melodramas yearly, beginning immediately, for possible first-run play. "Dance Hall Kisses" will launch the new group.

Preliminary work on the 1931-32 schedule, which included 12 Westerns, was scrapped this week and a new production schedule will be worked out.

Big Four has signed J. P. McGowan to direct the next Buzz Barton.

Industry Is Second Greatest User of Air Transportation

collect. Rates are $1 per pound between New York and Chicago, and $2.60 per pound between New York and the Coast. This compares with a charge of 47 cents per pound on ordinary express between New York and the Coast.

Obviously, this difference in cost prevents the air express service from becoming widely adopted within the industry, and is now used primarily only in emergency cases. Newsreel shots of more than average importance, prints for special screenings or previews and prints delayed in production late enough to impair release schedules comprise the bulk of the reasons for the industry's use of air express.

Air Saves Two Days

Ninety per cent of the west bound film shipments by air originating in New York are carried, except in uncommon instances, direct to Chicago. Shipments to the far west are rerouted there, largely over Western routes. Most of the film shipments arriving in New York by air express originate in Los Angeles. Two full days are saved as compared with coast to coast shipments by ordinary express. Two planes daily carrying express leave New York for Chicago and Chicago for New York. Schedules are well maintained, as is evidenced by the fact that there is no apparent falling off in volume of shipments during winter or bad flying weather months. When delays in transit occur a rate adjustment is made in proportion to the amount of time lost.

The Air Express Service is a separately operated division of the Railway Express Agency. So important has the film business become in the company's New York operations that a film trucking service for pick up and delivery of shipments is maintained. The same service is in operation in several other centers and is rapidly being extended.

Service to 100 Cities

Air express service has been extended to more than 100 cities in all parts of the country, including practically every key situation. Radiating and connecting lines extend the service to every center of population in the states.

Use of the air mail for film transportation is also on the increase, although the volume of air express is considerably in excess of that of the air mail. Postal authorities attribute the moderate use of the government airmail service by the film industry to the prevailing high rates of postage and prevailing regulations which prohibit film from being transported in mail pouches.

When carried by air mail, films of more than 300 feet in length are stacked apart in the mail compartment of the plane so that in case of fire the films can readily be dumped overboard. However, air mail authorities point out, fires in mail planes are rare and usually follow rather than precede a crash. Films of less than 300 feet may be transported in regulation mail sacks.

As in air express, the largest volume of air mail shipment of film is in newsreel material. Air transportation of feature positives is comparatively slight over the mail route, likely attributable to the cost. The regular rate of five cents for the first ounce and 10 cents for each additional ounce applies to film as well as the other mail matter. Nevertheless, the route from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City, the first leg of the Eastbound transcontinental air mail, reports that from 10 to 20 percent of its total poundage is film.

No attempt has been made by postal authorities as yet to segregate either the film poundage or the revenue from the industry, so that no estimate of the total amount of pictures carried by the air mail is possible.

In order to expedite film deliveries by air mail, the government now permits mailing of film on the plane without having to go through any post office. A similar procedure, eliminating passing through the destination post office, is also permitted at the place of arrival. Schedules and routes for air mail film shipment are the same as those for all other air mail matter, making the entire government air line and service available to film shipments.

Educational this week became an active factor in the sponsored reel field when a deal was made with Dodge Motor Car Company to produce the first ten reel ad picture. would not be common, it is pointed out that the 1.8-to-1 ratio would meet the balcony conditions in practically any theatre. The ratio of 1.6-1 was offered at the S M P E convention in May by those who thought the standard image should come as close as possible to the so called photographic ideal of 5-to-3. It is pointed out, however, that the interest in extension of the width, rather than making an image that merely is larger, is in favor of the ratio recommended.

Consolidated Net for August Is $124,000; 60% Over July

At the directors' meeting of Consolidated Film Industries, held in New York on Thursday, treasurer's report revealed net profit of $124,576 for August, against $77,624.20 for July. This is after allowance for Federal income taxes and shows an increase of 60 per cent.

During the first eight months of this year, Consolidated earned net profit after taxes, equivalent to 128 per cent of annual regular $2 dividend requirement of preferred stock.

Allied Is Girding For Fight Against Percentage Sales

saddled on the industry by percentage playing could be eliminated and a step towards true economy taken. I commend this thought," Myers declares, "to the Wall Street interests who are insisting on a false economy to be accomplished by a cheeseparing policy in the studios."

Not Fight on M-G-M

Expressing regret that Allied's opposition to percentage playing is construed to be a fight against M-G-M, and declaring that the organization's aims are to oppose any and all percentage contracts, Allied makes it clear that it "regrets that her fight against unfair percentage contracts is so often referred to as a fight against Metro. Allied is concerned about Metro's present policies, not about the company itself. That same opposition would be manifested against any company adopting a like policy, possibly with even greater zeal, since we are not unmindful of the fact that Metro has made a great contribution to the popularity of motion pictures by turning out an unusually high quality of product.

"However," the report concludes, "if Metro's product were twice as fine as it is, the theatre owners would not be justified in acquiescing in her present selling policies; hence their opposition, while impersonal, will continue to be deep-seated and unrelenting."

Allied's declaration against all percentage playing followed closely the report on the national exhibitors' protest meeting in New York against the M-G-M contract, made by Herman Blum, Allied director from Maryland, who officially represented the national Allied organization at the meeting. Blum charged Felix Feist, Metro sales manager, with attempting to "side-step every question that had any merit" put to him by the continuing committee representing the exhibitors, and said that the committee "didn't get anywhere" in its conference with Feist.

Issues Up to Members

Regardless of the outcome of the conference, the committee's report, which will be made public by Walter Vincent, chairman, within the next week, will recommend no action to be taken against Metro, it is understood. The committee's report will merely embody the results of the conference with Feist, and will make clear Metro's attitude on the application of the company's new contract. The committee's attitude is that it has no right to dictate a company's sales policy, nor any right to prescribe a definite method of retaliation for the enforcement of a policy to which there are objections. A course of action will be left to be determined individually or collectively by the exhibitors.

Although it was intimated at Metro that no formal action would be taken as a result of the protest meeting, reports were in circulation that a Metro concession might take the form of increasing the number of pictures available in the prescribed 25 percent playing group.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS ALL EXCITED WITH PLEA FOR EARLIER RELEASES

A Testimonial

Better than $6,000, the proceeds of a benefit performance in San Francisco, has gone to the needy and poor families of the West Coast city. Several hundred of the best known among the entertainers of downtown San Francisco took part in the benefit performance, and Carl Laemmle kindly donated the premiere of Universal's "Waterloo Bridge", for the film end of the bill. But the performance was not originally for the needy of the city. It was for San Francisco's "grand old entertainer," Ferris Hartman, ill and in need. Twenty-six hours before the curtain went up, however, the old stager's curtain rang down for the last time, but the performance, now a testimonial, carried on, and the net result went to many, rather than one.

Foreign Non-Theatre Mart as Great as Domestic, Says ERPI

The foreign market for non-theatrical sound installations is regarded by Erpi as being proportionately as valuable as the domestic market, according to P. L. Palmerton, Erpi foreign sales manager.

"A great deal has already been accomplished in England and on the continent in the way of developing the foreign non-theatrical market for sound equipment," Palmerton said. "Most of this work has been done in the educational and industrial fields, and has already attained results definite enough to reveal a potential market proportionately as important as the American non-theatrical market. Very little development of the foreign political and religious fields for talking equipment has been made yet," he said.

Always Way Around Law; There's the Rub

Gaumont-British Fills No Dates Over 3 Months Ahead—And There's Jack Warner's Statement

[London Bureau of THE HERALD]

Earlier general release is the question at present exorcising the trade in England. With the law compulsorily shortening the hold-up period step by step, only to run itself dry with next year's demand for a 90-day release, exhibitors are wondering whether there ought not to be a quicker way out, so that films can find their way into the date book to follow the trade show in a matter of days.

In fact, the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association has been getting itself all het up on the question, and while the General Council has been expressing the desire for a general release a month after first showing—either trade show or pre-release, that is—along comes one of the big branches with a resolution that pictures should be available the day after they have been out for their first airing.

Always Way Around Law

That proviso in parenthesis about trade show or pre-release has its significance. For there are always ways 'round the law, and the Cinematograph Act has proved no exception. What is there to prevent the renter putting his big picture into his own key theatre for a pre-release run and then returning it to the vaults until he thinks time is ripe for the trade to see it officially? Of course, the law can't stop 'em and so that's what we've been getting.

What has helped to throw the exhibitors on this subject now are pronouncements from two well known executives, one to express the Hollywood view and the other speaking as booking controller of England's major circuit. None other than Jack L. Warner is the one, Arthur W. Jarratt of Gaumont-British is the other.

Jack says there isn't any sense to things as they are; the renter can't do himself or any one else any good by hoarding up the stuff in his locker. Films are not like furniture and don't improve with age; the longer they lie, the more mouldy they get. And so, he concludes, Warner Brothers and First National are going to throw their product on the market earlier so that the exhibitor can book pictures while they are still pictures.

Holds Dates to Three Months

Now what is Jarratt's gesture? He says: "I have decided to risk a shortage of product and have not filled any dates more than three months ahead."

A pity the British public cannot be imported en bloc to America for a spell, so as to get a taste of the 30-day release system Jack Warner tells us about. Then on their return they might have something to say about it. Because, to return to his argument, the public is definitely being kept out of date in the films it sees, and if present-day omens count that is going to be a noticeable thing.

Why, if only fashions and clothes are to count—as they do with the big women audiences—the danger is acute. Over here we have just been through the throes of a violent lightning fashion for bowler hats for women; it started on a Monday and was Victorian on the following Saturday. If Hollywood were to take on a sudden rage like that the pictures we would see as the result would look like scannings from the ashcan of 1898 by the time they passed through the projectors.

The whole situation has been incomprehensible to many for many years; if it's going to be straightened out they want it straightened out. For while the four months' release may be okay where British films are concerned, it's not so good in respect of what they get from the American side. If Britain sees American films four months after they reach it, England is still another three or four months away from the day the director stopped directing and the camera ceased to grind.

Supervisor Now Writers' Target

The supervisory system in Hollywood production has developed into the real stumbling block in the way of an accord between Coast producers and writers. At a five hour session at which were present representatives of both sides, the chief topic of discussion was the supervisor.

It is understood producers are firm in refusing to curtail the authority of the supervisor; while the writers contend that most humiliation and distortion of stories emanates from them, and that they favor triteness in story treatment.

Another meeting in two or three weeks, is not expected in production circles to settle the question this year. There will be no more four figure weekly salaries, it is understood, except to recognized persons, and no more unlimited time allowances on stories.

Film Industry Takes Part In Los Angeles La Fiesta

Friday, September 11, is Motion Picture Night at Los Angeles' La Fiesta, celebrating the 150th anniversary of the city's founding. The celebration runs from September 4, continuing to September 13.

The industry's night will be featured by the presentation of the 13 Wampas "baby stars," and an electrical pageant in Olympic Stadium, with studios supplying elaborate floats designed by their technicians.

Twenty Grand

(Universal)

Comedy Drama

An audience at the Santa Monica-Wilshire, on the Coast, seemed to extract a great deal of enjoyment from this Universal screen adaptation of the stage play, "The Up and Up."

Here is a comedy drama of betting, barber shop and a romance, with a good deal of comedy. The dialogue sparkles and the humorous lines are really humorous. Ricardo Cortez, Norman Foster and Mae Clarke take the leads and, according to audience comment, acquitted themselves most ably, particularly Cortez.

He is the operator of an illicit poolroom, and has more than half an eye on Mae Clarke, one time manicurist and now wife of Foster. His advances are repulsed, Miss Clarke, in love with her husband, being extremely cold, though poverty as the result of Foster's gambling, being at the front door of the couple. When Cortez's poolroom is raided, he installs the couple in a luxurious apartment and takes one room as a betting headquarters. Cortez aids Foster in getting a taxicab, and then frames him into betting all their money on a losing horse. Miss Clarke goes back to the barber shop and manicuring, and they leave the apartment, before the police enter and capture Cortez and his gang.

Foster is seen next running a gasoline station in the country. A visit by Cortez gives him a clue to Miss Clarke's whereabouts and he finds her for the expected reunion and conclusion.

Comment praised Cyril Gardner for his direction, and Courtenay Terrett did well with several clever devices in the continuity. Tom Reed adapted the play smoothly for the screen, it was conceded. Beside the three principals in the cast, Marie Prevost was accorded praise for her work and Slim Summerville was considered satisfactory, though he had little to do.

Produced and distributed by Universal. From the stage play by Eva K. Flint and Martha Madison. Adaptation by Tom Reed. Continuity by Courtenay Terrett. Directed by Cyril Gardner. Photographed by Jack Rose.

Bad Company

(RKO Pathe)

Drama

Another gangster picture, this time from RKO Pathe and with Helen Twelvetrees, Ricardo Cortez and John Garrick in the featured parts, but one which was apparently enjoyed by an audience at a Santa Monica, Cal., theatre.

The film apparently held the interest of the audience all the way, with specific comment attributing the attention gripping flavor of the film to the capable direction of Tay Garnett in eliminating all unnecessary dialogue, and to more than a little clever photography.

John Garrick, a lawyer turned crooked, falls in love with Miss Twelvetrees, sister of William V. Mong, gang leader. The marriage brings together the Mong and Cortez factions in gangdom. Cortez plans to kill both Mong and Garrick in order to assume leadership of both gangs, and incidentally, to take Miss Twelvetrees at the same time. Cortez almost succeeds in getting Garrick, and Mong in retaliation, goes after Cortez, but is himself killed by his rival. Miss Twelvetrees takes up the trail herself, and Garrick, in an attempt to save her, leaves the hospital and follows her to Cortez's apartment. In an attempt to kill Cortez, the two, Miss Twelvetrees and the gang leader struggle, and Cortez is killed.

No one is held responsible, however, since a detective, long after Cortez, takes the credit for the death of the gangster. General comment was that the cast as a whole is very satisfactory, with major honors going to Cortez.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed by Tay Garnett. From a story by Jack Lait. Adaptation and dialogue by Thomas Buckingham and Tay Garnett. Film editor, Claude Berkeley. Photography by Arthur Miller. Release date, October 2, 1931.

We Three

(First National)

Drama

When this First National film was shown at the Forum on the Coast recently, the audience expressed itself in a manner indicative of satisfaction with story, cast and treatment. Ben Lyon, Rose Hobart and little Delmar Watson received the major share of the appreciative applause, as the principals in the dramatic piece.

Claude Gillingwater, playing the father of Ben Lyon, is desirous of bringing his son into his business. Lyon prefers to play about and is infatuated with Juliette Compton, who, however, turns him down. Despondent, he visits Rose Hobart, as the servant daughter of the town's notorious woman. Lyon is found with her, and is compelled to marry her. He does, and with her aid, succeeds so well on his own that his father brings him back into the business, and Lyon, his wife and the child, Delmar Watson, return to the father's home.

There, however, Gillingwater treats the girl so badly that she leaves, thinking Lyon no longer cares for her. He follows, proving her wrong, and they plan a fresh start together.

The story is simple, and comment indicated appreciation of the manner in which it is related. Miss Hobart won praise for her handling of the mother role, which dominates the film, and the work of Lyon, Gillingwater, Miss Compton and Florence Britton received favorable comment. Little Delmar Watson won the audience completely.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by John Adolfi. Adapted by Florence Ryerson. From the original novel by Edith Fitzgerald.

Personal Maid

(Paramount)

Drama

Nancy Carroll plays the lead in this Cinderella story of the poor girl who becomes a lady's maid to get away from the squalid East Side home in which she lives, and after a series of adventures in the wealthy home of a copper magnate, marries the college boy son, in an entirely expected manner.

Pat O'Brien and Gene Raymond are featured opposite, the former as the wealthy self-made manager of the magnate's affairs, who is rebuffed by Miss Carroll, the latter as the young son who falls in love with his mother's maid, successfully. Comment praised the performances of the leading players as well as the deft handling of their roles by George Fawcett as the crochety old millionaire and Mary Boland as the wealthy dowager, mistress of Miss Carroll.

The audience reaction was one of only moderate enthusiasm at the New York Paramount. The story, it was indicated, was rather improbable in its developments, and on the whole, hardly did full justice to Miss Carroll's ability as an actress.

As personal maid, she finds out more than a few things about how society lives and does, and naturally, becomes more or less a key in a family situation of some complexity, involving the son ejected from college, the girl's efforts to steer him from the wrath of the old millionaire, and the final straightening of a rather obvious situation.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Monta Bell. Based on the novel by Grace Perkins. Adaptation by Adelaide Heilbron. Photography by Carl Freund. Release date, September 12, 1931. Running time, 77 minutes.

The Last Flight

(First National)

Drama

Richard Barthelmess has the lead in this characterization of four war fliers, who, nerves shattered when the Armistice is signed, run from one Paris bar to another and then to Portugal, in search of forgetfulness.

The four, Barthelmess, John Mack Brown, David Manners and Elliot Nugent, meet Nikki, played by Helen Chandler, as a naive young girl who seems to have no more purpose in life than the four ex-fliers. Walter Byron steps into the picture as the meddling American reporter, after Nikki has been in a sense adopted by the four, who move to her hotel and go the rounds with her.

The story, written by John Monk Saunders under the title of "Nikki and Her War Birds," was originally titled for the screen, "Spent Bullets."

When the group, accompanied by Byron, go to Portugal, the more or less expected tragedy that must inevitably be the end of their lives, comes upon them in a rush of dramatic events. Brown, at a bull fight, jumps into the arena on a sudden impulse to handle the bull. He is gored to death. Later, at a shooting gallery, Byron, in a scuffle, shoots Manners, and as he is about to kill Barthelmess, Nugent pours lead into him from the rifle he is holding. Nugent steps off into the night after the killing, Manners dies in a cab on the way back to the hotel and Barthelmess and Nikki are left alone at the concluding sequence.

The film, apparently appreciated by the audience at the Broadway Strand is an unusual character study, meant to be a portrayal of the effect of the war on young and healthy minds and bodies. The direction of William Dieterle was accorded praise for the manner in which the unusual theme was handled.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by William Dieterle. Story by John Monk Saunders, from the original novel "Single Lady." Release date, August 29, 1931. Running time, 77 minutes.

24 Hours

(Paramount)

Drama

This adaptation of the Louis Bromfield novel when seen at the Ritz Theatre on the Coast, did not seem to hold audience interest throughout. The work of the players, however, was well received, with particular praise being accorded the work of Miriam Hopkins, generous applause following her rendition of two song numbers as the night club entertainer. The picture, comment indicated, was most entertaining when Miss Hopkins appeared on the screen.

Clive Brook, in the lead, becomes separated from his wife, Kay Francis, when each has an affair; she with Minor Watson and Brook with Miss Hopkins. Regis Toomey playing a half-insane Italian gangster and husband of Miss Hopkins, murders another gangster and later strangles Miss Hopkins. Brook, drunk in the apartment at the time, knows nothing of the murder.

He finally discovers the crime, informs the police and Toomey is captured, confessing both crimes. At the conclusion, Brook and Miss Francis are reunited.

The audience, comment indicated, failed to be convinced by Toomey's portrayal of the Italian gangster, the role seeming unsuited to him. Well received were Brook, Watson, Lucille La Verne, Wade Boteler and Adrienne Ames in particular, but the direction of Marion Gering and Dudley Murphy was not greeted very enthusiastically.

Black Coffee

(Twickenham Films, Ltd.)

Mystery Thriller

Here is another mystery thriller from the same studio, and directed by the same director as the successful "Fatal Hour" shown recently at the Warner theatre in New York. But it is not based on a Conan Doyle story of Sherlock Holmes. It is instead contrived on the distinctly shoddy base provided by an Agatha Christie novel. Starting thus, it is packed with incredible happenings, into which a superman could not infuse a sense of conviction.

For all that Leslie Hiscott has made a worthwhile picture for popular theatre audiences. Story depends on the unravelling by Poirot, a clever French detective, of a dual mystery. Old Sir Claud Amory, who has invented a high explosive, is robbed of the formula, and knowing that the thief is among his guests at a house party, he plans that the lights shall be lowered for a moment so that the formula may be restored without exposure of the culprit. When the lights go up old man Amory is found in his study, dead, poisoned by hyoscine.

Poirot hovering near to elucidate the formula mystery now becomes more interested in the cause of the tragedy, and he eventually tracks the murderer, whom he tricks into confession. Events leading up to this point are somewhat overweighted with the kind of bluff which is invariably employed in the creation of false trails, but the secret is very cleverly kept, and there is a splendid kick in the last three hundred feet, when it appears that the murderer has succeeded in escaping detection by poisoning Poirot. The detective has simulated death by poisoning merely to trick the culprit, and the fade-out proves strong meat.

Picture is notable more for the brilliance of Austin Trevor's performance than anything else. Trevor is surely one of the finest artists left to the British screen and stage. He never played better than in this; his broken English being faultless enough for a native Frenchman. Director Hiscott has not made the best of the rest of his artists, one of whom, Philip Strange, recently back from Hollywood where he made one or two plain successes, behaves with incredible "amateurishness." Adrienne Allen as the leading woman, who finds herself a victim of blackmail as well as a self-accused murderess, is neglected just as so many British stars are; she could have been given more to do, and more photographic consideration. Good comedy work comes from Richard Cooper, but no other players are worthy of special comment.

A little more snap into the whole thing and this film might have touched very big money. As it is it will get a mixed reception, and will certainly not teach Hollywood anything either in originality of story or of treatment.

Produced by Twickenham Films, Ltd. Directed by Leslie Hiscott. Art direction by Jim Carter. Photography by Sydney Blythe and Wm. Luff. Recorded on RCA. Running time, 79 minutes.

My Wife's Jewelry

(Paramount)

Funny

Tom Howard featured in a very amusing number, as the evening dressed burglar who appraises the jewelry taken from the safe, and then tells the master of the house how much or little he thinks it is worth. The master of the house and his butler lead Howard through a series of amusing imaginary scenes until the cop enters and he and Howard decide to take a walk.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Where Canaries Sing Bass

(RKO Pathe)

Amusing

Jimmy Gleason takes the lead in this adaptation of Arthur (Bugs) Baer's "Saga of Rufftown," as the fight manager who finds a fighter, whom he dubbs Ham Hand McShelly, played by Harry Gribbon, and matches for the "champeenship." The fight is held on a barge and the champion and the spectators all get seasick. Several good laughs with Gleason taking the first honors, and Gribbon contributing a few.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Bimbo's Express

(Paramount)

Amusing

One of the Talkertoon numbers and a good animated from Dave Fleisher. Comedy, fast song numbers and excellent synchronization add to the effectiveness. A New York audience managed a number of laughs during the short.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Beneath Southern Skies

(RKO Pathe)

Interesting

A Van Beuren Vagabond Adventure number, in which intimate and wholly interesting glimpses of Samoan life are pictured in the port of Pago Pago. The accompanying musical score and dialogue lend much to the effectiveness of the short.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Calling on Cairo

(Central Film)

Diverting

Here is a number, in the nature of a travelogue, which pictures, in interesting fashion, and with some splendid camera work, the temples, minarets and several pyramids. The sphinx comes in for its share of attention with beautiful angled shots. An accompanying voice describes the city as the camera travels through it.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Olympic Talent

(RKO Pathe)

Good

One of the Grantland Rice Sportlight numbers, in which are shown some of Americas men and women aspirants to titles of Olympic champions. Sprinters, hurdlers, high jumpers, distance runners, field event contestants, men and women, all exhibit their skill in an interesting and diverting short which has plenty of action throughout.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Harem Scarem

(B. M. Powell)

Only Fair

Here is a travelogue with a combination of cartoons and pictures of the visit of a group of gobs to Arabia. The whole idea, not particularly strong, becomes weaker when an attempt is made to weave the idea into a story. A few of the Arabian scenes are good, however.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Roaming In Gloaming

(MGM)

Fair

Harry Lauder singing one of the most famous of his well known songs. He is seen on a stage, with an audience laughing and applauding him, which novel note, however, is somewhat overdone. The words of the number are flashed on the screen for audience singing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Elmer Takes the Air

(Paramount)

Good

Stubby Krueger, aquatic star, plays the rube, who reads of Lindbergh's success and attempts to win laurels in the air himself. The manner in which he handled the part was sufficient to draw more than a few laughs from a New York Paramount audience.—Running time, 17 minutes.

WITH OLD MAN SHOWMANSHIP AT THE THROTTLE!

SELECTIONS

by MRS. RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Family Suitability

BEAUTIES OF ITALY GOOD
Ruby Film Co.
Travelogue—A delightful trip through Italy with an unusual view of Vesuvius in action. Instructive and entertaining.

BIG GAMBLE, THE GOOD
RKO Pathe
Drama—Dissatisfied with life and its vicissitudes, a young man decides to commit suicide. In order to pay his debts he takes out a large life insurance policy, and finds that he must live a year to have it valid. The year brings about his rehabilitation and there is a happy ending. (Stars: Billy Boyd, Dorothy Sebastian and Warner Oland.)

HUCKLEBERRY FINN EXCELLENT
Paramount
Although this adaptation of Mark Twain's story of the adventures of Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn on their famous trip down the Mississippi on a raft does not capture the spirit of that classic as in the case of "Tom Sawyer," it is a delightfully refreshing story of boy life, admirably and convincingly acted by the juvenile characters and having entertaining dialogue. (Stars: Jackie Coogan, Mitzi Green, Junior Durkin and Jackie Searl.)

MERELY MARY ANN VERY GOOD
Fox
Delightful in its humor, with a Cinderella romance of a little household drudge and a young composer, this picture presents Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell in roles similar to those that won them popularity.

MONKEY BUSINESS GOOD
Paramount
A very amusing comedy in which the four Marx Brothers play the roles of stowaways on an ocean liner. There is quick, catchy dialogue and impossibly ridiculous situations, which, combined with the flair for clowning that these clever comedians possess, go to make an entertaining picture. (Stars: Groucho Marx, Harpo Marx, Chico Marx and Zeppo.)

MYSTERY TRAIN GOOD
Monogram
Comedy—A light, rather inconsequential "society play" that has some of the ingredients of entertaining motion picture fare. The thrills are provided by a train wreck and a holdup. (Stars: Hedda Hopper, Bryant Washburn.)

PARDON US GOOD
MGM
Laurel and Hardy are hilariously funny in their first full length picture, which has amusing situations and capable direction. The action is a travesty on "The Big House" and takes place in a jail where the two have been placed for selling beer to a policeman.

PENROD AND SAM VERY GOOD
First National
Comedy—The adventures of Booth Tarkington's popular juvenile characters have again come to the screen, this time with the added attraction of sound. Leon Janney and Junior Coghlan are delightfully real as Penrod and Sam.

AUTUMN and the new amusement season are upon us and with this issue MOTION PICTURE HERALD resumes the monthly presentation of Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick's "Selections," which, as remarked at the initial appearance of this service in the issue of August 1, constitutes a "selection of selections," made from the same level of critical viewpoint as the many excellent lists issued by various social organizations, but without the biases of their special interests.

The frost that will take the last of the asters in her Sayville garden is only a few days away now and Mrs. McGoldrick is back and busy again in New York projection rooms and Broadway theatres surveying the new product.

In next week's issue MOTION PICTURE HERALD will present a "School and Screen" section by Mrs. McGoldrick, renewing and continuing this highly successful department, relating the motion picture and juvenile education, which was so enthusiastically received at its initiation near the end of the last school year.

Adult Suitability

[The following pictures have received high rating by the various reviewing groups, but because of theme or incidental treatment are inappropriate for juvenile entertainment.]

BAD GIRL EXCELLENT
Fox
Drama—Simply told, appealingly directed and acted, this story of a poor young couple and the birth of their first child has been made into a picture of almost unforgettable beauty. Their misunderstandings through the utter inarticulateness of their love and the dreadful difficulties of their sordid environment cannot help but call forth a sympathy and pity for all such people. The photography is excellent. (Stars: James Dunn and Sally Eilers.)

BRAT, THE GOOD
Fox
A comedy evolved around the complications arising when a tomboy is taken into the home of an author to be used as copy in his new book. Not particularly original in plot or presentation but amusing entertainment. (Stars: Sally O'Neil, Frank Albertson, Allen Dinehart.)

DAUGHTER OF THE DRAGON, THE GOOD
Paramount
Not to be compared in suspense and quality of production and direction with "The New

Short Subjects

BENEATH THE SOUTHERN CROSS GOOD
RKO Pathe
Travelogue—One of the Vagabond Adventure Series, with scenes in southern waters. (Synchronized with dialogue by Tom Terriss.)

BIG GAME GOOD
RKO Pathe
Cartoon—An Aesop Fable in which all the animals take part in a hunting expedition. (Synchronized.)

FALSE ROOMERS GOOD
RKO Pathe
An amusing comedy in which Clark and McCullough have many difficulties in renting a room. (Sound.)

GREAT DECISION EXCELLENT
RKO Pathe
The first of a series of pictures by Floyd Gibbons called "Supreme Thrills." This deals with America's decision to enter the World War. It would make an excellent Wilson Memorial. (Synchronized with lecture.)

HEART OF A NATION VERY GOOD
Talking Picture Epics
An instructive picture showing the historic buildings and monuments of Washington. (Synchronized with lecture.)

ISLAND PARADISE OF BALI VERY GOOD
M-G-M
Travelogue—Bali, with its primitive life and customs, not yet discovered by tourists, has been fascinatingly pictured for adults. (Accompanying lecture.)

KENTUCKY BELLES GOOD
Universal
An Oswald cartoon in which the animals of the farm hold a derby of their own. The horse, on the last lap, stretches his neck and wins. (1 reel.)

LAND NOBODY KNOWS, THE EXCELLENT
Columbia
The Rambling Reporter in a visit to Mexico. (Synchronized.)

MANHATTAN MARINERS GOOD
RKO Pathe
A Grantland Rice Sportlight showing scenes on a water tour around Manhattan Island. (Accompanying lecture.)

MEAD TRIAL, THE GOOD
Educational
One of the William J. Burns mystery stories in which the question "Who killed Burton?" is answered by the detective in an interesting demonstration of the case. (1 reel)

PHANTOM, THE GOOD
Art Class

Mystery—There is nothing new in this story of two young reporters who endeavor to find out the identity of "The Phantom" but the thrills of the search may prove amusing to the boys of the family.

PUBLIC DEFENDER, THE VERY GOOD
RKO Radio

Drama—Melodramatic, but with swiftly moving sequences, this picture is raised above the average by the capable acting of Richard Dix in the role of a playboy who avenges the ruin of his sweetheart's father by a band of swindlers. (Stars: Richard Dix, Shirley Grey, Edmund Breese.)

SPORTING BLOOD VERY GOOD
MGM

A racetrack story with all the elements of an oldtime melodrama, so skillfully written and depicted that one forgets that the same story has been told many times before. There is the sympathetic trainer, a crooked jockey, a lovely girl and a valiant horse—all of which will call forth cheers from the boys. (Stars: Clark Gable, Ernest Torrence, Madge Evans, Lew Cody.)

SUNDOWN TRAIL GOOD
RKO Pathe

One more western with the usual mediocre story. Good riding and the sweeping prairie background at B-Ranch give the picture a quality of interest. (Stars: Tom Keene and Marion Shelling.)

Theatre Sues Labor Paper For $50,000, Charging Libel

Because of articles interpreted as charging a booth fire due to inefficient machinery and presence of insects within a theatre, Wolfson-Meyer Theatre Enterprises has instituted a civil suit against the Miami News, reputed to be a representative of Labor opinion, asking $50,000 in damages.

According to the complaint, the paper printed an article stating that a fire occurred in the projection room of the Capitol theatre in Miami as a result of inefficient machinery and the presence of only one projectionist, which is permitted by an arbitration award. It is similarly alleged that another article stated that the Capitol theatre was infested with insects.

Publix Forms Two New Subsidiary Corporations

Two new Publix corporations have been formed under the name of Publix National Theatres in Virginia and Delaware, the one in the former state succeeding Southern Enterprises.

The Virginia company is headed by Spyros Skouras, with Austin C. Keough as secretary. Thomas B. Gay is to be active head in the state.

The Delaware company, capitalized at $5,000,000, was represented in the incorporating procedure by C. S. Peables, L. E. Gray and William M. Cooper of Wilmington.

Adult Suitability

Adventures of Dr. Fu Manchu," this picture is notable only because of the excellent interpretation of character on the part of the cast. It continues with the story of the sinister Dr. Fu Manchu and his efforts to wipe out an English family. (Stars: Warner Oland, Anna May Wong and Sessue Hayakawa.)

GUARDSMAN, THE VERY GOOD
MGM

Drama—A picturization of Molnar's play with Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt playing their original stage roles. It has been brought to the screen with all the charm of the Theatre Guild production in acting and setting.

LAST COMPANY, THE EXCELLENT
Talking Picture Epics

Drama—(Produced by Ufa in Germany.) A band of thirteen men trapped in an old mill valiantly try to oppose two hundred French. They are offered a chance to surrender but they decide to make a last brave stand for the honor of Germany. The attack takes place and all in the once victorious regiment are killed. (Stars: Conrad Veidt and Carena Evens.)

MOTHER AND SON VERY GOOD
Monogram

A drama featuring the oldtime player of silent pictures, Clara Kimball Young. The story concerns itself with the attempts of the operator of a gambling establishment to rear her son in ignorance of her past life and her sacrifices in order that he may have the advantages that had been denied her. (Stars Clara Kimball Young, Bruce Warren.)

STAR WITNESS, THE EXCELLENT
Warners

A gangster picture of unusual merit. It has an appealing human interest story and a strong moral lesson. It deals with the tragic situation of an ordinary, decent American family whose members become involved as witnesses in a gang killing. (Stars: Walter Huston, Chic Sale, Frances Starr, Grant Mitchell and Ralph Ince.)

AMERICAN TRAGEDY, THE EXCELLENT
Paramount
and
STREET SCENE
MGM

We wish to draw the attention of those readers of this list who are particularly interested in the artistry and the technical development of the motion picture to the two strong and outstanding pictures of the current season, "The American Tragedy," and "Street Scene." These bring to the screen the stark realism that is characteristic of our current literature and drama.

In both instances great pictures have been made; both are examples of brilliant directing and distinguished acting, but because of the bitterness of the theme these cannot be recommended for family audiences.

Bryson Resigns Universal Post; Succeeded by Ditcham

James V. Bryson, for eight years managing director of Universal's British organization, has resigned, with S. Frank Ditcham succeeding him.

The unexpected resignation is attributed to the rather unsatisfactory state of Bryson's health and his own dissatisfaction over present market conditions in England.

Short Subjects

MICKEY'S THRILL HUNTERS VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

Mickey McGuire and his gang give a thrilling exhibition of window cleaning on a tall building. (Sound.)

MICKEY'S WILDCATS GOOD
RKO Pathe

Comedy—Mickey and his gang adopt a baby. (Sound.)

OLYMPIC TALENT
RKO Pathe

A Grantland Rice Sportlight showing this year's athletic stars who will compete in the Olympic games. (Synchronized with accompanying lecture.)

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL VERY GOOD
Paramount

A short picture that is both educational and pictorially beautiful. The colored scenes lend themselves to the subject matter very well: a trip to Finland, a goldfish farm in Japan, and a musical novelty. (Sound.)

POLAR PALS GOOD
RKO Pathe

Cartoon "Tom and Jerry" in the Arctic. (Synchronized.)

TUNA FISHING IN ITALY VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

Catching fish for canning is shown to require skill and strength. (Synchronized.)

Manager Shifts Follow Publix Transfer to Sparks

Management changes will be made in a number of situations of the Publix theatres in Florida taken over by the E. J. Sparks interests. They are as follows:

Jesse L. Clarke goes from Jacksonville to become manager of the Tampa houses; J. L. Cartwright will go from the Tampa to the Daytona Beach houses and be succeeded by Jack Fitzwater of Jacksonville; Jackson Hodges of Jacksonville will succeed O. G. Finley, who continues with Publix at Knoxville, Tenn., at the Tampa Victory; and Charles Kirkconnell will go to the Royal at West Tampa from the Tampa Seminole, which will be managed by Charles Riley of St. Petersburg. James Newman will continue to manage the Tampa Franklin.

Other changes affect the theatres and policy. Some will be reseated and given new ventilating apparatus. In Tampa the matinee admission price will be straight 40 cents, instead of 35 cents weekdays and 50 cents Sundays.

Philadelphia Battery Firm Asks for Television Permit

The Philadelphia Storage Battery Company has filed an application with the Federal Radio Commission for a license to operate an experimental television broadcasting station in Philadelphia.

The company announced that one of their engineers had brought a new television system to a point where a broadcasting system is necessary to test it.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

A further rise in box office grosses from 29 cities for the current week continued the steady increase which has featured theatre receipts for the past several weeks from all parts of the country. Total grosses for the seven-day period computed below reached the figure of $2,309,077, $48,348 better than the previous week's $2,260,729. However, this week's figures indicated one new high and one new low, while last week there were two new highs and one new low, though it is significant of the trend that there was no increase in new low figures during the current week.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

EVEN the "big shots" will admit that under circuit control, the home office and the house manager in the field have grown so far apart that it seems almost impossible that the two will ever get together again. Friendly conversation with most any house manager will reveal that he not only has no love for his big bosses . . . but actually has no use for them, . . . if such a term may be applied and understood within reason. . . .

This condition is not necessarily any one person's fault. As we said before . . . it is an outgrowth of circuit theatre operation during the process of which the home office becomes a sort of bugaboo to the manager and the manager becomes a piece of machinery to the home office. . . .

If you discuss a matter of this sort with the home office executives they will try to laugh it off and tell you how "happy" and "contented" their managers are . . . but under the laugh they are frowning . . . because they know they are kidding you . . . and themselves too. . . .

They would like to bridge the gap and create a warmer and friendlier feeling . . . but all attempts to do so have come to naught. . . . In some cases they have given up hope and are letting things go as they are . . . yet it represents the greatest handicap in circuit operation today and is probably responsible for many bad situations and losing houses . . . houses which might come through without a loss and possibly with a profit if the men who run them had a lot more faith in the outfit they work for . . . and were getting a decent break. . . .

But there must be a solution to this problem . . . a solution which will eventually show the circuit chiefs the unintentional error of their ways. . . . We offer this as our suggestion:

Each circuit should employ a contact man . . . not a cold blooded employment or personnel manager, . . . but a man who can win the confidence and friendship of the boys in the field . . . a man they would be willing to confide their troubles and kicks to . . . with a feeling that something would be done about it. . . . Not as at present . . . when they must tell it to their district supervisor who kids them along and then forgets about it. . . .

The right contact man working between the home office officials and the house managers could do more to build up the morale and confidence of the men in the field than any medium employed up to this time . . . and unless such a contact man is put on the job with each and every circuit the morale of those organizations will continue to go to the dogs. . . .

The boys in the field are human beings . . . they have their likes and dislikes . . . they want to be humored once in a while and encouraged occasionally . . . but they get nothing now . . . and the most they ever hear from their home office or it's executives is a form letter pat-on-the-back or a kick about something or other. . . .

We don't envy anybody the job of contact-man . . . it's gonna be one tough job and calling for every ounce of tact and diplomacy in order that he win the confidence and friendship of the manager and convince him that if anything is not going O.K. to call on him (the contact man) for help or advice. . . . He must likewise be able to exert a large measure of influence in the home office on behalf of worthy kicks from the managers . . . and above all his correspondence with these men must be held in the strictest of confidence and not open to the inspection of any individual.

This may sound far-fetched at first glance, but if the skeptics to such a plan would think it over carefully they would at least grant that the idea possesses possibilities and may really prove the solution to a problem that has had them worried for a long time. . . . At any rate they must admit that it is worth a trial over a period long enough to demonstrate whether it is practical or not . . . and they must also realize that the present salve handed out to the managers via letters and house organs is at best just cold type and carrying the odor of "official" orders. . . . Such stuff does not lend to the friendliness of two points so far apart as a home office and a manager . . . and decentralization is NOT the answer to this phase of circuit operation. . . .

The present feeling of unrest . . . lack of confidence . . . worry about jobs . . . and hundreds of other things . . . must be done away with before any organization will be able to function efficiently or profitably. . . .

In conclusion, we make no claim that this suggestion will eliminate all the evils existing between home office officials and house managers . . . but it may help create a bond of better understanding and a far friendlier feeling between the two than there is now . . .

Of course the industry's usual quota of calamity howlers . . . bellyachers and pessimists will immediately see how much they can pick this idea apart . . . Let 'em pick . . . we'll stick to our claim . . . This may . . . or may not . . . be the solution . . .

Forrester Engaged Horde Of Kids To Circulate Message

Extension circulation of a message was obtained through the medium of a flock of children by Eddie Forrester, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Grand Island, Neb., during the campaign he waged on "Daddy Long Legs."

He ran a two-column three-inch ad in the local daily, advertising for boys and girls who wished to earn tickets to see the picture. One hundred twenty-five children applied and each was provided with a binder of fools-cap and told to go out and get signatures. On the first page attractive illustrations from the press sheet were pasted and beneath was typed an explanation that the bearer was trying to obtain enough signatures to earn a free ticket to the picture. Some of the kids returned with as many as 300 names, although some were duplicates.

In conjunction with the above the cashier staged a direct telephone campaign and as additional publicity a flat-bottom truck with an entertainer was used for a street bally, covering every town within a radius of 40 miles. Thirty inches of free space was obtained through a classified ad tie-up with his paper and a full window was secured from a book store. A local minister, who is a movie fan, was also solicited for an endorsement, which he gave from the pulpit.

The signature gag was also used in connection with "Donovan's Kid," but in a different manner. A giant post card was prepared, addressed to Richard Dix and Jackie Cooper and bore the following copy: "Dear Richard Dix and 'Skippy' Cooper—We, the undersigned, are special fans of yours. We have heard that your new picture, Donovan's Kid, is a knockout and we're going to see it."

The card was displayed in the lobby five days before opening and was then carried through the business section of the city by one of the house staff for signatures. By night time the card was completely covered with names of local residents.

Well, Eddie, that was one way to tell them that these pictures were going to play your theatre and there's no question that kids will do a lot of circulating to win a free ticket. It's a good gag and one which will bring excellent results if, as he states, one doesn't pull it too many times so as to become a public annoyance. Anyway, it secured splendid publicity for him and he's passing it along for the benefit of other showmen.

Hutchinson Used Telephone Number Stunt On Picture

A. A. Hutchinson of the Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., derived lots of publicity for "Girl Habit" when he used a telephone-number stunt.

The telephone numbers of 25 of the most popular local girls were posted on a one-sheet mat board and put on display in the lobby for a week in advance.

Copy on the mat board read:—

LUCKY BOYS WITH THE "GIRL HABIT" RATE GUEST TICKETS!

Boys! Is your girl's telephone number listed below?
(Telephone numbers)

If it is, call her up and ask her to see THE GIRL HABIT with you. If she accepts, bring her to the Strand Theatre Monday or Tuesday and she will be admitted free. Of course, we stick you for your ticket. (Who said, "It's the woman who pays?")

CHARLIE RUGGLES

The stunt proved to be very popular, causing plenty of favorable talk. All but one or two of the girls took advantage of seeing the picture in this manner.

Bigness Of Picture Was The Main Point Sold By A. Hamilton

Bigness of picture was the main point stressed in a campaign made on "Daddy Long Legs" by Al Hamilton, manager of the Empress Theatre, South Norwalk, Conn., for it happened that the Norwalks had never witnessed the playing of one picture in two theatres at the same time.

He distributed 2,500 special throwaways in the Sunday papers and another 2,500 in a house to house distribution on Sunday morning.

The special throwaways were captioned, "Norwalk's Largest Theatre is Not Large Enough." For the first time in the history of the Norwalks, a picture has merited, by its tremendous reception at the Empress, a showing in two theatres."

He also advertised the picture on the special throwaways as the finest, sweetest and cleanest picture ever made as well as giving names of cast, theatres and playdates.

100 show cards were placed in store windows on day before the 4th of July. In fact, these window cards were put on view just prior to the stores being locked up for the night. Copy on these cards read, "Closed Today, gone to see Daddy Long Legs at the Empress." This stunt afforded much excellent advertising for the picture over the holiday week-end.

Naturally, this same situation regarding the two houses playing day and date is not going to generally exist but there are other excellent angles to Hamilton's campaign which can be capitalized upon and if you like them we're sure he will be glad to have you help yourself.

CHARLEY McLEARY STANDS BY!

A few weeks ago when City Manager Bill Saxton was on his vacation, Charley McLeary, manager of Loew's Century Theatre in Baltimore, was stricken with an attack of acute appendicitis. His doctor instructed him to go to the hospital at once, ordering an immediate operation. But he couldn't go with Bill Saxton away, and he didn't want to interfere with Bill's much-needed vacation. And so he stayed on the job until Bill returned. After the operation was successfully performed the doctor told Charley that it would have been fatal to have prolonged it a few more hours.

Charles McLeary

That's what we call standing by like a good soldier. Extreme, some may say, but certainly an expression of loyalty. And a strong sense of loyalty to any worthy person or cause is something any one of us might be proud to possess or hope to acquire. Here's hoping that Charley will soon be back on his job.

McDonald Sees Need Of Boosting Shorts; Cites An Experience

Medicine for heartaches and glum faces, which are sometimes common ailment with some managers during the summer months, is prescribed in a recent letter from Teddy McDonald, Coast exploiteer with Universal Pictures. According to Teddy, there still remains a manager who is under the impression that the feature picture is all he has to sell. "Be a salesman," he says, "sell your shorts; for in many cases, you have one booked which will carry more appeal than some weak feature."

McDonald calls attention to the racing through of the newsreel in some houses in order to save some time. He deplores this practice as one which cannot fail to produce bad feeling among patrons, in that there are many who get as much kick out of newsreels as they do from the rest of the show. Strong features of the reel should be played up, he firmly believes, as the individual display of news features will actually sell seats.

Not long ago McDonald ran an Oswald matinee at the Fox-Wilshire which netted a capacity crowd of 2,000 kiddies at the opening. During the performance a cartoonist (whom we presume to be Walter Lantz) attended the theatre and gave a short talk to the kids about Oswald's career. After the address Mack himself sang the theme song of the cartoon. Did he sing? Says Mack: "Chevalier would have blushed had he heard the applause." That's oke, Teddy, but it's just too bad all the boys haven't got a voice like yours! We are reproducing one of the photos taken at the time the rabbit cartoon drive was made and it shows part of the group of youngsters and a sample of the cartoon.

Well, fellows, the proof of the pudding is in the eating and from all accounts the Fox-Wilshire had a full stomach as the result of this kiddie drive. As Teddy states, it can be done! Play up your shorts to the fullest possible extent. We believe that the B. O. will return evidence of your work in the shape of increased receipts.

Tommy Phelan Put Film Over Top With Newspaper Contest

Tommy Phelan of the Paramount Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., put over a newspaper contest which undoubtedly helped his receipts with "THE SECRET CALL."

Daily, for six days prior to the opening of THE SECRET CALL, the Long Branch Daily Record ran a one-column illustration of Peggy Shannon, who is featured in the picture. In the illustration Miss Shannon was holding a telephone operator's mouthpiece, and a box was carried underneath the illustration of Miss Shannon. The box carried the following copy:

"Long Branch Record readers are urged to watch this space all this week as their telephone number is likely to appear in this panel, inviting them to be a guest to "The Secret Call" at the Paramount Theatre.

"Miss Peggy Shannon, the star of the picture, is calling Long Branch 692M today. If you are the winner, call at the business office of the Record, 192 Broadway, for your guest ticket."

This newspaper contest quite obviously had box office value. The above described stunt was a direct plug for THE SECRET CALL.

This active club member is a mighty familiar figure on our pages by reason of his many business-building stunts and so we start off the Fall season with this contribution from him. Keep many more rolling into headquarters, Tom.

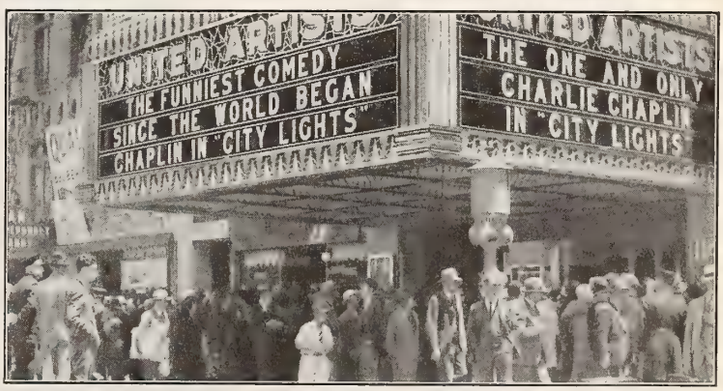
POLITICIANS AND STARS GALORE!



Attended a ceremonial dedication the day following the premiere of the new United Artists Theatre, San Francisco, Calif. Among the notables were, Governor Rolph of California and Mayor Rossi of San Francisco. Floral baskets were sent by many others prominent in Los Angeles theatre circles. Charles Leonard, publicity director of the theatre, had charge of the campaign. We're sorry not to be able to present the manager's name.

ASSISTANTS ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THIS CLUB!

With the approval of the house manager, assistant managers are eligible for membership.

We started taking assistants into the Club about a year ago and subsequent surveys have proven that it provides the necessary "push" to make them real showmen. It increases their interest in the business and makes them try all the harder to gain promotion. For the six months period, ending June 30th of this year, Club records show that over three hundred assistant managers were promoted to handle their own houses.

Only accredited assistants are accepted. Those not entitled to this title should not apply as their managers will be asked to certify as to the position they now hold.

The Round Table Club will welcome members in this class and we urge every bonafide assistant manager to send in the application now.

Janecky's Kid Club Going Over In Big Way At The Warner

It didn't take Harold Janecky, manger of the new Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, long to organize a Saturday morning kiddie show when he took over the reins of this house and we'll say the public has responded in a big way. On one occasion the theatre accommodated 3,200 kids and records show that on another as many as 1,600 adults either sat in or accompanied the children during a morning show. Perhaps this may be due to the claim that the Warner is the only downtown first run to offer entertainment especially constructed for the youngsters.

The shows start at 9.30 A. M. and the admission is 10c for children and 25c for the grown-ups. 5,000 penny post cards have been sent out to advertise the showings and space has also been taken in the newspapers to get a message to the kids through their parents. The post cards carry the complete program for the special show, together with admission prices.

Janecky needs no introduction on these pages nor does his able advertising manager, Ben R. Katz, as we have had occasion prior to this to present samples of their brand of showmanship. The Club wishes both of them all kinds of success with the new house.

Election Herald Aided Hause When Selling 'Politics'

Lloyd Hause got out an election ticket herald to exploit Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in "Politics" playing at the Capitol Theatre, Bloomsburg, Pa.

The ticket showed a cut of Dressler, Moran and Roscoe Ates with the caption, "Elect This Laff Ticket." And then followed the line-up of candidates which in reality was the cast as: For Mayor, Marie Dressler, etc. And then more sales copy about the picture, theatre and play dates.

Each sample ballot had a number on it. If the holder of a ticket number had the same one that appeared in the lobby, then that person was entitled to see the picture as the guest of the theatre. Inasmuch as the sample ballots were distributed well in advance of picture, it meant that they probably keep the sample ballots on hand to compare their numbers with those posted in the theatre lobby.

Hause also consummated a tie-up with the Servel Refrigerator Co., this netting the theatre 40 inches of free space in two days besides the advantage of the space occupied by the entire ad.

There must be something inspiring about the town of Bloomsburg. Every showman we meet from that "burg" seems to be a go-getter, and Lloyd is no exception. "Knock 'em dead" Hause and you'll be needing more seats soon.

Two Recent Stunts Of Herman's Secure Valuable Publicity

Advertising a picture by having the letters spelling the title frozen in a cake of ice, was one of two stunts recently pulled by Harry Herman, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa.

The short title of "Seed" made it possible to freeze four cut-out letters and the display was placed in the window of a local drug store. The gag was to estimate the number of hours it would take the ice to melt and 15 passes, distributed to those making the 15 nearest estimates, was the only cost to the theatre.

Fans are always an acceptable souvenir-gift during the hot weather months and when playing "Laughing Sinners" he arranged with a department store to place 1,500 fan photos of Joan Crawford in outgoing parcels, 500 additional ones being distributed at the theatre. Back space on the fan was split evenly between store and theatre and the cost of fan and imprinting was borne by the store. The store's ad was devoted to Catalina Swim Suits, which Joan Crawford has endorsed.

The cake of ice stunt is generally an interesting attraction during the summer months and placing it away from the theatre secures valuable advertising at a remote point. As stated before, your local ice dealer will always be glad to cooperate with the freezing process and the entire cost is negligible when the amount of advertising received is taken into consideration. Regarding the distribution of the fans, this was another example of costless advertising which gave corking circulation to his message. Harry is a regular contributor to these pages and we'll be looking forward to further accounts of what he's doing out in Waterloo.

N. Y. RIVOLI'S ART FRONT ATTRACTS!

Here we present the latest in the series of artistic atmospheric fronts built for the popular long-run house on Times Square. Each succeeding attraction brings with it something decidedly interesting and worth stopping to look at for the native visitors on New York's gay white way.

Particularly novel on this display, is the skyline treatment above the main entrance doors. This appears in silhouette with the cutout buildings standing some ten inches away from the background, which is illuminated from the rear of the buildings.

The letters of the title are about a foot deep and make a most impressive appearance when viewed from the opposite side of the street. Other worthwhile slants can be found by studying this picture carefully and we believe it will act as a guide for other managers to follow when designing fronts for this picture.

Today's Most Important Question Answered

Kenimer's De Luxe Give-Away Campaign Is Hitting Bullseye

It's certainly necessary to step on it these days to keep business near the normal mark, and in some sections of the country, such as Florida, where business has been off for some time, it becomes expedient to bring about extra pressure in order to stimulate attendance. Necessity being the mother of invention, Guy Kenimer, in casting about for an idea along these lines, came upon one that is hitting patrons right where they want to be hit and is doing a world of good for the box office at the Florida Theatre. It's a very simple stunt and can easily be adapted to most any local conditions.

A copy of one of the 40,000 heralds used in connection with the idea explains the whole scheme in detailing rules governing the give-away of articles ranging from a popular priced auto down to a remote control radio. In between is an electric refrigerator and a trip to New York with all expenses paid. All articles, with the exception of the auto which was promoted from two dealers at a very substantial discount, were donated through merchant tie-ups. In order to own one of the articles it was necessary to make a purchase at one of the several stores tied in, receive a receipt which, in turn, had to be deposited in a sealed box placed in the theatre lobby. It was agreed to display the articles over a period of five weeks, crediting each one with the merchant's name.

By this time the reader is undoubtedly speculating as to how these de luxe articles were promoted and the answer is that each merchant kicked in one hundred dollars for the privilege of being a party to the idea. In addition, he was charged $1.25 for each thousand tickets distributed—the actual cost of printing. Or, this item of expense may be taken care of by selling the back portion for advertising to some other concern. Now you can see that the amount of money received for privileges nicely took care of all expenses the scheme involved. As a matter of fact, if more merchants are brought in, an actual profit can be made through the letting of these privileges.

Friday nights have been chosen for the give-aways and from experience gained from pulling the event on two previous nights, it has been arranged with the city to have the entire block in front of the theatre roped off when the auto is given away. It is estimated that this particular night will draw as many outside the theatre as inside. Capacity business has resulted from the first two try-outs, or about double normal trade.

The lobby of the theatre plays an important part in the above outlined scheme. A large barrel has been mounted on a stand and above it hangs a framed letter from the Mayor, stating that it was padlocked by him and that he holds the key. Because each entrant must come in the lobby in order to place the ticket in the box, it will be readily seen that this act furnishes the theatre with opportunities to sell many other admissions, together with the patron's additional opportunity to participate in the gifts. On the chosen night, the barrel is moved out from foyer to stage, each ticket that has been deposited permitting the holder to receive any one of the four articles. It will also be seen that it is necessary for one to be inside the theatre at this time.

As we write of this the Florida's de luxe give-away month is drawing to a close, only to be followed by a similar movement the next month. The merchants already in the deal are so well pleased that they are willing to go in again and others who were a trifle cold at first approach are now anxious to take part in it. You will undoubtedly recall Kenimer's big "Blue Ribbon" campaign that brought home the bacon when he was located in Tampa. He believes that this one has the latter stopped by a mile. If there is anything about his present campaign which you do not understand we feel sure that a line to him will bring the desired information. In the meantime, we will await returns concerning the second month's drive and predict it will go over the top.

Stearn Suspended Large Muslin Cut-Out Across Street

Harry D. Stearn of the American Theatre, Pittston, Pa., pulled a unique stunt in exploiting "Daddy Long Legs."

Stearn used a 12-foot cut-out of a man with 30 feet of muslin for the legs and had this suspended across the street in front of the theatre with one leg tied to the marquee and the other directly across the street.

The stunt was a very effective one; causing passers-by to comment about it and reminding themselves and others about "Daddy Long Legs."

A Novel Ballyhoo Helped Lowry When Selling 'Politics'

Victor B. Lowery put on a novel ballyhoo that helped immeasurably in publicizing Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in "Politics" playing at the Majestic Theatre, Wichita Falls, Tex.

Lowery arranged with the Boys Club and the local American Legion band to parade two streets—carrying banners regarding the picture. The boys stopped on the principal intersections and one large boy would climb upon a parked car and start to make a political speech. The other boys would then start yelling, "We want Marie Dressler,"—"We want to laugh," and other catchlines in reference to the picture.

After the short parade and several "speech" interruptions, the parade ended in front of the theatre where the band played for 15 minutes. The stunt drew a large crowd and proved one of the best stunts used in some time in publicizing a picture.

Why can't we get more stuff like this? The tie-ups are so easily effected by wide-awake showmen that it seems a shame that so many of them sit around moping when they can be stimulating business right along. Nice work Victor, but don't make us wait so long for your material.

BURNETT USED STREET CARS!

One of the stunts pulled on "Politics" by Martin Burnett, manager of Loew's Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, is shown in the above photo. Permission to banner the cars was most difficult to obtain but he got away with it. He also staged a red-hot night parade that came in for a lot of attention and received a nice break from a daily newspaper when they published a story and photo describing and showing the Mayor being presented with a "Hattie Burns campaign" poster. In spite of terrific heat we understand that Burnett put on a most excellent campaign and we are sorry that we are unable to present further details regarding his work. It's all we have. And by the way, he's another entrant in the M-G-M prize contest.

If Your Customers Like Cows Try This One Of J. C. King's

Something new in the nature of give-aways was recently pulled off by J. C. King, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Harlingen, Texas. It was a cow, boys, a cow! Now, what do you think of that! Four merchants kicked in enough dough to buy the animal and the stunt was used in connection with "Confessions of a Co-Ed." Heralds were distributed, copy on one side relating to the picture and the other disclosing how a theatre patron might become the proud possessor of the pet. Among other points, weight of the animal was discussed—so we think we've let you in on how the gag was gagged. To further exploit the stunt, the cow was bannered and led through the town's streets several days in advance, the banner also telling how the creature might be taken home.

'Course Texas is a big cow state and they go over in a great way down there. We're not quite sure just how much one of them would be appreciated in metropolitan centres. Apartments are small, and with a limited number of back yards, it might prove embarrassing for a man or woman to take one home Furthermore, the cow was kept up half the night in order to have her on hand at a midnite matinee and these animals have been known to emote dangerously on a stage when deprived of their usual amount of sleep. As to originality of an idea for a give-away we'll have to hand it to King. The only suggestion we could possibly make is to also ring in a milking contest before the cow is taken home. So there you are Club members; if you think your patrons would like to compete for a nice cow, try this one. It was a big success in Harlingen and got this Round Tabler just what he wanted in the way of publicity.

Leahy Distributed 300 Pill Boxes As Ad On Rogers Film

M. H. Leahy of the Paramount Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., effectively distributed 300 pill boxes to exploit Will Rogers in "Young As You Feel."

On both top and bottom of pill boxes were pasted labels on which was printed "For That Tired Feeling see Will Rogers in YOUNG AS YOU FEEL—Directions inside."

Inside was a numbered coupon on which was printed, "Compare this number with those posted in the Paramount Theatre lobby. You might win a pass to see WILL ROGERS in YOUNG AS YOU FEEL, starting Saturday for one week only."

The pill box stunt caused a lot of favorable comment and helped immeasurably in popularizing the picture and contributed to the general activity of this showman in his consistent campaign to "Fill Those Empty Seats." Apparently he's succeeding and we're here to tell you that his future exploitation will always find a welcome spot on these pages. Keep it up Leahy.

Evans Davis Tied With Telegraph Co. To Boost A Picture

A variety of gags were recently used in connection with the exploitation of several pictures by Evans Davis, formerly manager of the Rialto Theatre, East Rochester, N. Y., which bear evidence that this Club member is still stepping along with the business of selling shows.

As a boost for "Ten Cents a Dance" and a Laurel & Hardy short he tied up with the Postal Telegraph Co. for distribution of a message addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. Movie Patron, Everywhere in East Rochester," stating that this particular program was to be shown at his theatre. His name was signed to the message.

Evans doesn't tell just how this distribution was effected but there are several methods which have been brought to our attention. It is obvious that the telegraph company will supply the blanks free of charge, and it can often be prevailed upon to also do the typing in return for advertising received. The messages may be delivered along with regular paid or collect messages of a different nature, or it may be possible to arrange for a hand delivery house to house at the cost of one cent per message. The latter method is cheaper than two cents postage plus the value of having a uniformed messenger do your work. There are also other ways of getting circulation of this form of message, such as hand-outs at busy intersections and at the theatre.

Other accessories used by Evans include the distribution of a miniature tab herald on "Finger Points," containing stills and captions of characters in the picture and an imprint on the back to effect that every kid attending the theatre on Saturday would be presented with a free chocolate bar; a "Don't Let the Season Pass" card on "Secret Six," and a printed paper napkin wrapped around an orange to advertise "Lemon of Orange."

Your brother Club members are glad to hear from you again, Evans, and now that the new season is about due will expect you to keep them posted on what else is happening up your way. Shoot along your ideas and we'll see that they make an appearance on these pages.

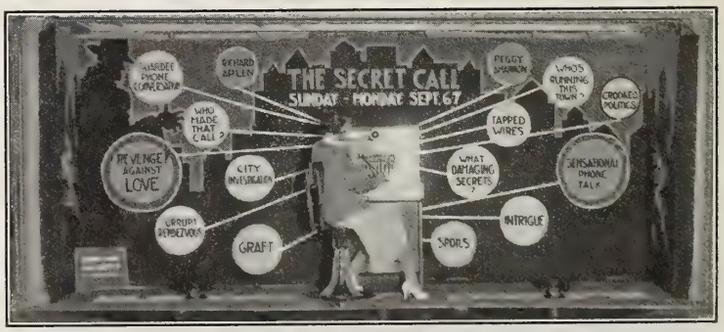
Brown Constructed Fine Foyer Display For "Secret Call"

Before he left his post at the Fox-Lefferts Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., to take charge of the Ambassador Theatre, same city, William Brown constructed a strikingly novel foyer display which was used two and one-half weeks in advance of "Secret Call." The arrangement will be of interest to all Round Tablers.

He had the house artist paint the entire background with a New York sky line and all around this were etched 20 discs representing different 'phone calls, each disc with snappy catch lines. From the local phone company he promoted a switchboard, operator's chair, head receiving set and two French telephones to fill out the picture. To add to the 'phone call effect, white ribbons were strung as per photo, to each disc. An elaborate colored lighting effect, with baby spot, and a young lady sitting at the board making imaginary calls, completed the set. Additional effort on this picture included the use of program-heralds, 24-sheets, newspaper advertising and screen trailers.



The entire cost to Brown for the display described above was only $15 and we know for a fact that it came in for a lot of comment from patrons during the time it was shown. The Phone Company loaned the equipment free of charge and even delivered it to the theatre. In return a card was made up to give the proper credit. Well, Bill, that was a clever stunt to pull for your last one at the Lefferts and the Club wishes you all kinds of luck at your new house. Just as soon as you find your way around, which should not take long, don't forget your fellow members.

Bartholet Secures Full Pages Of Ads To Sell His House

Several full-page advertisements were secured through merchant tie-ups when Hughes-Franklin Theatres were introduced in Toppensih, Wash., by Arch Bartholet, manager of the Liberty Theatre in that city.

The pages were run as a co-op, a dozen or so merchants contributing ads to each page. On the left and right upper portions appeared photos of Howard Hughes and H. B. Franklin and the theatre ad occupied a large part of the center of the page. Captions under the two photos set forth the company's policy.

This is another instance of where merchants show their interest in theatre enterprise by coming through with co-operative pages of advertising and it also indicates that Bartholet had not forgotten that the value of having an up-to-date theatre organization in their midst is realized. The several pages of co-ops he secured are proof of his excellent salesmanship and the Club wishes him all kinds of luck with this new organization.

Smith Capitalized On "Post" Story by Maurice Chevalier

John C. Smith of the Georgia Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., made excellent use of a story appearing in the Saturday Evening Post on Maurice Chevalier to plug the picture, "The Smiling Lieutenant."

Smith got out a poster (16 in. x 21 in.) printed in red and blue inks on a white background—copy reading, "Out Tuesday—Saturday Evening Post—'How I Got That Way' by Maurice Chevalier, idol of two continents. Read this delightful story in the Post and see him in THE SMILING LIEUTENANT now playing at Keith's Georgia."

In a box on the right hand side of the poster, appeared, "His Personality Is Just As Vivid In Print As It Is On The Screen."

The 350 posters cost nothing except for the printing and were hung up in news stands, drug store windows, etc. They were printed up to take advantage of the story that appeared in the Saturday Evening Post out Tuesday of the week the picture was playing. City wide coverage was secured with excellent locations, getting the showing from Saturday to Friday inclusive.

'Nuff said, John. With stuff of this kind you will surely not have to worry about business depressions or gloom. Keep chasing the clouds away with live-wire showmanship and the box office will sing a cheerful accompaniment all the time.

DON'T PUT YOURSELF UNDER OBLIGATIONS

(From Fox's "The Last Word")

It is well to keep on the best of terms with your school people, but avoid contacts that will obligate you to such organizations as Parent Teachers or women's clubs which have to do with children's welfare. These may become too involved. There are certain exceptions, however, which you will be aware of. It is well to have all the good will that can be built with these organizations, but do not do it at the expense of having them dictate to you later.

We would suggest that the teachers, of course, be notified as to the character of the picture which you intend to show the children on Saturday matinees, and, if possible, they should recommend it to the children, but unless you have such a picture—silence would be the better course.

WON FIRST PRIZE IN HOLIDAY PARADE!

That's what the above bally did for Lloyd Perkins, manager of the Burns Theatre, Newport, Vt., and so he thinks it's good enough to show to other Round Tablers. Perkins is an experienced theatre man, in both managerial end and on the road. No more road work, he says, for he's married now and trying to settle down. Newport is just about at the end of one part of the U. S. A. but he states that if you don't believe it's a good town, take a look at the map.

PROGRAMS—A GOOD SELLING MEDIUM

FOR this week's selection we offer the house organs of three different circuits. We have already reproduced independent programs so thought you might be interested in taking a look at how the "big" boys turn them out.

The layouts, however, are widely different and present several slants not shown before. For example, the Capitol program carried a three colored cover which lent much dignity and attractiveness to it. Not that it is so very essential to use color, but where possible, it certainly won't do you any harm.

Loew's as most of you probably know, is a home office product and the same throughout the metropolitan area, possibly throughout the circuit. This is very much of the newsy type. The Cameo, a Warner house, like the Capitol, features an artistic front page carrying no plugs or propaganda of any sort.

With the coming of the new season, we expect to see a decided improvement in the appearance of more house organs. That more interest than ever before has been manifested we can vouch for by reason of the number of requests for sample programs received at Club headquarters since we inaugurated this feature in our section.

Those who have discontinued regular weekly mailing lists during the summer, are asked to put us down for their weekly program when they resume next month. Plenty of assorted programs are available for those who want them.

The new season should witness a decided trend towards better and more worthwhile programs. This angle has been sadly neglected by many theatres for a long time, yet it represents a valuable aid in seat selling. There are so many forms of house organs, there should be one in every theatre in the country, made up to fill a vital post in the theatre scheme of things.

EDGAR LYNCH has been at the Cameo in Bridgeport, Conn., so long that he will soon qualify for long-distance honors. But, as the ads would say, "Such popularity must be deserved."

His program is another of the "dignified" group. Stressing the current week's attractions, it conveys the cast and theme of the picture with just enough "dope" to make them want to know more about it.

It should be kept in mind, when looking over this program, that the Cameo is the "class" house of the town. Years ago when most exhibitors were grinning at sound equipment, this house went one hundred percent talkie and it played some attractions two a day for three to five weeks.

Ever since that time the Cameo has held a unique position in the town's theatrical makeup and therefore this type of program fits right in with the general impression about the house.

YOU may, or may not, have seen a copy of the Loew circuit program. If you've seen one you've seen them all. But don't let that detract from the many valuable points embodied in the make-up.

In addition to carrying the current week's program, it is crammed full of live and interesting news about current and coming attractions. Despite the reduction of the program to this size you can readily pick out the many little "bits" of news and you can see at a glance just how they make up this little sheet.
